At the Milwaukee Grand Army meeting the letter carriers, who are members of that order, organized a raid on the U. S. treasury on their own account. They formed a society with a Detroit man as president, and will use the power of organization to secure pensions for their fraternity. The business is already a coveted one; and, without any pension, there are many more applicants than the business demands. The proposal of these men is very lodge like and bland. As members of the G. A. R. they are asking a pension for every old soldier, whole or maimed; now as carriers they want another. If one class of government employees can have their bread twice buttered, why not all?

Before the eyes of Mayor Cregier the Chicago press is continually obtruding his oath of office. They want gambling suppressed, and the Sunday saloons closed, and all the time keep nagging the Past Grand Master with what he swore to do about enforcing the laws bearing upon these public evils. A man named Hankins runs a big gambling house. The police tried to raid it the other evening, but were locked out amid the jeers of a crowd of thousands. Therefore, say the papers, Mr. Mayor, Hankins is your master. Remember your oath of office. But you dear innocents of the press, has not Mr. Cregier plenty of oaths to attend to besides that you are making so obnoxious to him. Why did you not remember this when you urged his election. The frogs once asked Jupiter for a king, and got their wish.

The other day the Chinese were celebrating their great moon festival. The Chicago press gave long and graphic accounts of the performance. A feast is spread to be eaten by portions during the day. The devout Chinaman then goes to his joss-room and burns incense and offers prayer which is said to be somewhat in this form: "Good Joss, and fair moon of the white head, give us plenty good luck and money. Shine brightly for us, O moon; protect us from bad luck, bad weather, disease, trouble, and the Irish." After the feasting and prayers the Chinaman waits for the rising of the moon which he greets with prostrations, incense-burning and the explosion of fire-crackers. This is funny reading; but let the reporters write up the performances of the sun-worshippers of the Masonic lodge with their strippings, oaths, prayers, lectures, personations of Jehovah, mock resurrections, invokings of damnation, etc., etc.—ah! these performances are not by 'heathen Chinese.'

The Cerneau Masonic fight is not cooling off with the passing of time. The proclamation to all the world lately by William H. Peckham of New York is a very exasperating message to Dr. Gorgas and the Cerneutes. He is a "Past Most Puissant Grand Commander of the 33d degree," in lodge parlance, and carefully wipes his sacred and puissant hands of the covert infidelity of the Scotch rite of Cerneau and its French affiliations, in favor of the Scotch rite of the scalper Pike. Over in Iowa the courts are deciding the same question at Tipton, the Cerneau Masons having cried for a permanent injunction against the Grand Lodge of Iowa to prevent the latter from ejecting them from the rights and privileges purchased by money and personal abasement and abuse during their initiation.

"Pat Grant," a witty Irishman of Kansas City, who is just dropping his pick for the pen, has written several scathing letters on the Irish and the Cronin case. He says, with some appearance of knowledge of the inside working of this singular tragedy, that "the attorneys for the defense in the Cronin case have mapped out the following line of action: Their first object will be to drag out the trial as long as possible. I do not think that it will be finished before next May. They will endeavor to introduce all sorts of irrelevant testimony, and to make the whole affair a huge farce, so that the public will sicken of it and the daily papers will not give it an inch of space. Then, in the lull of popular sentiment, they will get in their fine work and secure the verdict they desire." At present this judgment has much to give it credibility.

Several of our large cities are aspiring to the honor of the world's fair of '92, but some practical questions obtrude upon us, as to who can most handsomely and courteously entertain such a vast crowd from all the kindreds and nations of the earth. Chicago, with all her monster hotels, is published as unwilling to accommodate colored people. No room at her first-class tables for the Asiatic and African representatives—the yellow, red or black men from the East, to say nothing of the millions, as free as we, in our own South land, and the other swarthy natives of our own continent. These people travel in England, France, or Germany, and have no trouble in securing the best hotel accommodations. The city which is willing to take Christian—or we might say civilized—ground in this particular, will do well to raise her standard soon, for "to this complexion it must come at last." We have by our foolish caste prejudice been long the laughing-stock of other nations, to say nothing of the appearance we make in the eye of God, who declares he has "made of one blood all nations of men that dwell upon the face of the earth."

Prof. F. W. Fisk made a very interesting address at the laying of the corner-stone of a large dormitory building for the Chicago Theological Seminary in this city last Thursday. His allusions to the aid of Mr. Carpenter in the early days of the institution, and his prophetic judgment respecting the growth of Chicago and the Congregational churches here were very happy. The professor, having been connected with the Seminary from the first when it was struggling with the difficulties that beset new enterprises, spoke with enthusiasm of the adaptability of the new building to the work of the institution, mentioned a bowling alley to be placed in the basement. The statement might have passed unnoticed had it not been feebly applauded by the students. That raised a question or two. What was the occasion of the applause? Was it to give character to a method of amusement long employed as an adjunct of the saloon? Was it to frown upon the idea that many pious people hold, that this is a questionable amusement? Was it to counteract the impression that would prevent many pious people from contributing to the funds of the Seminary if its agents should put the bowling alley into their appeals? Was it to give emphasis to the idea that the physical exercise that was enough for Paul or Stephen or Moody or Finney, is not enough for those who propose to be their successors in carrying the Gospel to mankind?

NO SECRETS.

Have no secrets, brother, nothing thou need'st hide.
Let thy surcharged bosom pour its flooded tide;
Only let its fullness at the fountain flow,
Mingled with the river of thy Saviour's woe.

Secrets sever friendship—cankers on the tree,
Blighting all the roses we had hoped to see.
Love can never linger where a secret lies;
Fellowship is broken, and affection dies.

Jesus, Friend of sinners; Jesus, knowing all,
Is there any secret, any little fall;
Any little action, any little bliss,
Any little secret, anything amiss?

Jesus, if my friendship with a fellow-heart
Suffers when a secret bids my trust depart,
What must be thy sorrow when I think or do
Aught I wish were secret, hidden from thy view?

Jesus, Friend of sinners, may I tell thee all,
Hiding nothing from thee, nothing great or small;
Living in the sunlight, knowing Jesus knows
All my faults and failings, all my joys and woes.

DR. WALDENSTROM AND FREEMASONRY.

AN OPEN LETTER BY THE EDITOR OF THE CYNOSURE TO REV. DR. P. WALDENSTROM AND THE REPLY.

Rev. P. Waldenstrom, D. D., DEAR BROTHER:—Rev. M. W. Montgomery, a former student in Wheaton College, Ill., has, by his book, "A Wind from the Holy Spirit," made us well acquainted with yourself, President Ekman, and Editor Fernholm; so that you are now in a multitude of American hearts. These all hail your coming to our shores, to visit and confirm the Scandinavian churches in the United States, as Paul went through Syria and Cilicia "confirming" the infant churches there (Acts 15: 41) which had shaken off pagan idolatry on one hand, and Jewish ecclesiastical authority on the other. Our American Scandinavia, which may soon outnumber "Mother Sweden," greatly needs your presence and counsel at this time. And as God has given you a leadership in the Free Mission movement, which has spread over Sweden, Norway, Denmark and Finland, tinged with blood of Christ, like the red "Northern lights" of those hyperborean regions; and a seat in the Swedish Parliament along with a king, court and state, church bishops, whose priesthood you have left for the love of Christ; there is no man on earth so fitted to meet the soul-wants of our Scandinavian population, and no man whom they will listen to as they will listen to yourself.

The Lutheran Reformation "gave the death-blow to the Masonic corporations in every portion of the European continent." So says Emanuel Rebold's "General History of Freemasonry in Europe," page 54. But the Jesuits, under Loyola, stopped and turned back the German Reformation, especially in Austria, Italy and Southern Europe, by the aid of English Freemasons. They pensioned the exiled Stuarts, Charles II. and his brother James, whose headquarters was the Jesuits' College of Clermont in Paris. They accomplished this by inventing and adding upper degrees to simple English Masonry, and swearing Masons to obey their lodge superiors. They thus restored Charles II. who was a secret Mason and papist. But his stupid brother James, an open papist, was driven out by the Protestant Prince of Orange in 1688, and took up his residence in the Jesuits' College in Paris, and was pensioned by both the French king and the Pope.

The English government, which was the bulwark of Protestantism in Europe, saw it must destroy Jesuit Freemasonry, or be destroyed by it, or else join the lodge to protect itself from Masonic machinations. It chose the latter; and the Prince of Wales is now the Grand Master of English Freemasons.

My dear and honored brother, I do not write this as giving you information, for you are wiser and more learned than I. But I recall these facts to your mind that I may set before you the state of our American Scandinavia.

In Denmark, now, every government officer is a Freemason, and your Swedish king, his court, and state church bishops have joined the Masonic lodge. They have followed Bernadotte, who became king of Sweden in 1818, the year Illinois became a State. Bernadotte quarreled with Napoleon, and sided with England. And when the British government adopted the policy of joining the Masons, Sweden followed suit; and for the last seventy years the Masonic lodge has ruled the rulers of that country. But it could not and cannot rule Christ. The Scandinavian peasantry, moved by the Holy Ghost, broke loose from everything but Christ and the Bible in their religion; and though despised as "Readers," hunted, fined, imprisoned and scourged, they have revolutionized Sweden without blood, save only the blood of Christ. Their votes have put you in the Swedish Parliament, and have now sent you to speak to the thousands, tens and hundreds of thousands of their sons and daughters in America.

But the dragon-flood of lodgery which could not reach them in Sweden has followed them here. In the Christian Cynosure of July 4th, on page 7, you will see that seven Swedish lodges in Chicago met in Schuetzen Park, and spent the holy Sabbath, from noon till midnight, dancing, drinking, gambling and carousing like the worshipers of the calf at Sinai. The industry and piety of our Scandinavian immigrants, among the noblest men and women who have come to America, give them success. Success brings money, and money attracts the harpies and blood-suckers of the lodge. Secret lodges swarm under life-insurance, labor unions, temperance, patriotism, politics, and every conceivable form and name, "that none may buy or sell" unless they have received the mark of the apocalyptic beasts (Rev. 13: 17), which are all children of the mother lodge which promises to save men without Christ or the Holy Ghost, and sends its members to their heaven or "lodge above," whether they live and die drunk or sober!

In the same Cynosure, July 4th, the leading editorial shows that the oaths of the leading Masonic rite of thirty-three degrees, in Europe and America, are, every one of them, more bloody and blasphemous than that of the Clan-na-Gael, which includes in its terms both murder and treason. But the honest Swedes and Norwegians, unmindful of the fact that the lodge-god is the "father of lies," are persuaded by Masons that the secrets of Masonry are not truly revealed in this country. Even the editor of the Swedish Tribune, A. Chaiser, Esq., though not himself a Mason, insists that the oaths published and proved by the testimony of the holiest and best men in this or any other land, are not taken by Masons, though the fact is testified to by such men as President Finney, Dr. Colvin, Bernard and a host of others who were lured into the lodge, but cast off its accursed sorcery, and exposed its bloody and blasphemous abominations.

And now, dear and honored sir and brother, we beseech you not to leave our shores without leaving us the great help of your testimony against this idolatry practiced in Christian lands. What keeps Jesus Christ from coming to reign on earth is not imperfect theology, but false worships—the worship which Satan asked of Christ; the worships invented by men, administered by priests, and inhabited by devils. When these are removed by "the blood of the Lamb and the word of their testimony," then

"Jesus shall reign where'er the sun
Doth his successive journeys run."

Hoping to hear from you, even though in but few words, I remain yours in and for Christ,
J. BLANCHARD.

RESPONSE BY DR. WALDENSTROM.

I have seen in the Mission Friend, on my journey, your open letter to me concerning Freemasonry, and I find pleasure in giving my views respecting the same, although this may be done in but few words. First, however, I feel that I ought to correct what I know to be an error in your letter. You say that the bishops of Sweden are Freemasons. I know only one who is. There may possibly be some others who are Masons, but if so I am ignorant about it. But I can assure you that the majority among them do not belong to the lodge of Freemasonry. I have heard, from a very reliable source, that the Archbishop has tenaciously repulsed every invitation tendered him to enter the lodge.

I cannot, for my part, approve of the existence of secret societies, whether they are called Freemasons or anything else. This is also so well known in my native land that up to the present time not a single such society has tried, in any manner, to secure me as a member. All the believers in my native land stand, also, in so far as I know, as one man against secret societies, if I except a few who belong to the Good Templar lodge. I have never heard of a believer who is a Freemason. The believers, I know, who have been connected with the lodge, have left it.

Furthermore, what I know of the lodge is such that I cannot understand how one, who is a true disciple of Jesus, can remain in it, lest he lose his faith and a good conscience.

Accept the expression of my brotherly esteem for you and your work. P. WALDENSTROM.

DENOMINATIONAL ZEAL AS A FOE TO REFORM.

BY REV. H. H. HINMAN.

"Who hath believed our report, and to whom hath the arm of the Lord been revealed?" Isaiah's words were prophetic of the reception that the world would give to our Lord Jesus Christ and his faithful ministers. They apply to all kindred reforms and reformers. For more than twenty years we have put forth most earnest and persistent effort to enlighten the public mind and awaken the public conscience in reference to the iniquity of the secret lodge system. We have sent out some able and eminent men as lecturers who have boldly and ably maintained the principles of our reform. We have scattered broadcast many thousands of pages of Christian literature bearing on this evil. We have published the fullest and clearest expositions of the Masonic and other rituals, sustained by the highest legal testimony, and endorsed by some of the eminent statesmen and Christians. And what has been the result?

We have not altogether failed. Multitudes of young men have been saved from the lodge. Many Christians have been persuaded to withdraw, and not a few have made open renunciation of the system as "a covenant with death and agreement with hell." But while a comparatively few regard the whole system with abhorrence, the average church members, to whom we have mainly appealed, are either quite indifferent, or else have yielded to the seductive influence. Freemasonry has not ceased to grow. Though but a small percentage of those who are initiated ever become Master Masons, yet they annually increase, and their power is immense.

Freemasonry has overridden and practically suppressed the emphatic testimony of the Congregational Associations of Ohio, Illinois, Iowa and Wisconsin. It has subverted the Constitution of the United Brethren denomination, and divided them into opposing factions now engaged in legal warfare with each other. It controls to some extent the Society of Friends, and threatens to subvert or divide the Free Methodist and the Wesleyan connections. Other denominations that have a testimony against the secret lodge system find it increasingly difficult to enforce their discipline, and are slowly being corrupted by its presence. Here in Oberlin a Masonic lodge lives and grows under the shadow of the College and the churches, and other secret societies abound. A prominent member of the one of the churches that President Finney helped to organize and build up, says that from his personal knowledge Mr. Finney's testimony about Masonry was false, and that he repented before he died of what he had affirmed. Moreover, he said that Mr. Finney never renounced Masonry until after he had been expelled from the order for criminal conduct, and that more than two years after he became a Christian he accepted the office of Senior Warden of the lodge. Another Mason declared that, admitting the veracity of Mr. Finney, he was evidently so ignorant of Masonry that his assertions are utterly worthless. This man is Master of the lodge.

Such men who are known to be not only in complicity with a system that has been pronounced un-Christian by the Congregational churches of this place, but who are willful slanderers of one of the noblest Christian men who has ever adorned our land, are still regarded as in good standing in the churches, and are daily corrupting the youth with their falsehoods.

Meantime the ministers are dumb. One of the pastors recently gave an address before the G. A. R. in the First Church, and cannot, of course, be expected to speak against the kindred orders. The other, in feeble health, has little conception of the extent to which his church has been honeycombed by this unholy influence.

The outlook from this standpoint, at least, is not assuring. Well may we exclaim with the prophet, "Who hath believed our report?" Had not the people been just as slow to believe the truth about the divine character of our Lord, and just as unwilling to hear our testimony as to the sin of slavery, we might well be discouraged; but our hope is in Him who has all power and can never fail.

The reasons for the slow progress of our reform are:

1. The low state of morals in the churches, and the fact that church members condone the conduct of many who are known to be unworthy of a place among those professing godliness.

2. The occupation of the most intelligent and earnest part of the church with the question of the prohibition of the liquor traffic, and their conviction that this question ought to be first settled.

3. And mainly, the well-meant but mistaken zeal for their religious denominations, that leads Christians (often unconsciously) to seek first the peace and temporal prosperity of their organizations, and their purity as but a secondary consideration.

This is remarkably exemplified in the history of the United Brethren church. Its ministers did know that the lodge system was wicked. They did covenant to resist its influence and oppose its connection with the church. But the lust for denominational growth got possession of their minds, and led them to, at last, "call evil good and good evil." They first took pains that their "prohibitory law" should not prohibit, and proclaimed that it did not as a reason why it should be set aside.

The same influence is at work, and the same methods are being used in the other denominations that are following in their wake. The peace and harmony of Congregationalism, and especially of the Congregational churches of Oberlin, is the price for which, it would seem, they are willing to sell out their testimony against the lodge system.

The remedy for this state of things is threefold:

1. There needs to be a deep religious awakening, a quickening of the public conscience, especially as to the sin of lying, to which lodgery, of necessity, leads.

2. The friends of temperance must remember that their hope is in the Gospel of Christ, and that they cannot expect that it will be applied to the removal of any one evil while they are indifferent to another. In the divine mind all sins are alike in character if not in magnitude.

3. The Christian world will have to learn that it is zeal for Christ and not for a religious denomination which the world most needs. Manifestly denominational zeal is one of the greatest obstacles to all true reforms. It should be the desire of all Christians to seek its abolishment, and if possible divest our religion from the evil of schism.

SOME TIME.

BY REV. W. L. FERRIS.

The world will be better some time, I know,
Though the chariot of truth may seem to us slow,
But error and wrong shall yet be laid low,
And the world will be better some time, I know.

Sometimes I've asked, 'mid the hurrying years,
Can it be God can know of the tears
Of the heroes and martyrs of everyday life
Who "endure as good soldiers" the heat of the strife?

And often I've thought of the heartsick and weary,
The bearers of burdens in days that were dreary,
Their hopes that were blasted, their plans that were slain,
And I asked, Will the sun come after the rain?

Ah, the beautiful sometime, I hear it again,
And it cheereth the heart—that glad refrain—
The chariot of God may seem to us slow,
But the world will be better some time, I know.

The sword that was whetted for human life,
The spear that was pointed for carnal strife,
Will some time be turned to better estate,
For Love will be queen, instead of grim Hate.

Hatred will some time give way to love,
And the same old song they heard above
Bethlehem's plains will be sung again
Of "peace upon earth, good will among men."

Then lift up your heads, ye helpers of men,
And lift up your hearts for the struggle again,
For it's light in the east and the shadows are gone;
Be brave, evermore; right is stronger than wrong.

Look up, O ye tellers, though the furnace be hot,
The God of the Hebrews hath never forgot,
Your cry and your prayer shall not be denied,
For "the form of the fourth" shall walk at your side.

Deliverance comes to those who can wait,
Though justice and truth may often be late,
And the chariots of God may seem to us slow,
Yet the world will be better some time, I know.

LODGE THEOLOGY IN FRANCE AND AMERICA.

BY REV. C. F. HAWLEY.

It is announced everywhere in the press that William H. Peckham, "Past Most Puissant Grand Commander of the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite, of the 33rd and last degree of Freemasonry," as established in New York City by Joseph Cerneau in 1807, has published his withdrawal from that Masonic body. His published reasons for so doing are that the Grand Orient (or Grand Lodge) of France did in 1878 eliminate the name of God from its constitution and ritual. The Grand Lodges of England and the United States have protested and refused fraternally to recognize the Grand Lodge of France. But F. J. S. Gorgas, who is now at the head of Scottish Rite Masonry as established in the United States by Joseph Cerneau, when in Paris in 1888, visited the Grand Lodge of France, and arranged to have his Supreme Council fraternally represented in the Grand Orient, thereby indorsing the atheistic departure of that body in 1878.

Mr. Peckham will not, by retaining his membership in the Scottish Rite, as established in New York by Joseph Cerneau, partake of the sin committed by the Grand Lodge of France in denying God. But if he is a Jew, or a Mohammedan, or a deist, he certainly has acted consistently in the step he has taken; but if he believes in the divinity, atonement and mediation of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, there is a strange inconsistency in his course. He has withdrawn from one Masonic body, because through its chief officer it has established fraternal relations with another Masonic body that denies God; while he retains his connection with other Masonic bodies who deny our Lord Jesus Christ, the mediator between God and men.

We, as believers in Christ, are taught the following fundamental principles:

To honor the Son as we honor the Father.

That he that honoreth not the Son, honoreth not the Father that sent him.

That there can be no access to God, but through Jesus Christ.

That whosoever denies the Son, hath not the Father.

That we are saved by grace, and that grace comes through Jesus Christ.

That those who do not abide in the doctrine of Christ, have not God.

That no religious teachers are to be countenanced who do not teach the doctrine of Christ.

Blue Lodge, or Grand Lodge Masonry utterly ignores Christ, and yet claims to teach the way to heaven; and assumes that all faithful Masons are fitted for heaven. Thus, Ancient Craft Masonry dishonors Christ; yea, so utterly rejects him, that it is contrary to her constitutions and ritual to recognize him as the Redeemer of mankind, and the Mediator between God and men.

It is in vain that men assume to honor God, as Mr. Peckham has done, by separating from a Masonic body that countenances the denial of God, while they adhere to a Masonic body that denies Christ. God will not accept the worship of those who treat Christ as the Grand Orient of France has treated God. Mr. Peckham knows that God will treat him as an atheist if he adheres to a Masonic body that countenances the denial of God; and so he publishes his withdrawal.

I do not know what Mr. Peckham thinks of Christ; but I know what the orthodox churches and ministers of America think of him. How can the Christian ministers and laymen of these churches join, or remain connected with, the Freemasons, Odd-fellows, or any other orders that treat Christ as the Grand Orient treats God!

Brethren of the Christian church, American Grand Lodge Masonry denies Christ just as really as French Grand Lodge Masonry denies God. In 1842 they revised three rituals by eliminating therefrom former allusions to Christ as our Redeemer and Saviour. Why do not the ministers and laymen, who have been deceived into applying for lodge membership, renounce their lodge covenants as soon as they find that Christ is not recognized as the Redeemer and Mediator in the lodge worship? And why do they not publish their renunciation to the world, and their reasons therefor, as Mr. Peckham has done?

Have the Masons, who are church members, less regard for the honor of Christ than Jews and Mohammedans and deists have for the honor of God? Brethren, it is a shame to be so lukewarm that you will wink at the formal rejection of Christ in the rituals of the American lodges! Think of Mr. Peckham, severing his connection with a body of Masons who were accessory to the rejection of God by establishing fraternal relations through their principal officer with the Grand Lodge of France, that had eliminated the name of God from her constitution and ritual!

You, dear brethren, who are Blue Lodge Masons, or Odd-fellows, or Knights of Pythias, belong to orders that have treated our Lord Jesus Christ just as the Grand Orient treated God. Can you deny the Lord, who gave himself a ransom for us, by adhering to orders that exclude Christ from their confession of faith and from their ritual of worship, and yet assumes that faithful votaries have gone to dwell with God? If French Masonry is atheistical because it has eliminated the name of God from its constitution and rituals, then American Grand Lodge Masonry and Odd-fellowship and kindred orders are deistical because they have treated our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ as French Masonry has treated God. May you not expect Jesus Christ to deny you before the angels of heaven if, by continuing to adhere to these deistical orders, you deliberately deny him before men?

Listen! oh, listen to the word of truth: "Come out from among them and be ye separate." "Touch not the unclean thing," if you would be accepted of God. Think not that he will condone the dishonor you do his Son by adhering to an order that will not recognize him as the Redeemer and Mediator between God and men in its ritual of worship.

My brother, can you not see that this whole lodge system is a great Satanic conspiracy against Christ? A scheme to prevent men from returning to our Heavenly Father through the one only way that sinful man can come to God? And will you, can you, by continued adherence to these deistical orders, aid and abet this infernal scheme for deceiving and destroying the souls of men? Ought you not, like Mr. Peckham, to publish your renunciation, and the reasons therefor, to the world, that Satan may not clandestinely use your influence to gather souls into the net of Masonry, and drag them to perdition?

WOMAN'S WORK IN CHRISTIAN REFORM.

ADDRESS BEFORE THE N. E. CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION, AT WARE, MASS., AUG. 27, 1889, BY ELIZABETH E. FLAGG.

"The virgin, the daughter of Zion hath despised thee and laughed thee to scorn, the daughter of Jerusalem hath shaken her head at thee."—Is. 37: 21.

It has been suggested by the honored president of our Association, that the words I have just read would make a most fitting text with which to begin an address on woman's part in the great battle against moral evil.

Judah, under the type of a timid virgin, is represented as laughing to scorn the threats of Sennacherib, the king of Assyria, then in the prime of his power, and ruling over an empire which, perhaps, more than any other great nation of antiquity, was the incarnation of materialism and brute force. Her very art, gigantic and colossal, was of the earth earthy. In her palaces, filled with the spoils of conquered provinces, wine flowed like water. Pride, luxury, fullness of bread, begot arrogance and cruelty. In the language of Scripture, her armies were "swifter than leopards and fiercer than the evening wolves;" and no country, not even mighty, populous Egypt, "the gift of the Nile," the Sphinx-guarded land of the Pharaohs, escaped their conquering tread. And yet the virgin, the daughter of Zion, defies this great world-power, despises his threats, laughs him to scorn. And why? Because she had God on her side, who has only to say to the angel of pestilence, "Go," and he goeth. We all know the rest of the story; how one evening the Syrian sun went down on the bustle of a vast, military encampment, and when he rose the bulk of that great army had sought another camping-ground, from which there is no return for general or private.

The world has not yet learned that God makes very small account of big armaments and splendid navies that he can annihilate with the breath of his mouth. Our own nation has not yet learned it, or we should not hear so much talk every year about enlarging our navy and strengthening our coast defences. But the human race has had many lessons on this point. What a lesson was that three hundred years ago, when God sent the angel of the winds and dashed to pieces the Spanish Armada! Philip II. is said to have observed with pious complacency that "he sent his fleet to fight the English and not the elements." But Jehovah was behind those August gales, making a pathway for the Mayflower to sail out on a generation later. And so the New World became the home of religious liberty instead of the Inquisition; of free schools, and a free press, and a free Bible. And I believe there were praying English mothers in 1588 who gathered their little ones around them and cried to God to deliver their homes when they saw that great fleet extending seven miles in a semi-circle anchored in the channel, all ready to light up the fires of Smithfield in every town and hamlet in England. And in those wild summer tempests, lashing the German ocean into fury and making its every surge the death-knell of doom for the proud Armada, God answered their prayers, and he did deliver England. History has a great deal to say about Queen Elizabeth, placing herself at the head of her troops and throwing down her gauntlet of defiance so magnificently to Spain, but she tells us nothing about these uncrowned queens. God bless them and keep their generations from ever dying out.

America is to-day not simply threatened with invasion by a deadly foe—she is invaded. That foe is already in our borders, dictating our laws to us, murdering our citizens, levying blackmail on our property, and having a vast troop of mercenary underlings in his pay who hate our free schools and our open Bibles, and mean to close both if they can. But to the Sennacherib of the liquor traffic, in the height of his blasphemous pride and cruelty, these words have again been spoken: "The virgin, the daughter of Zion hath despised thee and laughed thee to scorn, the daughter of Jerusalem hath shaken her head at thee."

But let us read on farther: "Whom hast thou reproached and blasphemed, and against whom hath thou exalted thy voice and lifted up thine eyes on high? even against the Holy one of Israel.... Because thy rage is against me, and thy tumult is come up into mine ears, therefore will I put my hook in thy nose, and my bridle in thy lips, and I will turn thee back by the way by which thou camest."

This is what God is going to do to the liquor traffic. With the hook and the bridle of national prohibition he is going to make the monster go back by the way he came, and return to his own place. And we all know where that place is.

To-day Christian womanhood is the grandest power on earth, wielding forces that fifty years ago were undreamed of. God himself has called them to the conflict, and gloriously have they answered. And right across the path of Sennacherib and his allies we women are standing. As we have not the privilege of the ballot and cannot vote as we pray, we have to do what we can with the weapons that are universally acknowledged to be ours by a kind of inherent right. The most worldly-minded man who has no thought beyond stocks and bonds thinks it right and proper that his wife should do all the praying. It was not the preaching of John Knox, powerful as it was, that Queen Mary said she feared more than ten thousand armed men. It was his prayers. And though the liquor party may not be willing to confess that it fears the prayers of these women, more even than their burning words on the platform. I believe at the bottom of their hearts they have always feared them more.

What they can do with no weapons but faith and prayer, is well illustrated by the story of one W. C. T. U. woman who gave a lunch to a tramp, and wrapped it in a temperance leaflet. That leaflet was thrown down on the floor of a saloon. There it was seen and picked up by the proprietor himself. He read it, and the Spirit of God sent home the truth with such power to his heart that he gave up his business and became a Christian man.

In the wild, fierce times, before the establishment of the Israelitish monarchy, a woman whose memory is not preserved, though her action we find was held in memory centuries after, freed Israel from the tyrant Abimelech by casting a piece of a millstone down upon him from the tower where she and others had taken refuge. This was decidedly a woman's weapon, for grinding at the mill was one of the most common feminine occupations in that land and age. This woman has her modern prototypes. Cooking and nursing have always been considered peculiarly feminine provinces; and it is chiefly through the efforts of women that wine recipes are being banished from the cookery book, and doctors are learning a more excellent way than to poison their patient's body and soul with alcoholic stimulants. In doing this she has hit the enemy in a vital part, for the stronghold of the rum party has always been that liquor is good in its place, and when the nation is convinced that there is no place for it but the bottomless pit, the monster will reel in his death-pangs, and the prohibition ballot of free American voters will be the sword that shall effectually slay him.

God means to make woman, feeble though she be, the instrument by which to crush, not the drink traffic merely, but all that vast system of evil of which the saloon, terrible though it be, is only a part. American women have especially been called to the front. It is America that Sennacherib means to possess. It is here that he is most arrogant. It is here that he assumes the rights of a conqueror.

Furthermore, it is the ideal womanhood, Christian womanhood, in its highest and best sense, which will despise all his threats, laugh him to scorn, and outgeneral him in the approaching conflict. It is a womanhood with large opportunities and large responsibilities to match them; with the broadest culture, purified and refined and made lovely by a supreme loyalty that counts every gift, every attainment as only another alabaster box of ointment to break on the feet of her Redeemer. And such a womanhood, with all that it is, all that it implies, has never been possible until now. The middle ages could produce a Joan of Arc, but never a Francis Willard.

Assyria was a wine-drinking country. Her kings were mighty to mingle strong drink. That drunken revel in the palace of Shushan which cost Queen Vashti her crown; that other drunken debauch when the handwriting of doom appeared on the walls, illustrate this fact for every Bible student. She was not only a nation of drunkards, she was a nation of drunkard-makers, for of her were written these words, the Almighty's fiat of judgment against every trafficker in the accursed thing, "Woe unto him that giveth his neighbor drink."

Sennacherib, in his blasphemous challenge to Jehovah, represented that system of false worship from which all others have originated, and which includes in its terrible cycle all the vices, the cruelties, the sensual appetites, against which the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, with its varied success, is so steadily and bravely struggling. The publication of Hislop's remarkable work, "The Two Babylons," have made it clear why Holy Writ has named the apostate church of Rome, Mystery, Babylon the Great. The old Babylonish worship had its Madonna and Child, its monks and nuns, the system of the confessional, the round wafer used in the sacrifice of the mass; and, in brief, all the peculiar doctrines and ceremonies of the Romish church came originally from Assyria. When the women of Boston united together at the last municipal election to defeat the Catholic power in that city, and with such glorious success, it might again be said, in the language of the prophet, "The daughter of Zion hath despised thee and laughed thee to scorn, the daughter of Jerusalem hath shaken her head at thee."

But Catholicism is not a universal religion. She has aimed to embrace the earth, and failed. If to-day the knell of her doom rang out, and we could hear the triumphal chant of all the heavenly ones rejoicing over her downfall, we should still have one foe, the last and most subtle, left to fight, unless, indeed, as both prophecy and public events would seem to indicate, that foe joins Rome, to which it is so nearly allied, and the two go down together in one death struggle.

I refer to the system of Masonry. Sennacherib represents the modern lodge power. The secret system of the mysteries which prevailed in every heathen country originated at Babylon. Mr. Hislop says in his famous work, "The new comer, that is the candidate for initiation, surrendered fully to the priest. Then the confession and oaths. Then strange sights and sounds. Then at last Nimrod, Tammuz, Adonis or Osiris, was revealed to them in a way most fitted to soothe their feelings." This is a very accurate description of modern Freemasonry. The mystic Tau, which is a badge of the Royal Arch degree, was also one of the symbols of the Babylonish worship. Mr. Hislop says, "It was but the letter of the initial of the name of Tammuz.... The mystic Tau was marked in baptism on the foreheads of those initiated in the mysteries.... The mystic Tau was called 'the sign of life.'" Mackey, the highest of Masonic authorities, says in his Encyclopedia of Freemasonry, "It (the letter Tau) is a symbol of salvation from death and of eternal life, and as such has been adopted into the Masonic system."

The old Babylonish religion professed to save men by works, and in all Masonic writings it is expressly taught that if a man lives up to the tenets of the order he is sure of salvation. Masonry in its rejection of the name of Christ approaches more clearly the character of anti-Christ than any other system. Blue Lodge Masonry, as I have said, originated from the Babylonish mysteries. The upper degrees emanated from the Romish church, and so are a copy of a copy of the world-wide system of heathenism which Sennacherib represented.

Furthermore, as every vice and crime known to the ancient world hid behind this old Babylonish worship (and we have only to read the Old Testament prophets to see what a mass of corruption was engendered by and concealed under its false rites), so there is not an evil to-day which the W. C. T. U. is combatting that does not hide behind Masonry. This is what our white ribboners are slowly learning: that there is a reason why rumsellers slip through the meshes of the law, and why it is so hard to convict offenders against social purity. Is it reasonable to suppose that when a rumseller knows that by raising his arms above his head and saying Mah-hah-bone he can keep Masonic sheriffs from touching him, and Masonic juries from convicting, he will refrain from learning such valuable secrets?

The W. C. T. U. is finding out that God had even a far wider and more glorious work for that organization than simply to conquer the rum demon. They are marshaled for Christ against anti-Christ; for all that is good against all that is evil; for all that is pure against all that is vile.

"Lo! on the distant hilltops
His standard-bearers gather,
And the solemn centuries listen

To the mandate that they bring:
'Bid the daughters of the nations
March forth beneath their banners,
And marshal in their cohorts

Where the hosts are gathering.

"There is danger on the ramparts,
There is route upon the war-field,
There is wrong and woe in all the land,

And stain upon our shield;
Bid the silent ranks come forward,
Come from their voiceless thresholds,
And, battling for their hearthstones,

Bear my standard to the field.

"Shall His fiat fall unanswered
Along the silent highway?
Shall His mandate drop unechoed,
And His heralds lick the dust?
No, not though thrones should topple,
Though the battlements should falter,
Though the sceptres should be shivered,

And earth's crowns should sink to rust.

"It is written in the heavens,
It is carved upon the mountains,
And the thunders of the ages
Send their echoes on before;
And the tides roll swift and certain
As the rivers from their fountains,
And human right shall rule the earth,
And wrong sit shrouded no more."

It is written, "And I, John, saw the holy city, New Jerusalem, descending from God out of heaven.... Having the glory of God, and her light was like unto a stone most precious, even like a jasper-stone clear as crystal." It is a daughter of the heavenly Jerusalem which is to conquer Sennacherib. He may revile, he may threaten, he may let loose all the forces of evil to pervert and beguile, to slay and to destroy; but she will despise and laugh him to scorn, this redeemed, consecrated, glorified womanhood, who has taken the shield of faith and the helmet of salvation, and gone forth to battle with the tyrant for the protection of her home and all that is dear to her on earth. For this daughter of the heavenly Jerusalem is also the daughter of the great King.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

The P. F. Y. B. O.—Grand, Grand, Supreme Grand.—Some New England defaulters.—Temperance Republicans and the Prohibition Convention at Worcester.—Pray for Connecticut.

A neatly printed circular, bearing at the top the cabalistic letters, P. F. Y. B. O., kindly interpreted for those who might be at a loss to understand their meaning, as the People's Five Year Benefit Order, which was being quietly distributed through the streets of my native town of Wellesley, attracted my attention the other day. This was certainly not remarkable, because I belong to the people and am naturally interested in whatever concerns the people, certainly in whatever promises to benefit them. The document itself, however, was sufficiently unique for me to think seriously of laying it aside in some safe and secure nook, where, peradventure, after the lapse of half a century, it might be as much an obsolete curiosity as the fugitive slave law is now.

The P. F. Y. B. O. professes to have been legally incorporated under the laws of Massachusetts, March 16, 1889, and also to hold a proper certificate of the same, duly signed and sealed by the Secretary of State, Henry B. Pierce. The order promises to pay each member five hundred dollars in five years from date of membership, and also from five to twenty dollars per week in case of sickness or accident. The writer exhausted her small mathematics in endeavoring to find some stable foundation in any known law of insurance or commercial equity for such magnificent promises. The growth of this new order, the circular stated, had been miraculously rapid, the commanderies now forming numbering from one to six hundred members; also that a meeting, at which further information would be freely given, was to be held on Friday evening, and would be addressed by the imperial officers.

Shades of Washington and Prescott and Warren, and every other Revolutionary hero that fought and bled to make us a republic, is it all a historical mistake? Are we actually living under the Czar of Russia or the Empress of India? And to ask a more serious question, will playing at titles of imperial power ever pass to grasping at the real thing in dead and sober earnest? The circular ended with a paragraph taken from the Boston Globe—a worthy source—which illustrates most aptly how all the secret societies dovetail into each other:

"Among the members of Grand Union Commandery we find the grand secretary of the Home Circle, grand secretary of the United Friends, grand and supreme secretaries of the New England Order of Protection, grand secretary of the Good Fellows, grand recorder of the United Workman, the founder of the Royal Conclave of Knights and Ladies, and the founder of the Northern Mutual Relief Association."

Here is certainly enough grandeur to nauseate any ordinary Republican stomach. And yet these foolish, flimsy insurance schemes are taking the hard earnings of labor, familiarizing the mind with aristocratic titles and despotic rule, and slowly but surely, if allowed to go on unchecked, will work the downfall of our free republic as certainly as some species of worm will eat through the timbers of the noblest ship and cause its wreck.

Defalcations have been the order of the day, the heaviest being that of Treasurer Dana of the Douglas Axe Company, one of the oldest business firms in Boston. As is usual in such cases, the "steals," aggregating to nearly half a million, went quietly, while the company never suspected anything wrong, and the community placed the most implicit trust in his integrity. There is surely "something rotten in Denmark" when three such cases can occur simultaneously in New England. The child brought up to dread debt worse than any other earthly evil, and to consider as a disgrace every deviation from strict honesty, is not the stuff of which defaulters are made, especially when the precept is clinched by example. In the old days of plain living and high thinking, when there was no sham and no shoddy, and no trying to surpass one's neighbors in style and show, whoever heard of a defaulter?

The Boston Convention of Temperance Republicans met in Boston, September 3rd, in response to a call issued by Henry H. Faxon. Among those present were Rev. Henry T. Cheever and David Manning, Jr., of Worcester. The convention, if correctly reported, was a rather weak affair, everything radical in the resolutions being promptly tabled. Even one introduced by Mr. Cheever, expressing sympathy with "our brethren in Connecticut in their fight for constitutional prohibition, was, to use the elegant language of the Springfield Republican, "snuffed out." It was, however, adopted at the Prohibition Convention in Worcester, they having the courage of their convictions, for which "temperance Republicans," in spite of such leaders as Faxon, are not eminently conspicuous. Dr. Blackmer was declared the nominee for governor with but one dissenting vote. Rev. J. J. Lansing of Worcester, a new recruit to the third party, made the speech of the convention, and has suffered the most bitter attacks from the Republican press of that city in consequence.

Rev. H. T. Cheever is doing good work in Connecticut in behalf of the Amendment, and writes as follows: "Please call upon Christians to pray for Connecticut, that the unexpected may ensue, through the Australian ballot." God grant it.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 13, 1889.

The resignation of Commissioner Tanner is in the hands of the President, and will undoubtedly be accepted and the official announcement made by to-morrow. It is believed that a marshalship will be offered, as it is said that President Harrison will not countenance his appointment to such an important office as that which General Rosecrans now holds in the Treasury, and which was spoken of as at Mr. Tanner's refusal should he resign the Commissioner of Pensions. The candidates for the vacancy that the resignation will make, include ex-Pension Agent Poole of New York, ex-Congressman Brown of Ohio, and of course ex-Congressman Thomas of Illinois, who has been a candidate for more offices than any ten other men since March 4. Telegrams are pouring in urging the President not to accept Mr. Tanner's resignation. Scores of these telegrams are from personal friends of Commissioner Tanner, among the most influential class of citizens, and the pressure is very great. Still it is believed that the President is so overjoyed to secure the resignation so easily that he will not hesitate or delay accepting it.

The occasion of the resignation was the action of Secretary Noble in summarily ordering Commissioner Tanner's suspension during the investigation of the charges against him. Secretary Noble first requested this on Monday, and on the Corporal's refusal ordered Deputy-Commissioner Smith to take charge of the office. Nothing remained for the Commissioner to do but to conquer the Secretary or submit to him. There could be no compromise. It is known that the Tanner troubles were the subject of a Cabinet discussion on Wednesday, and only the strong objection of Secretary Tracy, who fought hard for his friend, prevented action asking the resignation.

The removal of Corporal Tanner was a foregone conclusion about two months ago, and was predicted in these columns at the time. It was only delayed to see what the Grand Army would do in the encampment. In short, the tents were hardly folded and the failure of the encampment to pass resolutions endorsing the Corporal to the end telegraphed to Washington, when the resignation was asked for, and the President returned in the middle of his vacation to accept it. Under the circumstances, the acceptance of the resignation will call for some public announcements of the President's reasons. This will be demanded by the Commissioner's thousands of friends among ex-soldiers. The charges against the Corporal are based entirely upon his manifest indiscretion. No reflection upon his personal integrity is whispered. According to his lights he has sought to do right. The trouble has been that he has a poverty of common sense and a wealth of self-esteem. The re-rating of pensioners employed in the Pension Bureau was endorsed by him without a suspicion of wrong. In many cases his construction of law was erroneous, and he ran his office to a considerable extent without regard for any law other than that of sentiment.

For a man in trouble, Commissioner Tanner is very unfortunate in not having the friendship of members of Congress. Commissioner Tanner had a long struggle to secure his appointment. The New York delegation was against him, and only a few Congressmen could be induced to go to the White House for him. Strangely enough, when his appointment was made, he entirely forgot these friends and paid no heed to their advice. He thought hard times would never come again. He had one daughter appointed his private secretary and another a clerk in his office, and into the little house in Georgetown went three neat salaries every month. He rather enjoyed rows. He told Congressman Flood, "I turned old John Sherman down, and I won't stop at turning you down." He thought everything secure. Now in his trouble to whom can he go? Surely not to the men he has "turned down." The story of every successful politician is the story of personal friendships with those above him. He must be indeed a master who succeeds without powerful friends.

REFORM NEWS.

FROM THE GENERAL AGENT.

TRACTS AND TALKS ON THE STATE FAIR GROUNDS.

WORCESTER, Mass., Sept. 26, 1889.

The New England Fair is a thing of the past for 1889. It opened on Tuesday the 3d and closes with an evening exhibit this Friday the 6th. I attended three days and distributed over 6,000 tract circulars and Thurlow Weed pamphlets. I employed an assistant for an hour, but finding that he did not use discretion, and many tracts were thrown away, I revoked his commission, and did the work myself. Kid-glove men and the sporting aristocracy were abundant, but the honest tillers of the soil were also there in large numbers, and it was this class that I sought to reach.

This morning I went for an hour or so among the "jockies" with the tract, "Dead Horses," and had a warm time of it, but this afternoon things went more smoothly. The best class of Worcester's citizen were out with their carriages and I reached nearly every one of them with a copy of Hon. Thurlow Weed's statement of the Morgan murder. The document was not refused in a single instance. Even "Sovereigns and Sublime Princes" were anxious to read what the "Warwick of American Politics" had said about their order. Only one man to-day attempted a defence of the order, and he learned at least that it is necessary to be posted when attempting to champion a cause, in the face of an opponent who is not only familiar with the "twaddle" of initiation, but at liberty to use his knowledge.

I have been sorely pained to hear the church of Christ so defamed as I have by these Hiramites. If the representations given by men in broadcloth of the churches in Worcester and New England are correct, they are little better than houses of refuge for rascals and hypocrites. I had to confess my ignorance of the churches and ministers in Worcester, as I am a stranger in the city; but I assured them that all the honest men in Chicago and out West, where my home is, had not left the churches and joined the Clan-na-Gael and other murderous societies like the Freemasons and the Knight Templars, who drink wine out of dead men's skulls. Somehow they didn't seem to enjoy having me accept their own statements about the churches and their Christian neighbors, even when I gave them credit for entire sincerity. I don't seem to be happy in my endeavors to satisfy this class of my fellow citizens, but I intend to keep on trying just the same.

One man who had the "jewel" of a Sovereign 33d degree, was kind enough to give me his name, and from the directory I have his address. When pressed on the Christ-rejecting character of his order, he was frank enough to say, "I do not believe in the Holy Ghost, as you call it. I believe that Christ was the son of man but not the Son of God." When confronted by Scripture he replied, "I do not accept the Bible as inspired." My reply was, "You are the most consistent Mason I have met for many a day."

The W. C. T. U. ladies showed me much kindness and were entirely cordial, but many of them greatly need information. One bright, intelligent lady said, "My husband joined a secret order on my request."

"Why," I asked, "did you want your husband to join?"

She replied, "He was exceedingly bashful, and he has greatly improved in that respect."

"Madam," said I, "in my judgment that advice was the mistake of your life."

I am puzzled to understand why any wife should wish her husband to hold confidential relations with others which she is not permitted to enjoy.

These are incidents in what might be extended to a chapter of many pages. Suffice it to say that I found many more who were friendly than opposed to our work, and had I had expositions and a license, I could have sold a number on the grounds. I referred all applicants to the advertisements and hope you will hear from them at the home office.

I spent Wednesday at the State Prohibition Convention in Mechanics' Hall and gave literature to all as they came in. The sight was inspiring and full of hope. Arrangements have been made for a report of this meeting in the New England letter, and I will simply say that 555 votes were cast, but more than twice that number of persons were present. The grit and grace of the body was expressed in an offering of $5,542 to the Massachusetts campaign fund as a starter.

Friends here have been fervent in prayer and liberal in pocket to aid the local work, and if those interested will deal as kindly and truly with their State Agent, Miss E. E. Flagg, and send to her their offerings, now greatly needed, I am confident New England will wheel into line and keep step with the bravest in the conflict. I hope in my next to report favorably on the Boston conference.

CALL

FOR A CONGRESS OF CHURCHES AND CHRISTIANS TO CON-VENE IN BOSTON, MASS., OCTOBER, 1889.

Whereas, a widespread and powerful system of secret societies is known to exist in this and other countries; and

Whereas, it appears that the atrocious murder of Dr. P. H. Cronin in Chicago was planned under the inspiration of a secret oath-bound society, claiming and exercising the power to try, condemn and execute its members for offenses unknown to the laws of the land; and

Whereas, it is the bounden duty of civil government to protect its subjects from secret conspiracies as well as from invasions by foreign foes, and the duty of the church to not only sustain the civil magistracy by her moral influence, but to utter the voice of warning as well;

THEREFORE, We, the undersigned, give our voices in favor of a congress of churches and Christians to be held in the city of Boston, on or near the 15th day of October, 1889, to consider the relation of this subject to civil liberty and the Christian religion, and we respectfully request Joseph Cook, of Boston, Rev. Dr. P. S. Henson, of Chicago, Pres. J. Blanchard, of Wheaton, Rev. Dr. I. J. Lansing, of Worcester, with such others as may be selected, to address the said congress, promising our co-operation and moral support in its behalf.

NOTICE.

Call for a meeting of the Ohio Christian Association opposed to secret societies.

Dear brethren in Christ, together with all who desire the purity of the church and the maintenance of justice and civil equality: Recent developments in Chicago and elsewhere of the inherent nature and tendency of the secret lodge system to promote and conceal crime, to pervert justice and corrupt public morals, and, above all, to subvert and destroy the religion of our Lord Jesus Christ, makes it more than ever important that we renew and press forward our warfare with the "unfruitful works of darkness."

After conferring and corresponding with some of the leading friends of the reform in this State, it has been determined to call our annual meeting at Seneca Falls, Gurnsey county, Oct. 22, 1889. Our meeting will, D. V., be held in the Wesleyan Methodist church, and be opened Tuesday, Oct. 22, at 7:30 P. M., and continue, if thought best, during the 23rd and 24th. Let there be a full attendance. By request,

H. H. HINMAN,
Agent of N. C. A.

—The fidelity of some Chinese converts may be learned from a nickname given a few of them living near Shao-wu. They are there called the "Kneel-in-bed" sect, and some heathen declared that the Christians always went to sleep on their knees. In the place and at the time when their neighbors would suppose they would be asleep, these Christians were at prayer.

—Speaking of the race problem, in his baccalaureate sermon at Vanderbilt University, recently. Bishop Galloway of Mississippi, of the Methodist church, South, startled his hearers by the following vigorous declaration: "It is a travesty on religion, this disposition to canonize missionaries who go to the dark continent, while we have nothing but social ostracism for the white teacher who is doing a work no less noble at home. The solution to the race problem rests with the white people who live among the blacks, and who are willing to become their teachers in a missionary spirit."

CORRESPONDENCE.

PAROCHIAL SCHOOLS AND PUBLIC FUNDS.

JANESVILLE, Wis., Sept 5th, 1889.

Editor Christian Cynosure,

DEAR SIR:—In the Cynosure of Sept. 5th, page 9, in the citation from America, I find the sweeping assertion: "Already parochial schools are reaching out for public funds." I doubt not you express your own opinion in letting these words stand without any comment. Permit me to ask you which parochial schools you mean? Those of the Jesuits? Hardly. If you meant these only, you undoubtedly would have said: "Already the parochial schools of the Jesuits," etc. But talking of parochial schools without any restriction, I presume you mean all parochial schools. Now, this is either ignorance or malice to say such a thing of parochial schools in general. I am a Lutheran, a member of the Synod of Missouri, Ohio and other States. This large body has 1,106 schools, with over 72,825 scholars, and 650 male teachers. Far from reaching out its hands for public funds, this Lutheran Synod has from its very beginning thanked God for the liberty of conscience, granted us in this country, to uphold parochial schools with our own moneys. It has furthermore always been the effort of this Synod to make its members loyal citizens of this our beloved country, giving Cæsar what Cæsar's is. We very well know that public school system is a political necessity, and, therefore, always have been, and ever shall be, willing to support the same. Please note this and make it public to all the world. But, knowing the command of Jesus our Lord (Mark 10: 14): "Suffer the little children to come unto me and forbid them not," we think it safest to obey it, and send our little ones to such schools where they will learn how to come to Jesus. In addition, I would remark that I cannot understand how a Christian parent can trust his children, whose souls he is to save, to such schools, wherein God's Word is forbidden a principio!

For your steady work against all lodges I thank you most earnestly. God bless you furthermore in this work. Yours, M. J. F. ALBRECHT.

ANSWER.—In response to the respectful request above, we would say that, ordinarily, our readers would understand the extract from America as referring to Romish schools, only without further explanation. It is a general statement which, among those who are awake to the arts of the Jesuits, would hardly be misinterpreted to the discredit of the private schools maintained by the various other churches, which have never, to our knowledge, either reached for public funds on one hand, or on the other attempted to destroy the common school system from its foundation. Where infidelity and Jesuitry have prevailed to banish the Word of God from its place of highest authority in our schools, many American parents have preferred to privately educate their children, rather than endanger their moral character by association in a godless system. If the moral perceptions of large numbers of our people were not obscured or blinded by the lodge, a public school without God and his Word would be unknown among us.

WHITE BARBARITY IN NEW ORLEANS.

NEW ORLEANS, La., Sept. 6th, 1889.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Your readers may think I have either been scared into silence by secretists, or bought in by their many inducements, but it is not the case. Since I resigned the N. C. A. work, as my church is feeble and not able (though they do all they can) to support a pastor, I have used every worthy and honorable means to earn a living for my sickly family. I have several times lately spoken of the lodge evils, and am preparing a sermon to preach to my congregation the third Sunday night in this month (D. V.) on the evils of excursions and secrecy.

I presume you are aware through the press of the outrage of the hoodlums of Gouldsboro in burning Elder George Butler's church (the Shiloh Baptist) last Sabbath morning. The New Orleans press, as they usually do, have attempted to excuse the atrocious crime of shooting three Negro men, and Elder Fleming's wife, by announcing that the Negroes have been wont to avenge themselves since the Gretna riot, and that the Negroes commenced the shooting at the whites before the train stopped. Of course some of our Southern brethren are not responsible for anything they say, so long as it condemns a Negro. One of them, and a lodge man too, made complaint against my church recently as being disorderly, and being open every day from 5 A. M. to 12 P. M. So you see when it comes to condemn a Negro any tale will do. When the corporal of police reached my church on regular preaching night, he found the service out and everybody gone at 9:15 P. M. So he made inquiry in the neighborhood, and every neighbor except the lodgeite, who complained, declared the church perfectly orderly, and signed a petition to that end.

So that is just the way with the Gouldsboro rioters. Why did the whites arm themselves with shot-guns and rifles, and await the arrival of the Negro excursion between 2 and 3 A. M.? That shows their intentions to have been evil. Mob law in Louisiana seems to be supreme. The third District Congressional election came off last Tuesday, and, as was expected, proved to be another Democratic count-out and outrage. Just as long as the country is ruled by Rum, Romanism and Lodgery, such outrages will continue.

F. J. DAVIDSON.

THE LIQUOR MONGERS.

ROCHESTER, N. Y.

John Wesley aptly called them the "Poisoners General, who drive their fellow men to hell like sheep." They are holding a convention in this liquor-ruled and tobacco-cursed city, in the interest of their deadly "craft;" and, to his disgrace be it said, the mayor—a thirteen-year re-elected liquor mayor—welcomed these "murderers of fathers and murderers of mothers" to the city in a public speech, in which, while he suggests they should advocate such measures as would aid in maintaining sobriety and good order, he stigmatizes temperance law-and-order-loving people as "fanatics!"

What whisky "bosh" is all this? Call on "Satan to rebuke sin!" Call on the men, the nature of whose business is to produce rowdies, rows, riots, robberies, rapes, ruined manhood, wretched homes, raving maniacs and frenzied murderers, Sabbath desecrators and defiers of all laws, human and divine—call on these to aid "society and good order!!" What an impudent farce for such a mayor to pose before such a motley gathering and before the people, and play, "Good Lord and good devil!" There must have been a shout of fiendish glee in hell!

COVER UP THE TRACKS.

The secret orders are sadly put to it to escape the odium of their relationship to the beautiful United Brotherhood, now more notorious as the Clan-na-Gael. The Secret Empire is much disturbed, and many of the much-betitled orders are flaunting their merits and gew-gaws in the streets, and praising themselves at their feasts, which are duly chronicled and praised in the papers; thus filling the eyes and ears of the common people, they hope to hide from their common sense their own crookedness and their own striking likeness to the damaged United Brotherhood of the Cronin celebration in our courts of justice. The U. B. secret oaths are, however, less repulsive than those of the celebrated Morgan removers in 1826. Read Thurlow Weed's pamphlet and respond, Amen!—SENEX.

FEAR THEM NOT.

Over a year ago I applied for the Cynosure to be sent me, seeing, as I did, that there were friends favoring sending the paper to colored clergymen. It was the occasion of the strong article being sent and printed in your paper last year from ———, for which I was ostracised, doomed and damned. 'Tis true the parties had nothing but the signature to apply to, yet suspicion fell at my feet. I have a copy of the "Philo Carpenter Booklet," and find it full of good, hard-sense Christianity. Send me the Cynosure. Success to you.—PASTOR, in Texas.

RAISE THE BANNER AND STAND BY IT.

You may be assured that while the "Old Guard" lives no consistent effort of mine will be spared to extend the knowledge and subscription of the Cynosure, which I regard as the best Christian publication in this country, undenominational, fearlessly advocating righteous reform, religiously, socially, politically, and the extermination of the Secret Empire, of the saloon power, of Mormonism, Sabbath desecration, color or domination line, etc., etc. Holding that our Lord Jesus Christ is the greatest Reformer in the way of righteousness that the world ever saw, basing his reform first in the individual heart and conscience, then the family, church, state, nation and the world. What must I do to be saved? What would the Lord Jesus, my Captain, say or do, if in my place, in this emergency? These are the two great questions to be kept always at the front.—S. S. LITERATURE.

The THOUSAND YEARS IN BOTH TESTAMENTS. By Rev. Nathaniel West, D.D. Pp. 493. Price $2.00. Fleming H. Revell, Chicago.

The prophecies of the Old and New Testaments have of late years been studied with a zeal, intelligence and humility never before given to these portions of the Word of God. This study has been contemporaneous with a wide, indeed, a general acceptance of the blessed doctrine of hope respecting the near return of our Lord according to his promise. Prophetic studies have not yet, to be sure, so far progressed toward the regions of assurance that individual interpretations cease to conflict; but it is increasingly evident that such opinions are being drawn more nearly together, and are forming a consensus or body of opinion, that with each rolling year gathers weight and impetus; like the rays of light which gather into a beam and then into a blaze as we approach their source. Dr. West has for years been known as a diligent student of the prophecies and their interpreters, and this volume, the result of his investigations, is one of the most searching studies in Eschatology that has appeared in many years. The discussion of The Thousand Years in Both Testaments forms a small part of the volume only. It marks the unfolding of this peculiar and glorious prophetic era in Daniel, Ezekiel, John and other writers in a manner sufficiently erudite and critical without being beyond the apprehension of the ordinary reader, to whom the technology of these studies is unfamiliar. Possibly the supplementary discussions, which comprise a large part of the volume, will be more attractive to some readers. These include "Symbolic Numbers," "The 1,260 Days or 3½ Years," "The Cause of Error" in computing the time in Daniel's prophecies, "The 144,000," "The 1,000 Years" with proofs of their historic reality and a review of their characteristics, "Ideal Theory of Numbers," "The Testimony of the Synagogue," "Our Present Age, the Christian State." This volume marks a high tide in prophetic study, and will not be omitted from those works which the student of prophecy will deem a necessity.

Rebekah, a Tale of Three Cities, by M. P. Jones, and A Cloverdale Skeleton, by C. Lauron Hooper, are two novels just issued by John B. Alden, New York. The first is a sketch of Rome in the time of Nero, and relates to the persecutions of the Christians. It gives an imaginative sketch of the lives of the believers in Jesus in that trying period of martyrdom. The second is based also on a moral lesson, and shows how an evil propensity may receive its reward in the punishment of him who indulges in it, and how if he repent and reform he may yet be happy. Both volumes are finely bound and printed.

The Inter Ocean prints the following concerning the author of "Uncle Tom's Cabin": "Harriet Beecher Stowe lives a peculiar existence at present. She eats very little, confining her diet almost altogether to bread and butter and fruit. She sleeps well in the daytime, but is apt to be wakeful at night. At times she seems to have a momentary return of her old brilliancy. She is fond of being in the open air, and can walk about a little with a cane. Her tenure of life is considered remarkable by her physicians, who say she has the strongest vitality of any woman they have ever known."

Good Health for the month fills its various departments with such practical information, notes and suggestions as ever conduce to the healthfulness of its readers, as well as their intellectual culture and home happiness. "International Health Studies," "Value of Manual Training in our Public Schools," "A Protective Agency for Women and Children," "The Mind-Cure Delusion," are among the interesting topics of this number.

The September English Illustrated Magazine gives its readers a charming glimpse of Wales, by the pen of Grant Allen, and the drawings of "Glan Conway," by James T. Watts. "Homeric Imagery" is also a happily illustrated paper reviewing some features of the celebrated poems of Homer, which are especially attractive to critical students. The Catholic story, "Saint" Ilario, comes to an end in this number.

A PAGE FOR WASHINGTON.

GEORGE WASHINGTON, in Farewell Address: "The very idea of the power and the right of the people to establish Government, pre-supposes the duty of every individual to obey the established Government. All obstructions to the execution of the laws, all combinations and associations, under whatever plausible character, with the real design to direct, control, counteract, or awe the regular deliberation and action of the constituted authorities, are destructive to this fundamental principle, and of fatal tendency. They serve to organize faction, to give it an artificial and extraordinary force, to put in the place of the delegated will of the nation, the will of a party, often a small but artful and enterprising minority of the community. . . . However combinations and associations of the above description may now and then answer popular ends, they are likely, in the course of time and things, to become potent engines, by which cunning, ambitious, and unprincipled men, will be enabled to subvert the power of the people, and to usurp for themselves the reins of Government; destroying, afterwards, the very engines which had lifted them to unjust dominion."

WASHINGTON, to Rev. Mr. Snyder, Sept. 25, 1798, speaks of his illness, "which allows me to add little more now than thanks for your kind wishes and favorable sentiments, except to correct an error you have run into, of my presiding over the English lodges in this country. The fact is, I preside over none, NOR HAVE I BEEN IN ONE MORE THAN ONCE OR TWICE WITHIN THE LAST THIRTY YEARS."

HON. SAMUEL DEXTER, in an Open Letter to the Grand Master of Mass., 1798: "If there be no very important reason for upholding Masonry at a moment like the present, there is a reason against it. The system of the destroyers of human virtue and happiness is to undermine in the dark the castle that cannot be carried by storm. Secret agency has overthrown all the republics of Europe, and an extended, secret, leveling, self-created society, without any valuable object of pursuit, and embracing bad characters as well as good, cannot be the subject of approbation of an anxious patriot."

GOVERNOR RITNER, in response to a communication from the Legislature of Pennsylvania, prepared a vindication of General Washington from the stigma of adherence to secret societies, in which he proves from authentic documents:

1. That in 1768 Washington had ceased regular attendance on the lodge.
2. That in 1798, shortly before his death, his opinions were the same as thirty years before when thirty-six years old.
3. That he was never "Grand Master" or "Master" of any particular lodge.
4. That in 1781, as appears by the record of King David's lodge, Newport, Rhode Island, it was not agreeable to Washington to be addressed even as a private Mason.
5. That all the letters said to be written by Washington to lodges are spurious.

GEORGE WASHINGTON, in Farewell Address: "Let it simply be asked, where is the security for property, for reputation, for life, if the sense of religious obligation desert the oaths which are the instruments of investigation in the courts of justice? And let us with caution indulge the supposition, that morality can be maintained without religion."

GEN. HENRY SEWELL, a Companion of Washington: "I was initiated an Entered Apprentice to the Masonic rites in October, 1777, at Albany, soon after the capture of Burgoyne, being then an officer in the American army. . . . I was led by the influence of this 'Perfect Rule of faith and practice,' during the year 1784, to view speculative Masonry in a shape still more deformed. Its character appeared to be selfishness, because restricted to its own members; its religion, deism, because entirely devoid of the Gospel. Its history appeared fabulous; its claims to antiquity, unsustainable; its titles, tulsome; its rites, barbarous and absurd; its oaths, extra-judicial, unlawfully imposed and blindly taken; and the penal sanctions annexed, horrid and impious."

JOHN MARSHALL, Chief Justice, in a Letter to Edward Everett, July 22, 1833, said of Freemasonry: "That the institution ought to be abandoned, as one capable of producing much evil, and incapable of producing any good which might not be effected by safe and open means."

GEORGE WASHINGTON. Rev. Ezra Styles, D.D., in the "Philadelphian," July 23, 1830: "Hitherto I have neither advocated nor opposed Masonry, unless it be in the relation of a conversation between General Washington and Governor Jonathan Trumbull the second, which the latter more than once repeated to my father. The latter, when aid de camp to the former, asked him if he would advise him to become a Mason. General Washington replied, 'that Masonry was a benevolent institution, which might be employed for the best or worst of purposes; but that for the most part it was merely child's play, and that he could not give him any advice on the subject.'"

GEORGE WASHINGTON, to Friends in 1794, Quoted by Myron Holley: "The real people occasionally assembled in order to express their sentiments on political sentiments, ought never to be confounded with permanent, self-appointed societies, usurping the right to control constituted authorities, and to dictate to public opinion. While the former was entitled to respect, the latter was incompatible with all government, and must either sink into general dis-esteem, or finally overturn the established order of things."

CHIEF JUSTICE MARSHALL was the intimate friend and biographer of Washington, and was himself a Freemason in his youth. Marshall left the lodge in 1793. He had then for some sixteen years been acquainted with Washington, who died six years later. Marshall wrote to Hon. John Bailey from Richmond, Oct. 18, 1833, of Washington and Freemasonry: "I do not recollect ever to have heard him utter a syllable on the subject."

ALEXANDER HAMILTON assisted in writing the "Farewell Address," and quoted it against secret societies.

THANKS TO WASHINGTON.—Edward Livingston was the General Grand High Priest of the General Grand Royal Arch Chapter of the United States and the great Masonic champion of his day, and Andrew Jackson was also a high Mason. In view of Washington's non-affiliation and his farewell address there can be little doubt that General Jackson and Edward Livingston considered Washington a seceded Mason. The following is an article published in 1830 in the Pennsylvania Intelligencer, which is an evidence of striking import:

"Who opposed a vote of thanks to Washington?—When General Washington retired to private life, Congress passed resolutions giving thanks to this great man. Only three men were found in Congress at that day, that voted against these resolutions. One of these three is now dead, and we do not wish to disturb his ashes. The grave should cover the foibles of all men. But there are two men now alive, whose names are on the journals of Congress, denying the poor pittance of a vote of thanks to Gen. Washington. We ask who these two men are."

"We have asked this question without expecting an answer from those to whom it is addressed. But there is no reason why our readers should not be gratified with the fact. Let the journals of Congress reply—"They are Andrew Jackson and Edward Livingston!"

OUR NEW VOLUME.

[Editorial Letter.]

I wish I was at home to join in congratulating the Cynosure on its becoming "Twenty-One." Two Free Methodist ministers, Fanning and Underwood, suggested the first steps of the movement which originated the Cynosure. I had spoken in my pulpit in the Sixth Presbyterian church, Cincinnati, against secret societies in 1845; and my sermon was noticed in the Princeton Review with marked commendation. One wishes that able Review would publish the like now. Freemasonry had fallen. It was thought its foul murder of Morgan had buried it beyond resurrection. But secret temperance societies came to its aid, and the Masonic lodge, which was then a synonym for infamy, rode back into popular favor on the shoulders of "Sons of Temperance," "Temples of Honor," etc., without answering an argument or removing an objection,—by simple lying. This new brood were "secret societies which were not secret." When asked, "Why not publish your ritual and meet with open doors?" they reply, "Oh, the pledge of concealment excites curiosity, and draws members and money." That is, they possessed the power of secrecy, but denied the fact of it. These eggs of secrecy were laid, incubated and hatched by Masonry. I drove them from my church, though they were introduced and backed by Gen. Sam. Cary. Fifty or sixty roughs from the saloons of Covington, across the Ohio, undertook to put me in that river, but failed; and I published my intention, and preached the sermon which the Princeton Review (1845) endorsed. Coming to the presidency of Knox College, I learned through Rev. Levi Spenser of Peoria that a secret lodge in that city had been discussing me in their nightly conclaves, and setting their secret bandogs on my track; though I had said nothing, and meant to say nothing more in public against the lodge; and what I had said was endorsed by the ablest Presbyterian magazine in the United States. I saw that it was not me, but Christianity which the lodge opposed. I preached two sermons in Dr. Bascom's pulpit, which were published in Galesburg, and re-published in Chicago.

This led Fanning and Underwood to come to me. Their camp meetings had been disturbed by rowdies, set on by Masons. They said the old Morgan Anti-masons would soon be dead. The pulpit and press were silent; and soon every man in the United States, whom the lodge for any cause hated, would be Morganized. At their request, I wrote those two Methodist brethren a call, and the Aurora Convention in 1867 was the result. That convention called a National Convention the next May at Pittsburgh, and the Cynosure was born the following summer. I took a manuscript sermon, written by President Finney, to nine publishers in Boston, no one of whom would publish it; though J. P. Williston of Northampton, Mass., offered to pay the bills. Ezra A. Cook, a young printer just home from the war, offered to print the Cynosure, and did issue it; though his business was endangered by it. The first person I ever heard suggest a paper against the lodge was Philo Carpenter, and he lent Mr. Cook the money to issue the first number, and his means sustained the movement and the paper which he had suggested. He afterward gave the Cynosure its present home. And as Moses looked down from Tabor on the Canaan he had originated, how must that great and good man, Philo Carpenter, look down from the presence of the transfigured Saviour on the Cynosure, now speaking to every corner of forty-two United States, with its children and allied presses coming to its assistance! And how must that meek saint rejoice when Christ has triumphed over the ruler of the world's darkness, and the United States are "free indeed!"

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

Is New England salvable? So far as the people are concerned, Yea. So far as the churches, in their present state, are concerned, NAY!

"When God resolves to scourge a nation's sins,
'Tis in the church the leprosy begins."

I never tire of these people. Put me back into a bare-footed boy, and they are my father and mother and neighbors. The very ox-carts, drawn by heavy oxen with brass knobs on their horns, seem stately and beautiful, as when I first drove them up from the pasture to "get in the hay." Just one hundred and fourteen years ago last April, such oxen were unyoked, the yokes left standing in the field, and the men shouldered their flint-lock muskets, took bullets run by their wives, and began the war for Independence at Lexington and Concord. And the graves of such men, many the same identical men, are in these hillsides around me.

"Oft did the harvest to their sickle yield.
Their furrow oft, the stubborn glebe hath broke;
How jocund did they drive their team afield;
How bowed the woods beneath their sturdy stroke!"

And, blessed be God, that race of men is not extinct, who, from Lexington and Concord, drove back Gage's regulars to Boston, without one word of command from any officer that whole day. But they had read their Bibles, and believed in God; and they took their orders, as they got their rights, from him.

But the churches of New England have suffered the most fearful deterioration. At first, a town-meeting and church were the same body; only one met in the town-house, the other in the meeting-house. All the civil voters were once church members. By degrees, unregenerate men neglected to join the church, and yet the town voted the minister's salary. Discipline ran down, and Scriptural eldership was dropped, and a town-meeting "committee" was substituted for it without ordination. Puritans, who held the Bible to be their only rule of faith and life, attended and voted at church-meetings all their days, without ever hearing named, or electing the church officers appointed by God and named throughout the Bible.

The "Half-way Covenant" paralysis followed. And though "the Great Awakening" under Whitefield, Edwards and the Tennents, and the rise of Baptist "covenant meetings," and Methodist "classes," kept the fires of piety from utter extinction, Methodists, with more zeal than charity, used to say the orthodox churches were "going to hell in stone boats with iron paddles." Such was their idea of the cold formality of "the standing order."

Slavery started in Virginia in 1620, the year the Pilgrims landed at Plymouth. And though Massachusetts sent back to Africa the first two slaves brought over, in 1801, when Garrison started the Liberator he was shunned and despised by the Congregational and Methodist clergy, who had so fallen from the principles of their fathers that Daniel Webster said: "North! There is no North!" Slavery ruled the nation. Their shrinking from meeting the slavery issue sunk the influence of New England clergy with the people fifty per cent, and bred a mongrel race of Theodore Parker Abolitionists, whose descendants now worship devils, and heal diseases by diversified sorcery and witchcraft.

The Masonic lodges had fallen in the North and gone South; and the slavery war was hatched in their secret lodge rooms. Our soldiers were told to "join the lodge, and you will get favor from rebels." They did join by thousands, and now there are two or three secret lodges in the New England towns and cities to one church of Christ.

These are the churches to which we are now appealing here in New England. And though these churches are out-numbered and overcrowded by the synagogues of darkness, though weak, dispirited and discouraged, these churches are not "settled upon their lees," but on their embers; and the fire of God is in those embers.

I have lately visited the clergy in three large Connecticut towns. A pastor in one of them, whose people are building a one hundred thousand dollar house, said, "I have never joined one of them, though I know but one of all my members who has not joined a secret society." His neighbor, pastor of a large orthodox church, said they had paid the fees and sent in his application and voted him in without a blackball. Yet he had never worn the halter or hoodwink.

Alonzo H. Quint, who has taken thirty-two degrees in Masonic blasphemy, has darkened the moral atmosphere of New England by the organized deism of the lodge; but the Inskip Methodists are leaving it; Congregational ministers are reading, and they will soon act. I have conversed with one college president, one president of a Theological Seminary, since our Hoyt's Grove meeting, and several prominent pastors, all of whom express abhorrence of the lodge.

Last Sabbath week I preached in a Congregational church whose members were some of them Masons. At the close of the service I asked all to arise who wished their members to quit the lodges, and the pastor and a good number of the best members stood bravely up. Let us thank God and take courage. The air of these green hills will yet permeate and purify the murky atmosphere of the Masonic pits. And Christ has told us that these lodges, which no one pretends are of God's planting, "shall be rooted up."

JUDGE McCONNELL'S RULING.

The Cronin trial closed its third week on Saturday, and not a juror yet sworn in. That day at close of court, two men had been accepted by both sides, but before two others can be found to place beside them to take the oath, one or both may be peremptorily dismissed. The defense had exhausted about half its one hundred privileges of peremptory challenge, and until all are gone a strong fight will be made against every church member, every opponent of secret societies, and every man who is too intelligent to please the lawyers who stand for the indicted members of the Clan-na-Gael.

The examination of jurors has developed some particulars of public interest, which are sure to be discussed by the press—the discussion, in fact, has already begun. Of the 327 men examined, a very considerable number were found opposed to the secret lodges, and respected their conviction of the fact that the lodge oath is generally more binding with lodgemen than any other. The Daily News is constrained to say: "One would think, from the number of secret societies, benevolent or otherwise, that flourish, that there would scarcely be a man opposed to them. The examination of veniremen, however, tells a different tale."

Many of these tentative jurors are lodge men also. Some of them members of orders supposed to be opposed to Catholicism and foreign immigration, as the Patriotic Orders Sons of America and American League. The latter are generally excused by the court. The vigilant and aggressive editor of America, though objecting to secret societies, assails Judge McConnell's decision in the case of these men, implying that their obligations to these secret societies should not be regarded as a disqualification. We do not agree with the judgment of America on this point. Members of these societies have taken a secret, extra-judicial un-American and un-Christian oath to maintain certain principles which are antagonized by certain parties, those parties being understood, but possibly not expressed, to be Catholics and foreigners. Now the prior existence of this oath must be taken into the account of jury qualification: To these men it is binding, though false and illegal. Judge McConnell is right in regarding it in a serious manner and keeping his jury clear of such an element, since the indicted men are all of the objectionable classes. He was, however, most unfortunate in the terms of his ruling. To one American League member he said, "I am afraid a man who is affiliated with a society which is antagonistic to the Catholic church would not be a competent juror in this case." The Catholic church is not likely to thank the kindly-faced judge for this implied indictment, which virtually makes Romanism one of the defendants. There are not a few who believe it to be in this position, but such an opinion comes not with good grace from the bench.

Some of Judge McConnell's other rulings are very objectionable, and we shall review them at some other time.

As our readers open this first number of the Cynosure after passing its twenty-first year, they will be pleased with the new dress the N. C. A. Board has given their paper. The new type is of —Our readers will be glad to note Bro. F. J. Davidson's name again, where it was wont to appear with such regularity, though they will regret the sad report of violence and outrage he gives. His paper, the Teller, contains reports of his efforts to secure funds for his church which are not very encouraging.

—The young N. C. A. agent, Enos W. Shaw, came in last week from his summer work in Illinois, which he has from time to time reported, and has gone across the lake to Michigan to continue his labors. During the summer season, when mid-week meetings are difficult to fill up, he has succeeded admirably with parlor conferences, which he finds have some decided advantages besides being inexpensive.

—J. G. Brooks, a Wheaton student from Beloit, Kansas, started with Bro. I. R. B. Arnold on his Mississippi expedition over a year ago, and has just returned to college. He gives us a narrative of thrilling interest concerning the experiences and work of the boat mission, and we shall endeavor to have him present a statement of it to the next meeting of the N. C. A. Board. Bro. Arnold is still at Wheeling working in the immediate vicinity with much success.

—The Advance lately published an article from Rev. J. Faville of Wisconsin on the contrast between the number of male and female members in our churches, with the reasons therefor. As is usual, no mention was made of secret societies. But a correspondent asks through the last Advance this question, which we hope will be honestly answered: "Will you please ask your correspondent, Rev. J. Faville, to make another canvass, and learn and report what proportion of Masons, Odd-fellows, and other secret societies, professing to be religious, composed of men, as is the Masonic, are regular attendants on Sabbath worship, conducted in Christian churches?"

—One of those excellent women who from the first have stood by our reform work as the Marys clave to Christ, writes from Pittsburgh, her heart full of unutterable desire that the coming National W. C. T. U. meeting in this city shall be true to its profession, and stand for Christ against the secret orders. She writes: "You remember years ago that Mrs. Plumb and I were appointed to take the initiatory in presenting the lodge question before the W. C. T. U. We did not do it, as you are aware. The W. C. T. U. has gone on introducing other side issues, much against the feelings of good women, and it seems to me our time to at least make an effort to do something against the lodge." There are scores, yes, hundreds of the W. C. T. U. workers who will respond to these earnest words. They wait for some suggestion, some providential opening by which access may be had to the head and heart of the W. C. T. U., confident that if God leads, this great society will come out clearly and emphatically for the right.

PERSONAL NOTES.

—Pres. J. Blanchard was in Brooklyn over the Sabbath the guest of Mr. Thomas White. He returns to Weatogue, Conn., this week.

—Rev. L. N. Stratton has returned to his home in Wheaton from Sioux Falls, Dakota, so unwell as to be confined to his room. His friends, among whom we are all numbered, regret to learn of this illness.

—Rev. W. Kellaway of Boston is now preaching in New London, Iowa. His purpose to begin a city mission on the North Side, Chicago, was frustrated by some disagreement between the churches upon which he relied for assistance in starting the work.

—Rev. H. A. Day does not remove from Michigan to Wheaton to become pastor of the Wesleyan church as before announced. The Michigan Conference has undertaken to sustain the Wesleyan Herald, and the paper will be removed from this city to Brighton in that State, where Bro. Day has been elected pastor, and will be continued by him in connection with his ministerial duties.

—Rev. W. J. Gladwin of Bombay addressed the student's missionary society at Wheaton College last Tuesday evening. Later in the week he went to fill appointments in Toulon, Galva, and Rock Island, Ill., and Davenport, Iowa. At the conclusion of his address before the union meeting at Wheaton, Sept. 1, the ladies of the W. C. T.

Union presented the following resolution, which was heartily adopted:

Resolved, That having heard from Rev. W. J. Gladwin of the widespread and increasing traffic in intoxicating liquors and opium in India, a field toward which we are especially drawn because of its extensive missionary interests, we, therefore, send our cordial greeting to those who are in India and England laboring for the prohibition of the liquor traffic, and pray for their speedy success.

THE PORTRAIT OF PHILO CARPENTER belongs to this anniversary number of the Cynosure, since his generous enthusiasm for the reform twenty-one years ago supported it amid the buffeting waves of a new and unpopular enterprise. In addition we print from a memorial sketch of Mr. Carpenter prepared by Rev. H. L. Hammond at the instance of his daughters, Mrs. Cheney and Mrs. Hildreth, and read before the Historical Society of this city in July, 1888, on the occasion of the presentation by them to the Society of a bronze life-size bust of their father. The following extracts will heartily interest our readers:

He was a pioneer of the best things. His coming here at that early day, that prayer meeting the first evening, that first organization of a Sunday-school have already been mentioned. When Rev. Jeremiah Porter was considering the question of accepting a call to labor in Fort Dearborn, he was told, "There is one good man there who has organized a Sunday-school." He came, found the man and the school, and began his labors. Mr. Carpenter and a few others, under the guidance of the young minister, formed the first church here, the First Presbyterian, of which he was chosen one of the elders. The date of the organization was June 26, 1833. Dea. Carpenter wrote and circulated the first temperance pledge, and delivered the first temperance address. A meeting had been arranged, and a lawyer, Col. Richard J. Hamilton, engaged to deliver the address, but at a late day the lawyer declined to speak. Our pioneer hastily prepared himself and filled the gap.

He was one of the first officers of the Chicago Bible Society, founded August 18, 1835.

He early interested himself in the cause of education. For ten years he was a member of the board of education. His connection did not cease till his removal to Aurora in 1865. On his return from Europe in 1867, he found one of the palatial school-houses of the west side, at Centre avenue, corner West Huron street, named in his honor, the "Carpenter School," for which he gave $1,000 as an endowment for text-books for indigent children.

The first "one horse shay" that made its appearance in Chicago in 1834, contained Philo Carpenter and his newly-married wife. The first dray was introduced by him; and the first platform-scales, which are now in possession of Daniel Warne of Batavia, Ill., which can weigh up to 750 pounds; also the first fire-proof safe.

He was one of the original members of the Third Presbyterian Church, formed July 1, 1847, and was one of its elders. He was one of the first corporate members of the Chicago Eye-and-Ear Infirmary, and one of the founders of the Chicago Relief-and-Aid Society. He was the leader in the formation of the First Congregational Church in May, 1851. . . . The names of Philo Carpenter and Ann Carpenter stand first and second on its roll of members. He was elected deacon, and retained the office till he removed to Aurora, and after his return was made deacon emeritus.

Of two wooden church edifices erected for their accommodation, largely at the expense of Deacon Carpenter, one, which was occasionally besmeared and called "Carpenter's nigger church," was burned to the ground on a Sunday night after Rev. Joseph E. Roy, who had just come from an Eastern seminary, had preached in it his maiden Western sermon. Whether the fire was communicated by a spark from the young man's discourse, or by an incendiary, or was purely accidental, does not appear. The other on Green street, near West Washington, was soon outgrown—Rev. Geo. W. Perkins was then the popular preacher—and a permanent house of rock-faced stone was put up on the corner of West Washington and Green streets. Deacon Carpenter advanced most of the money, and waited on the society many years for its repayment without interest.

A little later he united with Joseph Johnston, Rev. John C. Holbrook, and Chas. Goodrich Hammond in starting the first denominational paper here, the Congregational Herald. In 1855 he was one of the incorporators of the Chicago Theological Seminary, and for many years was one of its board of directors and chairman of its executive committee. He afterward engaged with great zeal in opposing secret, oath-bound societies. In early life, before he came West, his indignation had been aroused by the abduction in western New York of William Morgan, for publishing a little book revealing the secrets of Freemasonry. The abducted man was never found or heard of after, and was supposed to have been murdered. The perpetrators of the crime escaped justice, and public sentiment held the Masonic fraternity responsible for their escape. Deacon Carpenter suggested the establishment of a paper to oppose all such secret societies, and gave the money for the publication of the first number of the Christian Cynosure, and provided headquarters for the movement at a cost of $20,000. He bought for gratuitous circulation 1,000 copies of Finney's book on Masonry, and wrote and distributed tracts of his own on the subject.

Philo Carpenter was a wise man. With rare sagacity he foresaw the future of Chicago, discerning the great city through the small trading-post; and his confidence never wavered. He wisely bent his energies to the establishment of the most useful institutions for the coming city. His sagacious forecast for this trading-post is proved by its growth in a little more than half a century from two hundred souls to three-quarters of a million, and his judgment of the first institution needed has been confirmed by the establishment of nearly three hundred Sunday-schools in it, and more than four hundred in Cook county; our citizens have endorsed the church by founding more than four hundred of them of all kinds. As for secret societies, though our brother "received not the promise," he yet "died in the faith;" and we may say "the end is not yet." The Masonic fraternity could not do now what it was accused of doing in 1826, without being swept from the land by a cyclone of public opinion. Who shall say that the good man could, on the whole, have more wisely used his time, his strength, and his money?

Some of you may be surprised to hear me speak next of his great moral strength.

A quiet, modest man, who pursues the even tenor of his way without noise, without bluster, without ostentation, seldom gets credit for his strength. People often forget that real power is best evinced by doing one's work easily, calmly, and uniformly. In all questions of reform or practical morality, everybody knew where Deacon Carpenter would be found. Nobody thought of the possibility of his yielding to the solicitations of the saloon, the fascinations of the private wine-cup, the excitement of the race-course, or the gamester's table. One instance of the kind would have brought all busy Chicago to a standstill, in perfect wonderment at what would occur next.

Such examples of moral power are by no means too common in this generation. We do well to mark and honor them.

Smaller matters can illustrate great principles.

THE HOME.

MILTON'S APPEAL FOR THE WALDENSES.

Avenge, O Lord, thy slaughtered saints, whose bones
Lie scattered on the Alpine mountains cold;
E'en them who kept thy truth so pure of old,
When all our fathers worshiped stocks and stones,
Forget not: in thy book record their groans
Who were thy sheep, and in their ancient fold
Slain by the bloody Piedmontese that rolled Mother with infant down the rocks. Their moans
The vales redoubled to the hills, and they
To heaven. Their martyred blood and ashes sow
O'er all the Italian fields, where still doth sway
The triple tyrant; that from these may grow
A hundred fold, who having learnt thy way
Early may fly the Babylonian woe.

THE "GLORIOUS RETURN" OF THE WALDENSES.

The late bi-centenary celebration of this event, on August 27th last, makes timely the following graphic account of "The Glorious Return," by the editor of A Voice from Italy:

The history of the Waldenses for centuries before 1689 contains many a stirring page; but no episode in all their wondrous past is more worthy of remembrance than what is known as "The Glorious Return" in 1689. A return implies a previous absence. Some of our readers may not know that the territory which had been from time immemorial the mountain home of the Vaudois for more than three years knew them not. The churches were closed, strangers put in possession of the houses and lands of the rightful owners, and they themselves scattered in other countries. How was this? The Waldenses did not leave their valleys as emigrants. They were exiled against their will.

In 1686, one of the fiercest of the many blasts of persecution which have swept through their valleys had burst. It ended in the wholesale incarceration of a people whose only crime was that they refused at the bidding of their prince to bow the knee to Rome. Men, women and children were crowded into the loathsome prisons of Piedmont. "When they entered these dungeons," Henri Arnaud tells us, "they counted 14,000 healthy mountaineers, but when, at the intercession of the Swiss deputies, their prisons were opened, only 3,000 living skeletons crawled forth." Nor was this all. No sooner had this poor remnant obtained their liberty, than they were confronted by the alternative of abjuring their faith or quitting their country forever, within fifteen days, on pain of death. This was in December, 1686, and amid the snows of winter they were driven across the Alps to Switzerland. No wonder many perished by the way; and had it not been for the kindness and care with which these poor people were welcomed in Switzerland, Germany and Holland, the Waldenses would have perished from off the face of the earth. It needed great faith in these depressing circumstances to trust the word of the Lord, "Fear not, little flock, it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom."

Three and a half years they lived in exile, but with an irrepressible longing pined for their native valleys and yearned for a return. Time after time they made efforts which failed; but at length, one evening in August, 1689, 800 or 900 determined men assembled by one common impulse on the northern shore of the Lake of Geneva. The decisive moment had come. That night (August 16) is one much to be remembered in the history of the Waldenses. Their rendezvous was a dense wood by the lake, near Nyon, where boats were in readiness. Having committed themselves to God's protection in earnest prayer, they embarked in silence, and ere morning broke, had all landed in safety on the shore of Savoy. Then began their perilous journey of twelve never-to-be-forgotten days. The plan of march had been carefully arranged beforehand, and every possible precaution taken; but its success was possible only to men of invincible determination and faith in God.

As respects human instrumentality, their success was largely due to one remarkable man, their leader, Henri Arnaud—whose name is imperishably associated with "The Glorious Return." Arnaud had in his youth served as a captain in the army of the Prince of Orange (afterwards William III. of England); in later years he became an honored pastor of the Waldensian church. He it was who each morning of the journey led the devotions of his troops and directed their perilous march. The 800 men divided into nineteen companies, each under a leader, selected the least frequented passes of the mountains to avoid their foes. But this was not always possible; once and again it seemed as if further progress were hopeless. At Salanches, where a bridge crossed the Arve, their passage was fiercely disputed by 600 armed men. Over the Col de Bonhomme they had to march amid drenching rain, sinking to the knees in soft snow at every step. On August 22nd, after crossing the Mont Cenis amid extreme hardship, they descended into the valley of the Doré. Here obstacles more formidable than those of nature awaited them. A body of 2,500 French troops opened fire on the Waldenses at the bridge of Salabert. It was a moment of extreme peril, but the intrepidity our mountaineers displayed on this occasion forms one of the most brilliant passages in their struggles for faith and freedom. Hurling themselves on the foe like one of the avalanches of their own mountains, they carried the bridge by assault, with heavy loss to the French, and scarcely any to themselves. The following day, the gallant band were gathered on the heights of Sci; and at that moment all previous dangers and fatigues were forgotten. For, looking southward, they descried, rising aloft over the lower mountains, those snow-crowned peaks, which they well knew looked down on their own valleys. It was a Sabbath morning. On that mountain summit the whole band fell on their knees, poured out their hearts to God for his mercy to themselves, and implored his protection to the wives and little ones they had left behind. In two days more (August 27), Arnaud with his brave companions reached the Balsille, at the upper extremity of a wild gorge in the valley of San Martino—a spot destined to be famous in their history. There, for the first time for more than three years, the returned Waldenses felt themselves "at home." But much remained to be done. Descending from the Balsille, they discerned a painful change over the face of their loved country—churches in ruins, lands untilled, aliens in faith inhabiting their old homes, hostile troops under strict orders to resist their advance. It was evident that a reconquest was demanded as well as a return. But they believed that He who had brought them back could re-establish them; and, proceeding on the first Lord's day after their return to Sibaud, above Bobbio, they were united in a solemn league, which is known in their history as "the oath of Sibaud," pledging themselves before God to maintain in these valleys for all coming time their ancient faith, and to be true to one another whatever might befall.

They were once more in their own country indeed, but Canaanites dwelt in the land. Autumn was at hand and a severe winter not far away. Meanwhile, a place of safety and retreat must in any case be provided against the elements, and the malice of their foes more to be feared than any winter. They resolved to establish themselves at the Balsille, a remarkable natural fortress, rising like a pyramid by three rocky platforms, difficult of access, and hemmed in by narrow ravines on either side. No wonder that this spot, like the Castelluzzo and Pra del Tor, is famous in Waldensian story; for if the passage of the Alps by the 800 was marvellous, no less so their preservation at the Balsille, encircled by foes, through the winter, and their escape in the spring from that beleaguered fortress.

Their "place of defence" was literally "the munitions of rocks;" and the natural fortifications of the Balsille were carefully strengthened by the military skill of Arnaud.

But how, may it be asked, were so many men to be kept alive during the long months of the coming winter? He who gave manna in the wilderness had arranged for their sustenance. Besides such provision as they were able to secure by making sorties from their places of refuge, they discovered with thankful amazement a granary below the snow! The inhabitants of the adjoining valley had fled on the approach of the Waldenses, leaving their crops behind them unreaped. Immediately thereafter snow had descended, and here stood the ripened grain beneath it—a supply of food ready at hand—a table spread for God's poor servants in their hour of need! The weary months of winter at length passed away; but with the advancing season came the expected foe. Nearly 10,000 soldiers, led by the renowned General Catinat, swarmed into the valley of San Martino, with instructions to destroy every returned Waldensian without mercy.

The story of the siege sustained in the Balsille is a thrilling record. One assault after another, by selected troops, was gallantly repulsed, and with heavy losses to the assailants. At length, in May, the Waldenses were seriously alarmed by seeing cannon dragged by ropes up the narrow defile of the Germanasca, and planted in position opposite their fortress. When the enemy's cannon commenced to play on the fortifications thrown up by Vaudois, it soon became evident that their position was no longer tenable; and when the night of May 14th, 1690, came down, the possibility of their longer remaining in the Balsille was reduced to a question of hours. Arnaud and his companions were reduced to their last extremity. But man's extremity is God's opportunity. That very evening there descended from heaven a dense mist which enveloped the whole upper half of the Balsille. God threw his "mantle" (as the Scotch Covenanters were wont to call the gray fog) over his poor servants; and thus they were completely hidden from their enemies in the valley below. At length, when all was at rest in the hostile camp, at dead of night, Poulat, himself a native of the Valley, undertook to lead the Waldenses, now reduced in numbers, safely forth. They emerged in silence from their beleaguered fortress, and groping their perilous way along the verge of many a yawning precipice, passed from summit to summit, till, before the dawn broke, they had reached another ancient place of refuge, the Pra del Tor, in the recesses of Val Angrogna. Conceive the consternation of the troops of France and Savoy when, at break of day, they looked up to the Balsille, only to discover that the eyrie was deserted and the eagles fled!

One deliverance arrived to the Waldenses swiftly on the back of another. A day or two after their escape from the Balsille, they were still like partridges hunted on the mountains, hemmed in by exasperated foes on every side. Just then a messenger arrived with wholly unexpected tidings. Their sovereign, the Duke of Savoy, had quarrelled with France and had joined the allied Powers. It was a juncture when Victor Amadeus needed all the help he could obtain from his own subjects; and well knowing that none were braver or more loyal than the "heretics" of the Valleys, he sent to offer the Waldenses peace, permission to bring back their families to their old homes, and, best of all, the free exercise of their fathers' faith. And so, this sorely tried but heroic remnant of God's people were preserved, just when they seemed on the point of annihilation. The Lord himself turned again their captivity, and they were like men that dream!

The nonsense that "beer is better than milk," has received a stab this time, not from a prohibition paper, but from the Wine and Spirit Gazette. It says: "The less said about the salutary effect of our modern beer with its various chemical ingredients, the better it will be for the interests of our big brewers, many of whom are but too anxious to draw out of the business by accepting the offers of the English syndicates. . . . It is notorious that our brewers seldom drink their own beer or the product of any other brewery. At the places which they frequent, and at which they take their meals, or at public picnics and summer night's festivals which are attended by brewers, it is generally noticed that these men drink anything but beer. If beer is healthy, why do our brewers refuse to drink beer?" When we have such testimony from a liquor paper, what shall be said of the practice still adhered to by some temperance physicians, of prescribing beer as a remedy in disease? This same paper says, "Modern beer taken in excess tends to develop liver and kidney diseases;" and yet we knew a case lately where a physician recommended the free use of beer to a poor sufferer by rheumatism, a disease where, above all things, the liver ought to be kept free from such a filthy intruder in the system.—Union Signal.

There is a transcendent power in example. We reform others unconsciously, when we walk up-rightly.—Mme. Sweetchime.

WHEN THE CHILDREN ARE AT REST.

When the household cares are over,
And the quiet zephyrs pass
Through the crimson heads of clover
And the daisies in the grass;
Then the mother's busy fingers
Do their silent labor best,
Toiling fast while daylight lingers
And the children are at rest.

In the summer hours of morning
She had other work to do,
Softly chiding, gently warning,
Watching all the noontide through;
Love and strife and pain and pleasure,
Crowd within one little nest,
Mothers' hearts can find no leisure
Till the children are at rest.

While we sleep the Father waketh,
Working, watching for us all;
In his mighty hands he taketh
All the tasks that we let fall.
We have wrangled, toiled, and striven
Through a long and weary day,
Lo! we rest and help is given,
And the pain is soothed away.

He who loves us will not slumber
While our feeble hands are still,
Blessings that we cannot number
All the hours of darkness fill,
Till the broken links are mended,
And the worst becomes the best,
And the toilsome task is ended
While his children are at rest.

ROY AND TRESSY.

'Twas late one afternoon in the smiling "month of roses." The sun was beginning to look dreamily down on the little village of Sunnyfalls. It had already crept to the farthest corner of the great square dining-room, and was climbing to peep a cheery good-night to a fragrant twining rose that draped the broad, deep window. The tall oak threw a dark shadow across the lawn, and the lowing of the homeward-bound cows all betokened that night was not far distant.

Mrs. Wheeler, a fragile woman of some thirty years, had drawn an easy chair into a corner of the neat latticed porch, and placed a basket of Saturday's mending on a footstool by her side.

There was an expression of sweet content on her pale face as she lifted the half worn garments one by one, putting the stitches here and there. Presently she came to the little worn stockings, and as her needle flew fast to replace the treacherous stitches her mind was equally as active weaving the tenderest of dreams among the bright threads for her darlings.

She was thinking what great men and women such mischievous little boys and girls were apt to make. Then, with a mother's yearning to keep those tender feet from the thorny and rough paths of life, the sweet expression wore into one of sadness, and tears filled her eyes at the thought of losing her little ones in the grown-up son and daughter, and thence out into the whirl of the busy world. Dropping her hands into her lap she was lured into a reverie, which doubtless would have proved a long one had not the pattering of little feet aroused her, to see two beaming faces, with eyes all aglow, fast making their way to mamma, and, in hurried, childish accents, pleading to go to the hills, which were red with luscious strawberries, to gather some for papa's supper. She knew it was late, and hesitated; but noticing the sorry looks that chased all the sunshine away, she consented. After tying on Tressy's soiled pink sun-bonnet, all the while warning them to not stay late, or cross the creek, and being assured they would not, but fill their basket and return right home, mamma put baby's dimpled hand in Roy's, then watched them till they disappeared behind the grove.

Just then the clock on the mantelpiece chimed out the hour of six, which brought to her mind her husband, tired and hungry, who would soon be home from his shop, and no supper. Hastily lighting the fire and preparing to make the tea, she quickly arranged the white table spread, setting two bowls of bread and milk for her little ones' supper, and the more substantial things for Mr. Wheeler and herself. She then resumed her sewing, now and then looking wistfully out of the door for the berry gatherers, or listening for the well-known step of her husband, who owned a small toy-shop in the village one-half mile distant.

Thus, busy with her mending and her thoughts, she quite forgot herself till again the clock aroused her. Wondering at her husband's delay, she dropped her work and started down the lane toward the village. Just as she reached the gate she saw her husband approaching with quick and nervous tread. At sight of his pale, haggard face she paused, while an unspeakable fear thrilled her.

"What is it?" she asked, breathlessly.

"Are they at home—the children?" he gasped, as he clutched at the fence for support. One agonized look from his wife told him they were not. "My God!" came from his ashen lips, while he hoarsely whispered, "They are drowned."

With a stifled cry Mrs. Wheeler sank senseless to the ground. He stood in dumb agony a moment, then, rallying all his strength, and with a fervent prayer for help, he raised the lifeless form of his wife in his arms and bore it to the house.

The sad news had already spread over the village, and many, with sympathizing hearts, were hastening to the now desolate home.

All efforts to revive Mrs. Wheeler were useless. The sudden breaking of the terrible news was more than she could bear. Now and then a wearied sigh was all that betokened life was still there. Her eyes were closed, and the heavy dark curls thrown back from the marble forehead. Mr. Wheeler sat by her side. The dry, burning gaze riveted on the pale face, the rigid brow and compressed lips, told the unbounded anguish within.

It seems that the children had wandered to the river, which wound gracefully among the hills, and on whose banks stands the village of Sunnyfalls, which derived its name from the laughing, leaping water as it swept over a ledge of rocks some ten feet high, just below the rectory. The good rector, as he was wont to do, had wandered to the woods and was intent upon his next day's sermon, when he came across a small basket, and thinking that he was not the only "denizen in the forest" at that late hour he quickly tried to find its owner. He soon spied children's tracks near, which he followed to the water's brink. He could plainly discern the footsteps of two, but nothing to show that they had retraced their steps. Becoming alarmed, he followed the winding of the river as it left the falls, when he was appalled at the sight of a little straw hat and one dainty slipper in a tangle of brush some distance from shore. After rescuing them he hastened to the village.

Mr. Wheeler had closed his shop, and, tired from his day's work, was sauntering leisurely along, enjoying the cool, fragrant breath of evening as it swept o'er the clear waters and among the woodland flowers, when he chanced to meet the much-revered leader of the parish. He was about to accost him in his usual gay and cheery way, when he recognized the dripping hat and mateless slipper. In a few words it was made known to him when and where they were found. The kind father, filled with sickening apprehensions, hastened to the dreadful spot to try, if possible, to find some trace of his children. All efforts were in vain, and he, stupefied with fear, slowly wended his way homeward. As he neared the house he felt his strength failing, while reason seemed wavering. Suddenly a vague hope arose: could it be they were yet safe at home? Quickening his pace he soon met his wife, when the horrible truth flashed upon him and forced those agonizing words that felled the mother to the ground.

For hours kind friends searched the woods far and near. Fires were built, guns fired, and rockets sent into the air, hoping to attract the little wanderers were they still living. Now and then could be heard the distant hallooing: which proved to the anxious-hearted father that thus far their efforts were in vain. Up and down the river groups could be seen sadly watching for the remains.

Night wore into morning. Still the mother lay unconscious. Her husband remained at her bedside, not daring to unclasp the pale, cold hand that clasped his so tightly, as if life itself depended on the grasp. Slowly she began to recover from her stupor, now and then turning her head, while her eyes wandered dreamily around the room. Then she would moan and call her lost ones so pleadingly. Suddenly her face would light up with a sweet smile, and she would think herself with them again, replying to their coaxing, childish requests.

Toward noon word came that a boat was seen floating down the river some miles below with something, they could not determine what, in it, and that a boat had started in pursuit. Men were seen hurrying from every direction down the river, while mothers, with anxious and sympathizing hearts, were trying in every way to relieve the stricken parents. All were eager to know the contents of that lone boat, yet feared lest it might prove to a certainty their worst fears. When about eight miles from the village a boat came suddenly in full sight, and, O joy! there were the little wanderers safe in the strong arms of their kind preservers. As they neared the shore they were greeted with such hearty cheers that the woods resounded for miles around. A messenger was sent to convey the glad news to the sorrowing father, while the crowd followed on with the children.

On hearing the joyful news the kind father turned his gaze toward heaven, his white lips parted, and a heartfelt prayer of thankfulness was poured forth to his Maker; then bowing his head he gave way to a flood of tears, the first that had dimmed his eyes since the sad stroke. He remained at the bedside till the children arrived; then, springing to his feet, he rushed frantically to the door and clasped them both in one long embrace—dearer to him now than ever before.

As they entered their mother's room she ceased her moaning. Long and steadfastly she gazed on them; then, with a despairing wail, she clasped her baby in a death-like embrace, and 'twas with the utmost effort that the child was released. After that she sank into a stupor lasting several hours; then a raging fever followed. For many weary days and nights they watched by the bedside. Often life was despaired of. At last she began to mend, and although slowly at first, she gained some strength every day, but kept a strange silence. In vain they tried to persuade her to speak, if but one word, or even to attract her attention.

The kind physician watched over her with untiring faithfulness till all hope vanished. The vacant look in the once expressive eye told but too plainly that reason had fled. Then with heavy heart and tear-dimmed eyes he gently revealed the sad truth to Mr. Wheeler. It was a matter of time, it might some day return. Poor man, the stroke seemed almost more than he could bear: far worse to him than the loss of his little ones. But he listened without a murmur. Again taking up the round of daily duties, he tried as best he could to fill the place of both father and mother to his more than motherless children.

Mrs. Wheeler was helpless as a child. Her locks, once so dark, were now almost as white as the driven snow. In her most cheerful moods she would accompany her husband into the yard, but soon as the shades of evening began to fall she would take her accustomed place by the open door. Seated there on a rug, her head resting on a chair, she would watch and wait for her babies, the very image of hopelessness.

My little readers, you that have kind papas and mammas, can you think for one moment what great sorrow was in the hearts of those little ones? How they would give all to see their mamma restored to health again? and how they missed the little lullabys that she used to sing when, tired out with play, Tressy would climb into her lap, and there, folded so closely to her warm heart, forgot all her little troubles in sweet slumbers? And Roy at her feet, with his head resting on her knee, would listen, and watch the deepening twilight, till he, too, would become dreamy? Then she would take them to their little bed, and, after listening to their evening prayers, and placing the warmest of kisses on each brow, she would leave them in their Heavenly Father's care. Oh, it was hard! and would they never have their dear mamma back again? Yes, children, it was hard, and had they minded that mother they would have been spared that bitter sorrow. But, instead, they wandered on till they came to the creek, and seeing berries just across, that looked, O! so tempting, and thinking she would not care so very much if they went just the tiniest bit farther, they were led on till within sight of the river. How nice to be there all alone, they thought; and wouldn't it be capital fun to climb into a boat that was tied to a tree near? If they were real careful they certainly would not get hurt. Then there would be no harm in it. They were surely large enough to take care of themselves, and mamma need never know about it. Thus they reasoned till at last they climbed down the bank and into the boat. The water was at its highest, and while they were playing, the rope, being old, gave way. How they cried for help when they found they were out on the black waters all alone. All night they floated on, sometimes catching on small islands, until a stronger current would sweep them away again.

Tressy, tired and hungry, cried herself to sleep. Roy sat by her side, to frightened to think, even for a moment, of sleeping till morning dawned; then, exhausted, he gave up.

Thus they drifted on, silently and undisturbed, till within half a mile of a fearful mill dam, when they were espied and rescued from a watery grave.

Let us look at them again—Mr. Wheeler and his child wife, now that the light of reason has vanished—in their sorrowful home just at twilight.

She sits in her accustomed place, while her head rests, like that of a tired child, on his knee. The children hover around her, but she heeds them not, and, as he tenderly brushes the gray locks from her young brow, great tears roll down his now furrowed cheek, and drop on her forehead. She looks up into his face with a vacant stare, then sighing, rests her head as before.

And now, my little readers, one more word before I leave you.

Whenever you are tempted to do wrong remember the sad story of little Roy and Tressy. Remember that although you may disobey your parents a thousand times without such a sad punishment, the next disobedient act may bring as sad a sorrow to your own home. At least, the time will come, sooner or later, when, too late, you will regret it, and like Roy, would give all gladly could it be made right. And now, while there is yet time, how many will resolve to be obedient?

Methinks I hear a chorus of voices, from the great army of little folks all over our beautiful land, answer, "I will."

Will you help to swell the number?—N. Y. Witness.

When Philo Carpenter and his little band met a presbytery to whom ecclesiastically they were amenable, and who, backed by all the authority of the great General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church of the United States of America, declared them "disqualified to act as members of the Presbyterian church, and no longer to be recognized as such," and his friends were wondering how they should avert or survive the terrible blow, they must have been astounded when he arose and calmly announced: "Divine service will be held in the session-room at the usual hour." It might well have been said at that moment, "This little band has a great leader." For that simple notice was stronger than the whole General Assembly.

Yet withal he was a man of peace. Radically as he differed from men, and earnestly as he sought reforms, he had no personal quarrels. The entire absence of litigation during his long life is proof of his pacific disposition. He never sued a man, and he was never sued but twice in his life. One of them was about a dog, and the plaintiff was non-suited.

Philo Carpenter was sometimes called a "man of one idea," but the record we have rehearsed shows, we think, several ideas—as many, indeed, as most men have, and all good ones. They might perhaps all be reduced to the "one idea"—that grand one of loyalty to the right, loyalty to God and humanity. Oh! that we had many more such men with "one idea." He was sometimes called "an extreme man." If that means that he was in the front rank of progress, at the head of God's marching columns, we accept it as true, and no reproach, but a great honor. Without such men how could there be any advance in the church or the world? Events have proved that he was only ahead of his generation. Almost every one of his positions, once thought extreme, have been reached and occupied by his brethren and his fellow-citizens.

HELPFUL THOUGHTS.

CONTRAST DAVID AND SAUL.—Both had great faults. What then was the difference? It was that David's heart was right. He had many and splendid virtues; his failures were incidental, the weakness of humanity, for which he repented as in dust and ashes. Saul's heart was wrong. The basal principles of his life were evil, and of them he never sincerely repented; his good was incidental, growing out of circumstances. Saul was like a watch with a bad mainspring; David like one with a good mainspring, but with the hands occasionally caught, so as to indicate wrong time. Saul's life was a failure in the end. David's life, even with sufferings for his sins, was a glorious success.

PRACTICAL SUGGESTIONS FROM PELOUBET'S QUARTERLY.

1. God gives us all many opportunities to live happy and useful lives.
2. Life is a probation, testing us whether we will serve God or not.
3. God gives us the aids necessary to make our lives a success.
4. If we fail we shall have only ourselves to blame.
5. Many people have done nobly under more difficult circumstances than ours.
6. The finest qualities and the highest position, without the love of God in the heart, will fail of making a true and noble man.
7. Those who reject God grow worse and worse.

COMMENTS ON THE S. S. LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The defeat of Israel, vs. 1-6. God's people are not always victors. There have been many times in the history of the church when they have "fled before the Philistines;" but in all these cases it will be found that there was a cause. Israel had desired an earthly king, and said in effect that the Lord's guidance was not enough. When God's people put their confidence in human leaders they must expect failure.

2. The death of Saul and his sons, vs. 2-10. We find from the 8th chapter of 1 Chronicles that Jonathan's posterity made an honorable record in after years as "mighty men of valor," but he himself, though brave, high-minded and innocent of any connection with his father's sin, must be involved in the common ruin. At first view this seems hard—unjust even; but the course of Providence in human affairs often presents the same seeming inconsistency. How much suffering, drinking, tobacco-using parents bring on their innocent offspring! How many a one has failed in the race of life through hereditary weakness, physical and moral! But when we come to take a broader view of the subject we find that the ways of God are not so unequal as would appear to our short-sighted vision. There is a celebrated painting by a German artist, called the "Home of the Dragon." It represents a wild mountain pass, showing at the farther end the yawning mouth of a cavern, from which is issuing a gigantic, scaly, horrible monster, while a group of muleteers are seen flying in the wildest terror. Our hereditary weaknesses, those appetites and passions which we inherit from perhaps remote ancestors; these are the "Home of the Dragon." It is here that Satan seems to clutch our poor humanity, as it were, by the throat, but God has provided a Deliverer. Christ was manifested that he might be the destroyer of Satan, and through him the weakest may come off more than conquerors. The more heavily weighted a soul may be in the race of life, the more the divine pity goes out to meet it, and the more abundantly God fulfills his promises of help if only that soul will take hold of him in faith. Instead of an earthly crown God was preparing for Jonathan a heavenly one. It would be hard, indeed, to reconcile the fate of those who suffer from the sins of their parents with any idea of justice if there was no existence beyond the grave. Thus out of the saddest things in human life is born the Christian's most radiant hopes, and the brightest light is always an accompaniment of the deepest shadow.

3. Saul's sad end, vs. 7-13. Saul had cast off God. His massacre of the priests and his quarrel with David had left him without either spiritual or temporal helpers to die the death of a heathen—by his own hand. This was the end of a man who seemed at the outset to combine in himself every worldly advantage—to be, as we say, a born leader. Israel had confided in their king instead of in God, and the record is that such dismay seized them when they witnessed his overthrow that "they forsook their cities and the Philistines came and dwelt in them." This is always the history of every moral reform undertaken without God and trusting in the arm of flesh. Evil is only driven out for awhile. The Philistine comes back to stay. This was the end of the first Anti-masonic struggle, which was made a political rather than a religious movement. And have we not reason to fear that the recent defeat of our temperance hosts, and the raising of the banner of high license where prohibition has hitherto prevailed, is a sign that we may have trusted too much to human methods and human leaders. It behooves us in our struggle against the lodge Baal not to make a similar mistake. The Sauls will fail us. Great names and the most distinguished abilities will be only a dead weight if we trust to them instead of God. And this temptation he has mercifully provided against by so ordering it that the rich and great seldom come forward as advocates of an unpopular reform, and thus the weak things of the world, the humble David with his shepherd's crook, and not Saul, are chosen to confound the things which are mighty.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—Important religious meetings to be held in Chicago soon are:

1. The Christian Conference, led by Mr. Moody, to be held in his church on Chicago Ave., from Sept. 26 to Oct. 6.
2. The American Inter-Seminary Missionary Alliance from October 17 to 20.
3. The anniversary of the American Missionary Association from October 29 to 31, in the New England Congregational church. Dr. R. R. Meredith of Brooklyn, N. Y., is to preach the opening sermon.
4. The National W. C. T. Union meets November 8 to 12 in Battery D.
5. The week following the Illinois State Sabbath Convention will be held.

—Mr. A. M. Delight, well known throughout Chicago as "Tony" Delight, died suddenly at his residence on Warren avenue. Mr. Delight has been a leading barber for many years, and has followed that line of business in Chicago since 1857. He was born on the island of Madeira, of Portuguese parentage, in 1830. In his early life he was better known for his vices than any thing else. He was dissipated and reckless, a hard drinker and a gambler. In 1875, however, a great change was effected in his life by his conversion during Mr. Moody's meetings. He became a member of the First Congregational church, and from the day of his conversion he has been an indefatigable enthusiast in evangelistic work. He has been a frequent helper at the Y. M. C. A. meetings and at the Pacific Garden Mission, and of late years has maintained a mission of his own in the Methodist church block, where his shop is located.

—The twelfth anniversary of the founding of the Pacific Garden Mission in this city, by Col. George R. Clarke and his devoted wife, was celebrated on Sabbath afternoon at the Mission rooms, 100 Van Buren street. The Cynosure regretted the necessity of declining an invitation to be present. The College church at Wheaton having taken their regular collection on that day, voted to send it to aid the mission.

—A meeting at Ben Franklin, Texas, conducted by Major Penn, resulted in 122 conversions.

—The "Congregational Year Book" for 1889 has just been issued, two months later than last year, due to the tardiness of New York Congregationalists in furnishing statistics.

—In Cleveland, Ohio, Central Methodist church recently received nearly a hundred probationers into full connection, South Park church, 104, and Franklin Avenue, 57.

—The Rev. James Brownlee, D.D., for fifty-four years pastor over the Reformed church of Port Richmond, S. I., has just preached his 4,496th sermon. In his congregation are the great-grandchildren of children who received their first communion from him in 1835.

—The Christian Advocate has a word to say about the closing of churches in summer. It declares it "to be a sin in the sight of God, and disgraceful to those who do it. Let the Roman Catholics teach the Protestants a lesson. When are their churches shut up and their people left to scatter?"

—The series of religious meetings at Lumberton, N. C., are progressing with unabated interest and attendance. In fact, the interest appears to be deepening. Over one hundred souls are reported to have openly professed Christ to be their Saviour.

—The minutes of the late General Assembly of Cumberland Presbyterian church put the total membership of the church at 160,185; ministers, 1,595; licentiates, 248; candidates, 231; total contributions, $650,234; value of church property, $2,368,800.

—There were added on profession of faith nearly one thousand souls a week, on an average, during the year ending May 1 last, to the churches connected with the Presbyterian General Assembly, North. The total number added on examination is given at 51,062.

GOOD WORDS

FOR THE FALL CAMPAIGN.

A cause which has such friends as these cannot fail, for they are the friends of God. Let us all take courage and renew the battle for the truth.

Will do what I can for what I count one of the best papers in the land.—W. W. McMILLAN.

I expect to do all I can to help circulate the Cynosure and build up this reform. You can count on me for my lifetime.—L. POWERS.

Will do what circumstances will permit. We are fast passing from time to eternity. What we do must be done quickly.—M. MERRICK.

I will do all I can while I live for the Cynosure, with God's help. I can't do much. I do not need any helps of papers, etc., but prayers.—MRS. L. H. HULL.

The little that I am able to do hereafter, as heretofore, I hope to do in circulating copies of the Cynosure and witnessing against secretism.—WILLIAM F. DAVIS.

I will try to get some subscribers for the Cynosure. I consider Masonry treason against our government, and all secret societies of the same kin.—W. R. MORLEY.

Count me one of the "Old Guard." I got the first number of the Cynosure, and have been with it ever since. How many of your readers can beat that?—J. S. HICKMAN.

With all my heart I will work for the Cynosure and its principles too. I believe it to be the best organized element on reform in our nation. God bless the Cynosure.—H. CURTIS.

There are three of us here who expect to take the Cynosure as long as we live. I try for new subscribers but do not succeed very well. We are pretty thick in the prohibition fight just now.—C. QUICK.

I shall do what I can in the way of securing subscribers for the Christian Cynosure. I will make a special effort as its agent whenever I can this year. I hope I may do some good on that line.—C. SMITH.

The Lord willing, you will have my help as far as I am able, and I will go to Him for help and report in due time. If the Pole Star is darkened the image of the beast will soon marshal his forces.—I. LEADBETTER.

I shall do what I can myself and try to get some younger one or ones enlisted in the cause. The paper is a most important and valuable one, and is increasing in interest and value all the time.—MRS. L. C. ANDREWS.

God says break every yoke and let the oppressed go free, and I fail to see any oppression equal to lodge-oath oppression in this wide world. So you see there is no other way for me to do only to promote the interests of the N. C. A.—M. L. WORCESTER.

I will endeavor to secure all the subscribers I can for the paper as well as the books. I am interested in reform work so much needed. Some people live as they list, hoping for a future probation. Such will meet a terrible disappointment.—H. JOHNSON.

I will try in the near future to do something in the way of obtaining a few subscribers. I am so situated that I can do but little in that line. Have taken the Cynosure ever since about second or third number, and a few copies missed after the fire.—G. W. CHAMP.

I received your card and will do all in my power to get subscribers. But the people are careless. I am going to put a copy in Hopkinton College if the president will accept it. I shall ask him soon and hope he may give me the liberty to do so. It would, no doubt, be read by a great many young men.—P. GUTHRIE.

I never appreciated the Cynosure as much as now. My experience in the reform field deepens the conviction every year that all the powers of darkness are marshaling under the tactics of secretism, and, as in the late civil war, the nearing struggle will be prolonged and

Take Hood's Sarsaparilla 100 Doses One Dollar

The Chief Reason for the marvellous success of Hood's Sarsaparilla is found in the fact that this medicine actually accomplishes all that is claimed for it. Its real merit has won for Hood's Sarsaparilla a popularity and sale greater than that of any other blood purifier. It cures Scrofula, all Humors, Dyspepsia, etc. Prepared only by C. I. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass.

imperiled in proportion as we allow these tactics to work in our ranks. God helping me, I will do all I can for the Cynosure this year.—M. A. GAULT.

SUBSCRIPTION LETTERS.

The following have made remittances of money to the Cynosure from Sept. 9 to 14 inclusive:

W. Schmitt, G. Swanson, Sr., D. Marshall, W. H. Parker, Will Briggs, Rev R. Smith, G. P. Loomis, J. Carrington, R. Fraser, L. H. Bohrer, H. B. Wolcott, I. P. Bennett, G. W. James, Mrs. H. W. Hodgeman, R. Burk, Mrs. R. A. Clark, V. Geil, Rev W. Fenton, Mrs. M. C. Eaton, T. White.

It is astonishing how rapidly the feeble and debilitated gain strength and vigor when taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla. For what are called "broken-down constitutions," nothing else has proved so effective as this powerful but perfectly safe medicine.

DONATIONS.

The Minister's Fund for the South received during the year corresponding with volume XXI. of the Cynoure, $746.75, and was all expended according to the wish of the donors. We begin to count again this week, thankful for the generosity of the friends of the reform, and hoping their good record for the past will be exceeded the coming year.

HOME AND HEALTH.

THE NERVES AND THE MOODS.

Nothing in nature is more marvelous than the net-work of nerves constituting what we sometimes carelessly call our nervous system. Each nerve is a telegraphic cord in itself. Each is a part of the whole complex and inimitable system of telegraphy by which messages from the headquarters in the brain are sent to the minute stations in the extremities. If this telegraphic system of nerves were erected on diminutive poles outside of our bodies, it would be a most peculiar exhibit. Happily for us, our nervous systems are, as it were, a harmonious arrangement of underground wires, carefully buried within us, and deftly concealed from outside observation. We cannot see them, nor know whether they are too slack or too tightly strained. We can tell when we are disturbed, for neuralgic agony shoots along their course from station to station. When we are glum, and dismal, and low-spirited, the telegraphic apparatus is out of order, and the nerve forces are demoralized.

When nerves work wrong, it is as when telegraphic poles are shaky or wires tangled or crossed, or currents irregular, or batteries confused. According to the irregularity of our nerves, so are our irregular moods. If all is right we are happy and cheery and sunshiny. But let the batteries blunder, or the currents cross, or the wires become entangled, and we are irritable, sulky, ill-tempered or angry, as the case may be. In some of our distressful moods we pout, and sulk, and misinterpret, and misunderstand. We take offense where no offense is intended, and we impute to others motives which are never conceived by them. At times when the moods are out of sort, we think the whole world is persecuting us, and we, the afflicted objects of persecution, are, above all other human creatures, singled out for martyrdom.

There are circumstances under which most of us can, without insuperable difficulty, rise from the moodiness which is brought about by letting the nerves have their own way. Mental and physical diet has much to do with it. Brooding over real sorrows and imaginary miseries will make the best of us moody and wretched. Nursing grief and affronts and telling the sad story of our woes has as depressing an effect as narcotic drugs. Sleeping in unventilated rooms often produces chronic wretchedness, even if these rooms be furnished with the appliances of wealth and refinement. Association with grim persons is depressing and dispiriting. Good health, mental, spiritual and bodily, is worth working for. It casts out the malaria of moodiness and lifts us into the sunlight of joy. Good health is more easily attained than most people suppose.—Christian at Work.

SAVE YOUR STRENGTH.—Young mothers, be as chary of your strength as a miser of his money. You will have abundant use for all at your command, in the rearing of your children. All used unnecessarily is wasted, squandered. You have a certain life supply, and when this is exhausted you must fail, though that exhaustion may occur at 40 years of age. Like the moments, never returning, the vital supply, that was intended for the whole life, cannot return when once wasted. Let little feet run up and down stairs, to do little errands; it will do the children no harm to do that part, and will favor you very much. Do not lift a whole tub, or even a pail of water, if it in any way over-exerts you. A little planning, a little time taken for a hard effort, a little rest taken when you are weary, will prove economy. Overwork is as disastrous as the payment of exorbitant interest.—Hall's Journal of Health.

TO CLEAN SILVER.—One-half pound of sal soda added to eight quarts of water; when at a boiling heat dip the pieces of silver, and immediately wash in soap-suds, and wipe dry with a piece of cotton flannel. Ayer's Hair Vigor

IS the "ideal" Hair-dressing. It restores the color to gray hair; promotes a fresh and vigorous growth; prevents the formation of dandruff; makes the hair soft and silken; and imparts a delicate but lasting perfume.

"Several months ago my hair commenced falling out, and in a few weeks my head was almost bald. I tried many remedies, but they did no good. I finally bought a bottle of Ayer's Hair Vigor, and, after using only a part of the contents, my head was covered with a heavy growth of hair. I recommend your preparation as the best in the world."—T. Munday, Sharon Grove, Ky.

"I have used Ayer's Hair Vigor for a number of years, and it has always given me satisfaction. It is an excellent dressing, prevents the hair from turning gray, insures its vigorous growth, and keeps the scalp white and clean."—Mary A. Jackson, Salem, Mass.

"I have used Ayer's Hair Vigor for promoting the growth of the hair, and think it unequalled. For restoring the hair to its original color, and for a dressing, it cannot be surpassed."—Mrs. Geo. La Fever, Eaton Rapids, Mich.

"Ayer's Hair Vigor is a most excellent preparation for the hair. I speak of it from my own experience. Its use promotes the growth of new hair and makes it glossy and soft. The Vigor is also a cure for dandruff."—J. W. Bowen, Editor "Enquirer," McArthur, Ohio.

"I have used Ayer's Hair Vigor for the past two years, and found it all it is represented to be. It restores the natural color to gray hair, causes the hair to grow freely, and keeps it soft and pliant."—Mrs. M. V. Day, Cohoes, N. Y.

"My father, at about the age of fifty, lost all the hair from the top of his head. After one month's trial of Ayer's Hair Vigor the hair began coming, and, in three months, he had a fine growth of hair of the natural color."—P. J. Cullen, Saratoga Springs, N. Y.

Christian Church.

A pamphlet of 52 pages, by Chas. A. S. Temple.

The following from Rev. H. H. Hinman shows his estimate of its contents:

"I have read with great interest 'Pagan Counterfeits in the Christian Church' by Chas. A. S. Temple. I regard the subject discussed as important, and its presentation both able and timely. There is a most manifest drift in all our Protestant denominations towards unauthorized ritualism and the substitution of human inventions in place of the simplicity of the Gospel, as given by Christ and his apostles. In calling attention to this tidal wave of formalism, the author has conferred a lasting benefit on the church of Protestantism."

FARM NOTES.

MAKING HORSES GENTLE.

A horse can be made to "fret its life out" by the inadvertency of man. Many a good horse is sold as worthless because it is spoiled by bad management. Most drivers use the line, and whip the horse too much, and are too careful about having any object come in contact with the animal, fearing it will frighten the beast. I will simply give my own plan. I familiarize my horse to being hit unexpectedly about the body, back and legs, and teach it to stop short when spoken to, even if a vehicle is crashing down at its heels. Some think this cannot be done, but I have failed to see the horse yet that cannot be familiarized by right management if the work is commenced early enough, or before vicious habits are formed. A lady 80 years of age has driven a spirited horse of mine over extremely hilly roads, with no hold-back straps or irons upon the thills, and in perfect safety. I take special pains to hit my horse—carefully at first—when not expecting it, on different parts of the body, and to push the buggy against it, and to dangle the thills about the legs, and to allow the vehicle to run against it until the animal learns that it is not to be injured by these sudden attacks. It is a bad plan to talk to a horse in what some term a quieting tone. A tremulous voice will awaken suspicions, and agitate instead of quiet. A strong, positive whoa, with a firm drawing of the reins, will bring a steed to a stand still—after training—and attract its attention from whatever concerned it before. It will become so accustomed to the obedience of voice that it will come to a sudden halt if rods away. The owner should drive the animal himself, generally, and intrust others as to his manner of management when it is necessary to change drivers, and insist that the method be adopted. Never whip a horse when he is frightened or nervous, or try to force it up to the object that has caused the alarm; draw in on the reins suddenly, speak out with assurance that you are not afraid, then turn the animal a little way from the unpleasant sight and bid it go. In an instant all is forgotten. A blow of a whip upon a frightened horse gives it double cause for violent action, and if it don't run it's a fool. A naturally timid horse may be made passive by familiarizing it with all sorts of strange sounds and queer-looking objects. The most spirited city horses seldom get frightened at anything they hear or see. In loading never put on more than the animal can pull readily. Good-fitting harness and reasonable loading, with right mastership, are proof against balky horses, i. e., animals thus cared for will never know other than obedience.

FOR NAIL-WOUNDS IN HOOFS.—You ask practical farmers for practical facts. Here is one that every owner of a horse should know. Nails will be thrown into the street, despite of all we can say to the contrary. Have a small vial of muriatic acid on hand, and when a horse has picked up a nail go for the vial first of all, then get pinchers and pull out the nail; soon as it is out pour in the acid, before the hoof contracts; then put cotton on top and cover with tallow, melting it with a hot poker. The next morning open and add more acid, closing as before. Do this three times; then apply cotton and tallow only daily for about a week; the wound will then take care of itself. I have had more than a dozen nails, from heavy spikes down to seven-pennies, in my horses' feet, and cured them all this way. Do not pull out the nail first, and then go for the vial, as you will not thus get the acid to the bottom of the wound. I know this to be reliable, and only ask fellow-farmers to try it when the opportunity offers.—B. Ezra Herr.

HINTS ON SHOEING.—Do not let horses' shoes remain over three to six weeks, dependent on the amount of use and the toughness and growth of the hoofs. Each time after taking off the shoes, if the road permits, let him go barefoot as long as no injury follows, as this expands the hoofs and keeps them in more perfect condition. Some horses can be used barefoot, off pavements, for months, or the whole year round, and work better than if shod. Never allow the frog of the foot to be cut out or trimmed, unless somewhat ragged, and then only a very little, as it acts as a cushion to the foot and lessens or even prevents bruising when striking a stone or other hard substance. See that the hoof is not pared beyond absolute necessity, and that the shoe is properly fitted to it, and not the hoof to the shoe. Do not allow the bottom of the hoof to be burnt or even scorched with a hot shoe, in order to make it set evenly, but pare it properly to do so. Always use the lightest shoes compatible with the condition of the roads and the work required of the horse.—American Agriculturist for June.

HORSE DENTISTRY.—More trouble and lack of condition are caused by ulcerated and irregular teeth than is generally supposed. Such teeth should be promptly removed with forceps. There is no reason to doubt that a horse with ulcerated teeth suffers as intensely from toothache as a human subject. Irregular growth, or fractures of the enamel on the outer edges make the teeth so rough as to injure the inside of the cheek, sometimes causing ulcers. In other cases some of the grinders grow more slowly than others, and fail to meet those in the opposite jaw, causing what is called "quidding," or imperfect mastication of the food. The remedy is to file the teeth into the proper shape. Horse dentistry is now recognized as an important branch of veterinary practice.

The tortures of dyspepsia and sick headache, the sufferings of scrofula, the agonizing itch and pain of salt rheum, the disagreeable symptoms of catarrh, are removed by Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Hall's Hair Renewer eradicates and prevents the formation of dandruff, thickens the growth, and beautifies the hair as no other preparation will.

FROM WASHINGTON'S FAREWELL ADDRESS.

"Toward the preservation of your Government and the permanency of your present happy state, it is requisite, not only that you steadily discountenance irregular opposition to its acknowledged authority, but also that you resist, with care, the spirit of innovation upon its principles, however specious the pretext. * * *

"All combinations and associations, under whatever plausible character, with the real design to direct, control, counteract or awe the regular deliberation and action of the constituted authorities, are destructive to this fundamental principle [National Unity] and of fatal tendency. . . . However combinations or associations of the above description may now and then answer popular ends, they are likely in the course of time and things to become potent engines, by which cunning, ambitious and unprincipled men will be enabled to subvert the power of the people, and to usurp for themselves the reins of Government; destroying afterward the very engines which have lifted them to unjust dominion."

PETITION.

To the Senators and Representatives of the United States, in Congress Assembled:

The undersigned, citizens of the United States, recalling with gratitude our late National Centennial, and believing that the advice of Washington, contained in his FAREWELL ADDRESS, should not only be written upon the hearts of his countrymen, but embodied in their laws,

RESPECTFULLY PETITION YOUR HONORABLE BODY:

1. To withdraw all charters given by Congress to such organizations as are described in the aforesaid FAREWELL ADDRESS.

2. To provide that it shall be a penal offense to make any secret oath, promise or pledge of obedience, loyalty, submission or co-operation to or with any officer or authority not recognized or instituted by law; or to any party claiming to be such officer or authority, whether of any voluntary society, corporation or association; and that every such secret oath, promise or pledge, heretofore made, shall be void and of no effect.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

CHICAGO.

An attack is being renewed on the smoke nuisance as a preparatory clearing up before the 1892 fair.

A spark from an electric light set fire to some light goods in the richly-furnished booth of Charles Gossage & Co. in the Exposition Saturday evening, soon after 10 o'clock. The difficulty of reaching the fire through the dispersing crowds allowed it to spread until the costly exhibits of Marshall Field & Co. and other leading dry goods houses were burned. The exhibitors lost about $50,000, but the building was but slightly injured.

THE GREAT STORM

of last week, which swept upon New York and the Atlantic coast, is proved to have been the worst hurricane of recent years by the high tides and storm-waves which have done such damage along the coast. In New York city the cellars and first floors of buildings along the water front are flooded. Along the New Jersey coasts the low beaches and railroad tracks were submerged. Atlantic City was completely cut off from the mainland. At Coney Island all night long the waves dashed with a tremendous roar over the breakwater at Manhattan and Brighton Beach. The waves at the Battery swept over the sea wall into the street. Never in the memory of the oldest inhabitant had the tide run so high. It crept up to the level of the streets. The East and North rivers were almost deserted.

Advices from the Delaware breakwater state that it was the most furious storm known to the oldest inhabitants. At least two score vessels were beached. The beach from Rehoboth to Lewes is strewn with wrecks. It is thought at least fifty lives were lost. Men were seen clinging to the rigging of the fast-sinking vessels, frantically yelling for help. The life-saving crew was powerless to render assistance, owing to the fury of the gale. The loss to vessel property at Breakwater will reach $5,000,000. Further up the country peach orchards are ruined.

At Long Branch, Ocean City, Seabright, Atlantic City and other points south of New York the damage was immense, railways, residences and breakwaters being washed away and some of the large hotels were ruined, as the sea rushed through the lower stories. The loss of life at sea has not been learned.

COUNTRY.

Reports to the Farmers' Review indicate that the hog crop of 1889 will equal, if it does not exceed, the yield of last year.

In the State Constitutional Convention at Santa Fe, N. M., the majority refused to permit the incorporation of the Woman's Suffrage clause in an article relating to elective franchise.

In the Wyoming Valley in Pennsylvania Tuesday night a half-mile of ground settled over a coal mine. Several mules were in the mine at the time and all were killed. The miners escaped with but the loss of their tools.

Aledo, Ill., has a new system of water works just completed. Water was thrown on top of a four-story hotel from two hydrants at the same time. The water supply is inexhaustible, coming from an artesian well 3,300 feet deep—the deepest in the United States.

In Yellowstone Park the geysers and boiling springs are reported to be in a furious state of activity, including the wells that were supposed to be extinct. Scientists claim that this outburst has some connection with the great storm now prevailing on the Atlantic coast.

In his recent charge to the grand jury Judge White, of Kansas City, called attention to the existence of the new State law prohibiting marriage between whites and blacks.

In the Superior Civil Court at Worcester, Mass., Monday, Dr. Louis Morasse, of Southbridge, secured a verdict for $1,720 against the Rev. Father Brochu, a Catholic priest, because the latter denounced the doctor (a divorced man) from the altar for being married to his second wife by a justice of the peace.

The explosion of a boiler used on the farm of John W. Snyder, near Carbon-dale, Ill., resulted Monday in the death of five men. Another man who had just moved away from the boiler was knocked down and one of his legs broken.

Water from an abandoned mine burst into the White Ash Colliery at Golden, Col., on Monday afternoon, drowning ten miners, whose bodies cannot be recovered for two or three weeks.

Forest fires in Montana Sunday night have done nearly $1,000,000 worth of damage. The flames spread with such rapidity that many persons narrowly escaped with their lives. One man is known to have been burned, and it is thought that several others have perished.

The St. Joseph, Mo., Exposition met with a great disaster Sunday night. The crowd was far greater than at any time since the opening. About 10:30 o'clock, just as the entertainment in the great amphitheater had closed, a fire broke out in the main hall, 1,100 feet in length, and filled with all manner of exhibits. The entire building and contents were consumed.

Bamberger, Bloom & Co., one of the three largest wholesale dry goods and notion houses in Louisville, Ky., were burned out Sunday. The loss will already reach nearly $1,000,000. Four firemen were caught by falling walls and killed, and two more are reported under the debris.

A Mormon emigrant train on the Norfolk & Western railroad was wrecked early Sunday morning near Lynchburg, Va. The wreck was caused by a small bridge giving away after the engine and baggage car had passed over it. Two cars, carrying 160 persons, were hurled into a creek several feet below the track. The cars were badly wrecked, but no one was killed or even badly injured.

Thursday night, at Ticonderoga, N. Y., John Gordon, an employee of a paper mill, fell asleep near the machinery, and two other workmen, to scare him, tied a rope about his feet and then threw it over a revolving shaft. They could not cut the rope in time and Gordon was killed. One of the jokers has become insane from the shock.

Forest fires in the vicinity of Bangor, Me., did much damage last week. Country roads were impassable on account of the heat. The cities of Fredrickton and Moncton, N. B., were surrounded by flames at one time.

A Meridian, Miss., dispatch says: "The white people of Newton county, especially in the vicinity of Decatur, have been much disturbed by reports that the Negroes were arming and organizing. The result is that the white people are arming themselves, and the merchants have been unable to supply the demand for Winchester."

FOREIGN.

The great London strike is now practically settled, the dock directors having agreed to the latest compromise offered by Cardinal Manning that the advance in wages shall go into effect Nov. 4. The Lord Mayor had a conference with the dock directors and assured them that the men would resume work on Monday.

Chakir Pasha, the governor of Crete, has banished from the island four prominent Christians, one of whom was a member of the Cretan Assembly. The Greek newspapers in commenting upon the action of the governor unanimously denounce the perfidy of the porte.

Large numbers of nihilists are said to have arrived in Denmark recently, and it is feared an attempt is to be made on the life of the Czar during his visit to Copenhagen.

Father Sentenne, of Notre Dame, Montreal, has issued a pastoral denouncing the Knights of Labor and Labor day. The latter, he says, was for the head of the church to condemn. Labor day, in its present shape, was nothing more than a revival of paganism, and was similar to the fetes organized during the French revolution, when the goddess of liberty was the supreme ruler, and God and religion was banished.

A cable dispatch from Zanzibar to the government of the Congo State says: "Henry M. Stanley, on leaving the basin of the Albert Nyanza, endeavored to make his way southward by passing to the west of the Victoria Nyanza. He failed, however, in this attempt. He then went northward and reached the eastern shore of the lake. Emin Pasha accompanied him. After a long stay on the borders of the lake, awaiting supplies from Msalala and Tabora, Stanley, leaving Emin Pasha, marched in the direction of Mombassa. He is expected to reach the eastern seacoast about the end of October."

HAVE YOU READ IT?

It will create a sensation and "open" the eyes of every true American to see the "Danger Ahead," and expose the secret of Rome's attack upon our Public Schools. This wonderful book is none other than

THE SECRET INSTRUCTIONS OF THE JESUITS.

Published by an ex-Romanist.

This work is a translation from the Latin of the "Secret Instructions of the Jesuit Society." Its revelations are startling, showing to what depths of deceit the Jesuit priest and all connected with this Order of "Spies" and "Traitors" will descend to accomplish their unholy aims. It is printed in the original Latin with the English translation parallel, thus doing away with the anticipated charge of forgery by those who set a premium on murder and treason. A history of the Order of Jesuits and their expulsion from every Catholic country is given; also, the reason why the Public Schools must go.

The Good Templars of Illinois held their State meeting at Streator a few days since in the Methodist church. Their reports show a loss of fifty-five lodges and 2,715 members during the past year, nearly one-fourth of the whole number at the beginning of the year. This is a very hopeful evidence that the real friends of the temperance cause are becoming aware of the relation this of lodge incubus to the reform and are casting it off.

Foreigners brought to America their plans of alien lodgery in the management of the interests of laboring men. These have thriven beyond all right and reason here, and have gone back to England. The late great strike on the London docks has been settled, but last Wednesday three thousand laborers assembled at one of the docks and demanded that new men not belonging to their secret union be discharged. The insolent demand was refused, and Cardinal Manning, the representative of the Pope, was called upon to interfere. He promised to exhort the men not to molest the "blacklegs." The mayor of London told them to behave or he would put down any riotous proceeding with force.

Benevolence is yet a mighty name to conjure with among the Masons. They bought a valuable property at about one quarter its value a few years ago for an orphan asylum, and made a great Grand Lodge ado over its dedication, with Dr. Thomas and Bishop Samuel Fallows to work in the ornamental part of the performance by way of religion. The greatest number of poor forsaken orphans we ever heard of in the institution was four, and one of them was paying for board and lodging. Any warm-hearted Christian woman could fill the building in a week with cases in genuine need, if the Masons had founded it with an honest purpose. But as it is, it is an excellent apology for a grand dance every winter, and a great picnic every summer. The "benevolent Masons," so called in the reports, held such a picnic lately. The day was spent in voting for the prettiest woman, parades by the Masonic militia, races for boys, for girls, for fat men, for old men, and closed with a ladies' egg race." Those amusements seemed eminently adapted to Masonic tastes.

Rev. Henry Grattan Guinness, of the celebrated Missionary Training School in London, gave a thrilling address in Farwell Hall Monday noon. He is on his way to Boston, where on October 2nd he assists in the opening of a training school for missionaries similar to the English institution. On the same day another school of like character opens in Minneapolis. It is a guarantee for the good management of the Boston school that Rev. Dr. Gordon will be at its head. Mr. Guinness several years ago turned over to the American Baptists the successful missions begun by the members of his school on the Congo. He now is earnestly looking toward the immense and populous region of the Soudan, which extends from ocean to ocean between the Sahara desert and the Congo country. His enthusiasm and eloquence has called out twenty volunteers in Kansas who will shortly in his company sail for Africa to pioneer the mission work through the unknown and dangerous paths of that vast interior.

The courts at Marion, Iowa, have decided in favor of the Grand Lodge of that State in its rejection of the Scotch Rite of Cerneau. Masons who belonged to the latter had secured a temporary injunction restraining the Grand Lodge from executing the cut-throat penalties of Masonry upon their persons, which having "been raised from a dead level to a living perpendicular" were sacred to Hiram. The Iowa Scotch Rite Masons are under the immediate jurisdiction of Albert Pike. His hold is too strong upon the Iowa—we were about to say courts, but will say Masons. The latter, however, are in another vexatious quarrel. Just now, when they want much to visit Washington for Pike's benediction and to participate in the performances of the Knight Templars, an order from the head of the Knights forbids them, because the Iowa Masons of that degree have shown a rebellious spirit toward his commands. We do not see but that the Iowa Masons will have to start a new secret society to save themselves.

Religion in our American common schools has a most able advocate in Prof. L. T. Townsend, of Boston Theological Seminary. Every reader of our third page will be thankful for the powerful argument copied from the pages of Our Day for September. Mr. Dawson, the late Commissioner of Education, says in his annual report that during the ten years, 1876-86, the growth of the public school system has outstripped the increase of population by 1.6 per cent. He says also a good word for the South, where the gain has been most marked. The colored children are apportioned an equal share of the school funds, unless in the State of Delaware, and their schools are kept open as long and under as well paid teachers as those of the white children. The funds for the support of these schools are furnished mainly by the white inhabitants, and after making due allowance for all the sums that have been furnished for the education of the Negroes through private sources and through the taxes raised among themselves, it may still be said that the children of those once held in servitude in the South are being educated by the sons of their former masters.

Major J. W. Powell, of the U. S. Geological Survey, addressed the late American Association for the Advancement of Science on the subject of music. The present attainment of that science, in which we are delighted as well as instructed, has been reached from crudest beginnings when men began to hum or chant in cadences to the measures of the dance. We are too frequently reminded that a strong likeness to this original may be heard even in the music of the house of God, and especially in the Sabbath-school, when the noble and beautiful service of praise degenerates into a kind of thumpity-thump, threshing-machine jumble of words and tones, out of which a Hot-tentot might extricate spiritual ideas and emotions, but which defy translation into English. The performers would understand this so soon as they should read the poetry as they attempt to sing it. Very much of our Sabbath-school and "Gospel-meeting" music, we are sorry to say, encourages just this kind of aboriginal singing. But as for Major Powell's theory, we doubt it. The earlier the human record, the more emphatic is the confirmation of the Scripture record. Polytheism fades with the most remote history, and we come within range of the days when one God, and he the true, was worshiped. The music of these early days, we are inclined to believe, came not from the dance, but was rather the involuntary vocal accompaniment of the voice of praise and prayer, when the soul was moved and elevated by the holiest emotions. As angels sing while devils howl, we prefer to think our music came from above our heads than below them.

BIBLE TEMPERANCE.

BY REV. S. F. PORTER.

What has the all-wise Creator taught us in his Word concerning the use of wine? As food, it is repeatedly named with corn and oil and milk and honey. The grape was, perhaps, the most popular of all the Oriental fruits. Taken fresh from the vine, it was delicious; and in the many forms in which it was preserved, it was a special favorite. The juice was ranked with milk and oil as nutritious and delightful. Song of Solomon 5: 1: "I have eaten my honeycomb with my honey; I have drunk my wine with my milk." Isa. 55: 1: "Yea, come, buy wine and milk, without money and without price." Isaac, in blessing Jacob, says (Gen. 27: 28): "God give thee of the dew of heaven, and the fatness of the earth, and plenty of corn and wine." So God says to his people, if they would love and obey him (Deut. 11: 14): "I will give . . . the first rain, and the latter rain, that thou mayest gather in thy corn, and thy wine, and thine oil." Thus wine as food is mentioned again and again in the inspired volume, with no word of disapproval. On the contrary it is continually classed with corn (i. e., bread or grain), and oil, and milk, and honey, as a blessing and a good gift from the Heavenly Father.

Why, then, do the Scriptures so frequently condemn the use of wine? The answer is plain enough: The Bible forbids the use of wine when it is not food; and alcoholic wine is not food. When wine ferments it forms alcohol, and then it is not food, but poison, and the use of it God has prohibited. Prov. 23: 31, 32: "Look not thou upon the wine when it is red, when it giveth its color in the cup, when it moveth itself aright. At the last it biteth like a serpent and stingeth like an adder." This is a very perfect description of intoxicating wine; and shows quite clearly what our liquor men term the head. Such wine we are commanded not to look upon, but utterly to reject it: it has a snake in it. Such "wine is a mocker, strong drink is raging, and whosoever is deceived thereby is not wise." Prov. 20: 1. "Who hath woes? Who hath sorrow? Who hath contentions? Who hath babbling? Who hath wounds without cause? Who hath redness of eyes? They that tarry long at the wine (alcoholic); they that go to seek mixed (or drugged) wine." Prov. 23: 29, 30. Such things could never be said of the pure, unfermented wine, which the ancients used for food.

Do the names used in the Bible distinguish the different states of the wine? There are two words that signify wine in general: Tayin, Hebrew, which is employed 116 times in the Old Testament; and Oinos, Greek, used in the New Testament twenty-seven times, and qualified by adjectives as occasion requires. The Hebrew word tiros occurs thirty-five times in the Old Testament, and is translated "new wine." Some think that this word meant unfermented wine; and perhaps it did for a time. But new wine soon fermented in that climate, and it was especially poisonous. Others mocking said, "These men are full of new wine." Acts 2: 13. Besides these there are three or four words used in the Hebrew: hemar, seven times; gnases (sweet wine), four times; mimesak and sabe, once or twice. Shekar is used nineteen times to designate strong drink. Sikera, meaning the same thing in Greek, is used once or twice; and glukos (new wine), signifying sweet wine in Greek, is found a time or two.

Thus we see that it is not by a name, but by a description of the liquid that God has prohibited alcoholic poison. It is when it is inflamed (red) "when it giveth its color in the cup, when it moveth itself aright" (has the bead), "look not upon it!" pass it by! utterly reject it! "for at the last it biteth like a serpent and stingeth like an adder." Oh, what millions of precious lives would have been saved through the ages past if men had listened to the words of the Great Father, and never accustomed their tongues to the tang of the serpent's poison! And how much suffering of the innocent and the helpless would have been prevented! And what millions of millions of means would have been saved wherewith to bless mankind!

Nadab and Abihu, the sons of Aaron, appear to have been temporarily demented by drinking alcoholic wine when they insulted the Lord by using forbidden fire in sacrifice. "And the Lord spake unto Aaron, saying, 'Do not drink wine, nor strong drink, thou nor thy sons with thee, when ye go into the tabernacle of the congregation, lest ye die.'" Lev. 10: 9. In like manner it was forbidden to kings to drink wine or strong drink (Prov. 31: 4, 5) lest they should "forget the law and pervert the judgment of any of the afflicted." The Nazarites also took a vow to abstain from the fruit of the vine; so that they refused all wine, whether fermented or unfermented. The Rechabites, too, utterly rejected wine from generation to generation, according to the charge of Jonadab, the son of Rechab, their ancestor. Jer. 35: 8. During the seven days' feast of the Passover the Jews were prohibited the use of any fermented food. Ex. 12: 19. "Seven days shall there be no leaven found in your houses; for whosoever eateth that which is leavened, even that soul shall be cut off from the congregation of Israel." By such means the divine warning against the subtle poison of fermented drink was again and again reiterated. For the necessity of it was great, because of the many temptations and dangers in the way of fallen human nature in the use of these things.

One of the most subtle stratagems of the enemy consists in perverting the divine commandment. Instead of utterly rejecting the fermented wine, which "at the last biteth like a serpent and stingeth like an adder," it is assumed that God approves of the alcoholic poison as a beverage; but it must be used temperately. This has been the cry for more than four thousand years; and yet the true line between the temperate and the intemperate of alcoholic wine has never been discovered. Nor will it ever be while this world of ours stands. FOR THERE IS NO SUCH LINE. The only temperate line is between wine that is food and unfermented, and wine that is poison because it is fermented. And the same thing is true with regard to cider. We get some insight into the vintage of Bible times by the apple orchards and mills and presses and cider-making in early New England. When the rich current began to flow how the children and youth gathered about to taste the new cider—a delightful feast, as harmless as milk. But the bearded men rejected it as tasteless until fermentation produced the alcoholic tang with which they could wrestle. Cider was good for nothing to them without the strength of the poison. This taste they had acquired, for it was not natural. They had when children a love for the pure juice of the apple. And thus it has been through all the ages with wine; men rejected the pure juice, which they loved in childhood, and cherished that liquor which at length will sting like an adder. And the church has been deceived and gone astray; and learned ministers and faithful elders and deacons have declared that there is no such thing as wine that is not fermented; and that whatever is said in commendation of wine by the inspired writers of the Bible is said of fermented wine, having alcoholic poison in it.

"Oh," says one learned doctor of divinity, "you believe in the two-wine theory." No, doctor, I believe in wine that passes through two different states; in one it is food, in the other it is poisonous; and in that state God forbids its use as a beverage. It is certain that cider is at first as harmless as milk; but afterward it has the poison of the serpent. Do you believe in two ciders? We all know that cider is called cider when it comes from the press as truly as after it is fermented; and so it is with wine. And yet the wily destroyer of men has beguiled the learned Bible critics. They affirm that the gentle Jesus created two or three barrels of fermented wine at a marriage feast to gratify the already half-intoxicated guests! John 2: 10. "Credat Judeus Appelles, non ego!"

The wine the dear Saviour made, we may be sure, was sweet and delightful food for children and youth, with no bite of the snake nor sting of the adder. That was the "good wine" which was reserved until the last. To cap the climax, in this diabolical conspiracy against mankind, the universal church of Christ was persuaded to use the wine that God had prohibited at the Lord's table. And how many precious souls, just escaping from the fetters of appetite, have been ensnared again by Satan there. Tasting again the wine that "biteth like a serpent," they turned backward and rushed down the drunkard's road to everlasting ruin. Or, holding the breath, they passed the cup hastily on without taking it. And is it not to such the cup of devils?

While the most of the Christian world and the multitude of pious, godly men in the church assume that God approves of fermented wine as a beverage, what can be done for Bible temperance? They really justify the use of wine and beer and cider in their fermented state; and THIS IS THE FOUNDATION ROCK ON WHICH IS BUILT THE SALOON, AS WELL AS THE BREWERY AND THE DISTILLERY. Their testimony is, "Use all these things and license them, but use them temperately;" which is impossible. For we are commanded to utterly reject such things. "Look not thou upon the wine when it is red, when it giveth its color in the cup, when it moveth itself aright, at the last it biteth like a serpent and stingeth like an adder." Look at the statistics of intemperance in our own beloved country: 215,000 saloons; 600,000 drunkards; 60,000 deaths each year; and $1,484,000,000 paid annually for the snake bite.

THE REIGN OF USURY.

BY REV. D. OGLESBY.

The conference called for Sept. 26, by the Chicago pastors, will be watched closely. The question is how to reach the masses with the Gospel. That the church has drifted away from the masses, and lost its influence over them, is a patent fact. What caused the wide separation? Why has the church lost its grip on the masses? Remove the cause and the effect goes too. In all probability every remedy but the correct one will be recommended; because the church seem not to know why she is losing her influence. The writer hopes that the Cynosure will give as full a synopsis of the convention as possible. It will be desired very much by those of us who cannot attend.

The same thing affects the church that affects society generally. It is the "great gulf" separating Dives and Lazarus. On one side the rich and "well-born," as Hamilton put it; on the other side the poor. Unfortunately for the church and for humanity, the church has taken her stand on the side of the rich. She did this when she became the advocate of usury. For thousands of years her testimony was unflinching against it, and in harmony with the Bible from Genesis to Revelation. John Calvin was the first minister of any note who ever defended usury or interest. It is the great source and cause of poverty. "The destruction of the poor is their poverty." The conditions of life are made so hard that men are degraded. The higher aspirations of manhood are taken out of them. Incessant slavish toil and drudgery for twelve or fifteen hours a day, and every day in the week, and every week in the year, completely demoralizes men. Seeing absolutely no chance to better their condition and rise to the heights above, they plunge to the depths beneath. The church defends and practices usury. Out of usury has come the great trusts, combines, and monopolies that threaten to rend society to its center, and produce anarchy.

It is all folly to oppose monopolies and defend the cause. It is not the amount of usury or interest, but the principle of the thing. One per cent or one hundred will produce the same result in the end. It is not the size of the sin. The old Negro preacher said, "One leak will sink a ship; one sin will damn a soul." So under the reign of the good old governor Nehemiah, they came to him in distress and said, "Our lands and vineyards are mortgaged," and even worse than that, "other men have our olive-yards and vineyards." They were already evicted, and the rate of interest was only one per cent. Usury is eating the world up. This God-forbidden thing enables the conscienceless, cunning, covetous, cold-hearted and avaricious ones to accumulate fabulous amounts of money, and then form trusts to gather in more rapidly the fruits of the labor of others. The Western Rural defines trusts correctly:

"Trusts are organized to steal other people's money. They are a conspiracy to pick people's pockets; they are operated upon the theory that the highwayman adopts. He puts his victim in his power and commands him to deliver or be shot. He does not argue. His pistol does his talking. The trust does not argue. It comes with its sugar and demands your money or you will drink your coffee without sugar. It comes with its twine and demands its price or you can go without twine; it comes with its oil and robs you because you must have oil. It is organized, systematic robbery, and it is done in the sacred name of law. That is the most galling part of it. A government of the people, by the people and for the people, permits a few conscienceless plunderers to rob the millions, without so much as a remonstrance. We have just had a discussion settled by a Chicago court that the gas trust is practically legal. It sometimes seems as if government was expressly organized for the protection and encouragement of the well-dressed villains of society."

The sugar trust has only to add one cent a pound on sugar, and it brings thirty millions. If a few men on the high seas were to rob our commerce of that amount, it would create great excitement. If a band of pirates on the ocean was to plunder the commerce of the world to that extent, it would stir all the civilized world. Or if a band of robbers should organize in the mountains and plunder our internal commerce to that extent, an army of men would be called out to suppress them forthwith. But legalized brigandage and piracy preys on society, supported by all the powers of law and government, with impunity. It all grows out of the false doctrine that money is property, that it has power to draw interest, that it possesses vitality, and can grow and produce other money and property. It is mammon-worship. Usury is the sacrifice the world pays to the worship of this idol, the golden calf.

What can be done to remedy the evil? Nothing. The error is so completely imbedded in the church, in the government, and in public sentiment, that it is one of the evils that will have to bring about its own overthrow. Thirty years ago Abolitionism was the most unpopular doctrine in the world. To be an Abolitionist was to be "hated of all men." It required the martyr spirit, and the one who openly declared himself one had "to count all things loss" and be ready to die. But slavery destroyed itself. It culminated in rebellion. Rule or ruin was its motto. And ruin came. Usury now controls our government. The high priests of mammon dictate, and the government obeys. Monopolies, combines and trusts, like rolling snow-balls, will grow larger and larger, until the masses are completely enslaved. Then the people will be forced in sheer desperation to form one great trust, and make the government the one great monopoly. The hateful thing socialism will come, just as the despised thing Abolitionism did. We may as well get ready for it, for come it will. And until it does come, the church will plod on in the old ruts. There will be spasmodic efforts to reach the masses. Salvation armies, street preaching, etc., etc., but under the present system of usury, competition, trusts, combines, etc., the gulf between Dives and Lazarus will become deeper, wider and darker, and the masses will sink constantly to greater depths of degradation, vice, crime and misery. Society can never rise to any higher, better state under the reign of usury. Our Christianity needs remodeling. It is defective. It approves and practices what God condemns. Out of this comes the chaotic state of society. This is the reason why the church has lost its grip on society.

While we admit that Christianity with its present defects is the best system of religion in the world, yet we unhesitatingly say that it is not the system the world needs. A system of religion that can't raise society to a higher, happier state than the civilized world now experiences, is not the religion which the world needs, and it will be, and is being repudiated. True Christianity, such as the Master founded, and the church for three hundred years practiced, is what the world needs. The skeptical Gibbon says that "it was the happiest period of the human race." Slavery faded out, idolatry was overthrown, without war or bloodshed. Perfect altruism reigned. Slavery was stronger when the war of the Rebellion burst on our country than it had ever been. The church was on its knees before it. The government was bound hand and foot by it. We tried as hard as we could to put down the rebellion and leave slavery. But God ordered otherwise. Even the stupidest finally saw that one or the other, the government or slavery, had to die. We deserve no credit, neither church nor state, for abolishing slavery. To God belongs the glory. So now usury, like a mighty millstone hanging about the neck of the civilized world, produces a universal enslavement of labor. We will never abolish it voluntarily, no more than we did chattel slavery; but it will be abolished. As sure as "God is God and right is right,

The right is sure to win.
To doubt would be disloyalty,
To falter would be sin."

Isaiah tells us in the day when the Gospel triumphs, that "they shall build houses and occupy them; they shall plant vineyards and eat the fruit of them. They shall not build and another occupy (rent); they shall not plant and another eat the fruit." Usury, land-lordism, rents, interests and profits will be gone. In our day, and under the reign of usury, the poor rebuild our cities every ten or fifteen years, and still sing,

"No foot of land do I possess,
No cottage in this wilderness."

SHALL OUR SCHOOLS BE CHRISTIAN?

(From the article by Prof. L. T. Townsend, D. D., in "Our Day" for September.)

Unless our system of public education, popular as it is, adds to the patriotism and the integrity of our citizens, by the development of what is noblest in man, even this boasted advantage will not in any considerable measure make for the perpetuity of our free institutions. Indeed, men of the highest intellectual culture have been unsafe citizens; and men who can read and write may be our most dangerous criminals.

In the memoirs of Duc de Sully we read that Servin brought to the court his son, desiring for him a government appointment. The following are some of the young man's accomplishments as reported by Sully:

"He was of so prodigious memory that he never forgot what he had once learned; he possessed all parts of philosophy and mathematics; . . . he not only understood Greek and Hebrew, and all the languages which we call learned, but also all the different jargons or modern dialects; he had a genius for poetry and had written many verses; his body was perfectly well suited to his mind; he was light, nimble, dexterous, and fit for all exercises; there are no games of recreation that he did not know." These were only a part of the young man's accomplishments.

If, therefore, mental and physical development qualify for citizenship and entitle to official position, why had not the son of Servin full right to recognition? In mental and physical development he stands a long way in advance of any of our public school graduates.

Sully, however, refused to give that brilliant young man a government office, because he found that only one side of his character had been correctly developed. We quote again from the memoirs:

"But now for the reverse of the medal: here it appeared that this young man was treacherous, cruel, cowardly, deceitful, a liar, a cheat, drunkard, and glutton; a sharper in play, immersed in every species of vice, a blasphemer, an atheist; in a word, in him might be found all the vices that are contrary to nature, honor, religion, and society."

Later, the memoirs, speaking of his death, say: "He died in the flower of his age, in a common brothel, perfectly corrupted by his debaucheries, and expired with a glass in his hand, cursing and denying God." So much for an intellectual development that has no religion in it. For what position, except a State prison cell, is such an educated and accomplished man entitled?

There are men of considerable distinction, men who claim for themselves a very high rank in literary circles, a claim supported by not a few of their admiring friends, who insist that everything religious should be banished from our public schools, and that whatever is politically needful in moral and religious culture must be received elsewhere. It is urged that the moral precepts of the Bible, to say nothing of the more profoundly reconstructive and reformatory measures and methods of evangelical Christianity, such as conversion, regeneration, and sanctification, should have no part or place in our educational training. The plea is that the function of the public school is merely to develop the intellectual faculties and allow the conscience to take care of itself. And it is this restricted development of the intellect, we are sorry to say, that is coming to be the great American fetish; those who adore it and are ready to fight, if not to die for it, seem to be on the constant increase. That it should be thus is a surprise; for where is the man of intelligence who will not say that America needs conscience to-day as much as she needs intellect; and conscience, as was long since shown, is rarely healthful and binding, if indeed it can have an existence except in its connection with the religious sentiment. It is the recognition of a Supreme Being that gives to conscience its potency; this recognition is the foundation of religion. And it is the wholesome and restraining fear, inspired by thoughts of that Being, which is the beginning of true wisdom.

The point we make is this: That without the development of the conscience and the religious sentiment on which it largely depends, the school-boy with his trained intellect will be able, on account of his training, the more successfully to outwit the ignorant policeman and detective; he will be more subtle and less brutal in what he does, but he may not be, on that account, one whit less perilous to the welfare of the American Republic than is the man who cannot read or write. The former opinion that crime is somehow connected with inability to read is no longer held. They are the educated inmates of jails and prisons that have shaken public confidence in the remedial agency of the alphabet.

These aphorisms, which resolutely antagonize the modern notion of education, are indisputable: "Culture, untouched by religion, has no redeeming power;" "Whenever culture of intellect outstrips the culture of conscience, disaster follows;" "Popular intelligence with popular unbelief ends in popular corruption;" "Mere intellectual training does not inspire patriotism or reduce crime;" "The schoolroom may make a more crafty demagogue without making a safer citizen."

We have spoken of the non-religious type of education as a modern idea. In support of this statement you scarcely need be told that the day has been, and within the last half century, that instruction in the Bible and in the Assembly's Catechism was a part of the common school education in New England. Teachers were permitted and encouraged to promote in their schools religious revivals, and were sometimes selected and appointed because they had this evangelistic power and success. And it is in the face of this changed and supposed improved condition of school affairs in which religion is not recognized that we submit the statement that American citizens who in their youth were brought under that somewhat rigorous discipline have made the republican institutions of this country a possibility, while those men whose conscience has been left to itself, even when trained in the public school, are a menace to the political freedom that we have inherited. We repeat, it is not a cultivated intellect that our country is languishing for; it is a cultivated intellect and a cultivated conscience; one that can see things in the light of eternity and that recognizes the abiding presence of a just God, to whom every man is responsible.

Also we must challenge this modern idea of non-religious education on the ground that it antagonizes the opinions of men in whose presence those who claim to be educational reformers appear to the poorest possible advantage.

Washington, in his farewell address, says: "Let us with caution indulge the supposition that morality can be maintained without religion. Reason and experience both forbid us to expect that national morality can prevail in exclusion of religious principles."

Daniel Webster, in his argument against the Girard will, expresses essentially the same opinion: "In what age, by what sect, where, when, by whom, has religious truth been excluded from the education of youth? Nowhere!—never! Everywhere and at all times it has been regarded as essential." Alas! were Mr. Webster among us to-day he would have to change his language, and be compelled to say, "Nowhere!—never!" excepting in some of the leading States of the American Republic.

Victor Cousin, the profoundest of French philosophers, in an address before the Chambers of Peers, declared that "any system of school-training which sharpens and strengthens the intellectual powers without supplying moral culture and religious principle is a curse rather than a blessing."

The distinguished statesman, De Tocqueville, after visiting America, wrote these instructive words: "The United States must be religious in order to be free. Society there must be destroyed unless the Christian moral tie be strengthened in proportion as the political tie is relaxed; and what can be done with a people who are their own masters, if they be not submissive to Deity? . . . Despotism may govern without religious faith, but liberty cannot."

John Locke's view is essentially the same: "If virtue be not got and settled so as to keep out ill and vicious habits, languages and sciences and all the other accomplishments of education will be to no purpose but to make the worse or more dangerous man."

"The belief in the moralizing effects of intellectual culture is absurd," is Herbert Spencer's brief but decisive comment upon this subject. . . .

If, therefore, Washington, Webster, Cousin, De Tocqueville, Locke, Spencer, Arnold, Huxley, and if nearly every nation of Europe, even those that borrowed from us the common-school system of education, are correct in their judgments and methods, we are wrong in ours, and our public school is a possible menace to the Republic, instead of being, as we had supposed, a safeguard. On graduation day, as far as the school is concerned, we are in danger, as already suggested, of presenting to the country a villain, accomplished to be sure, but even more dangerous than the boy who, unschooled, has remained in the street. They were educated brains that instigated the late murder of Dr. Cronin; they are educated brains that are now shielding the murderers from the eye and hand of justice.

The public school can be looked upon as a national safeguard only when instruction in Christian morals, with all that term implies, is made a part of the educational training of the school. Hence we plead for a restoration to our schools of that which through a miserable spirit of timidity and sentimentality has been taken from them, namely, Christian morality as found in the Bible, and as interpreted by ordinary intelligence. This we plead for and even demand on the ground of public safety and loyalty to that which has made America the fittest of all countries in which to live.

A temperance discussion once sprung up in a large coach crossing the Alleghenies, and the subject was handled without gloves. One gentleman maintained a stoical silence until he could endure it no longer; then he broke out strongly, saying, "Gentlemen, I want you to understand that I am a liquor-seller. I keep a public house, but I would have you know that I have a license, and keep a decent house. I don't keep loafers and loungers about my place, and when a man has enough, he can get no more at my bar. I sell to decent people and do a respectable business."

When he had delivered himself, he seemed to think he had put a quietus to the subject, and that no answer could be given. Not so thought a Quaker, who was one of the company. Said he: "Friend, that is the most damning part of thy business. If thee would sell to drundards and loafers, thee would help kill off the race, and society would be rid of them; but thee takes the young, the poor, the innocent, and the unsuspecting, and makes drunkards of them. And when their character and money are gone, thee kicks them out, and turns them over to other shops to finish off: and thee ensnares others and sends them on the same road to ruin."

Surely the Quaker had the best of the argument, for he had the facts on his side. The more respectable and attractive any public house is, the greater the mischief it is able to do in any decent community.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

Autumn musings—The political canvass—The caution of temperance Republicans—John L. Sullivan as a Congressman—Secret societies and the Prohibition party—An amusing incident in a smoking car—Evangelist Leyden's work—Father Damien.

"The sere and yellow leaf" made its appearance before summer was over by the calendar, and a very unusual sight has been presented by the number of forest trees which have donned their autumn livery when the almanac declared it to be August and not October. But we must expect to pay for an unusually early spring with these premonitions of winter's speedy approach. Golden rod and wild asters, white and purple, cover field and wayside with their wealth of bloom; brave, bright emblems of an immortal hope which can wait without shrinking the scythe of the death angel. A New England spring is a fearful and wonderful combination of mud and slush and raw east winds, provocative of pneumonia, bronchitis and neuralgia, but a New England autumn—is well nigh divine. Welcome its shortening days, its mornings keen and chill with hoar frost, even its wild September gales, for they only sweep the skies and woodlands clear for that magical change when Nature covers her face with an enchanted veil, and the pale, sweet ghost of the summer that has fled comes back to us to prophesy from the very threshold of winter the resurrection in a few brief months of all her roses and her bird songs.

"When the winds sweep o'er the hillsides, and the waters rise and roll,"

The State canvass for the governorship and what politicians are saying and doing begin to take up some space in the papers, which ring the changes on Craps and Brackett in the common partisan Katy-did, Katy-didn't style. Of the latter candidate for nomination Henry H. Faxon spoke in the recent Prohibition convention as follows: "When in the Legislature he (Brackett) has made a practice of voting with the Democrats on all bills designed to restrict the traffic of liquors, and even now, if he professes political repentance, I would not trust him as a deck hand on the Prohibition ship." Brackett is a Mason who does not hesitate to eulogize the order at every opportunity, doubtless believing that he will receive his reward when the time comes. Mr. Faxon also introduced a resolution that "no true temperance man can consistently support J. Q. A. Brackett for any official position with such a legislative record as he has on all questions relating to prohibition and its enforcement." It was moved to suppress discussion by laying this and another of similar tenor on the table. The movement was lost, but so were the resolutions which shared the fate of Mr. Cheever's, mentioned in my last letter. "The rejection of Rev. Mr. Cheever's resolution," comments the Voice, "was one of the most significant acts of those very conservative and cautious Republican temperance gentlemen."

At the recent Republican caucus in Worcester he was more fortunate, and succeeded in getting before Ward a resolve that "if the present managers of the party, who have it in their power, will not now honestly do their utmost for the suppression of the anti-Republican saloon, then the Republican party of Massachusetts, true as it once was to God and humanity, must be itself inevitably suppressed by the republican people." "To argue this motion," said Mr. Cheever in a brief speech in its support, suppressed, however, by the morning papers, "is needless. It were like trying to prove a proposition that is self-evident. Simply to state it is its surest and best defence. Under the double dealing of its late managers toadying to the wealthy liquor interest, the Republican party in Massachusetts is brought to the edge of defeat and disintegration. It can only recover by following the lead and example of Charles Sumner in the person of his true successor, our sagacious Senator Hoar, whose strong position upon constitutional prohibition, woman suffrage, the right of labor, and protection to the American industry and the American home, make him the real leader of the embattled Republican hosts."

John L. Sullivan proposes to run for Congress, but if he should do so and get elected, he will not be the first of the prize-fighting, gambling, liquor-drinking fraternity who has been chosen to represent and legislate for the American people. Will the Prohibition party be the Hercules to turn a purifying stream into these Augean stables?

The last issue of the Voice answers a correspondent's inquiry as to the attitude of the party regarding the lodge thus:

"The Prohibition party has nothing to do one way or another with the question of secret societies."

But hasn't the question of secret societies something to do with the Prohibition party?

An incident occurred the other day at the Lynn railroad station, which, though a sad one in itself, had its amusing side. Twelve criminals, handcuffed together like a chain, were put into the smoking car to go to Salem jail. It is said that the effect of their advent into the smoking car was remarkable, its previous occupants suddenly seeming to lose all pleasure in their favorite weed, as they put out their cigars and stole silently into another car. But did it never cross the minds of these tobacco-using gentlemen to ask why these convicts should be thrust into their company, if there was not some occult connection between tobacco smoke and crime? If any pure young woman had a lover in that smoking car I wonder how she would have relished the scene. Fancy a clergyman among the company, unable to protest against the society thrust upon him because he had chosen such associations as from a fit atmosphere for criminals! There is nothing so crushing to a social vice as the dead weight of public opinion, and I believe the time will come when to see a man puffing away at a cigar will stamp him of questionable repute just as surely as to see him toss off a glass of whisky.

Evangelist T. E. Leyden has returned from his Canadian tour, and is now conducting reformed Catholic services in Boston. He is a man whose whole heart is in the work of bringing his former co-religionists out of the darkness and superstition of Romanism into the clear light of the Gospel; and great success is attending his labors.

Is it possible that Father Damien must be added to the list of Rome's pretended saints? A former Massachusetts gentleman, now in Honolulu, writes to the Congregationalist in response to a letter of inquiry, describing him as a man of impure life, who had actually nothing to do with the reforms and improvements inaugurated, and whose death from leprosy was to be attributed rather to his vices and carelessness than to his philanthropic self-devotion. This is not pleasant to believe, but if true it is not the first time Rome has whitewashed her worst sinners and tried to palm them off on the world as saints.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 20, 1889.

From Deer Park, where President Harrison yet tarries, comes the statement that the choice lies between Judge Wood and Attorney General Miller for the vacancy in the Supreme Court caused by Justice Matthews' death. In the exclusive circles of the court it is predicted that the place will be filled before the assembling of the body in October. The principal objection to Judge Wood is based upon his partisanship, which is of the most rabid order. Another objection is as to his lack of prominence in the legal profession. That this objection holds good also against Attorney General Miller goes without saying. Mr. Miller is essentially a man of small calibre, a so-so lawyer, a good, industrious man, with a mental and limp mentality. The inherent reverence of good men for duly constituted authority is evinced in the loyalty of the people to the Supreme Court. No other body could have passed in peace upon the Hayes' election, for instance. This court is recognized as the strongest bulwark of our liberties. To keep it free for merely partisan favor, and to make its personnel a pride to Americans, is the duty of every President. In so far as Mr. Harrison succeeds in casting personal prejudice behind, and selecting a man whom the whole people respect, in so far will he be strengthening himself.

Judge Wood is a very good, respectable man, as the world goes, and Attorney General Miller is a fair second-rate lawyer, as is President Harrison himself, but these qualifications furnish no reason for appointing either a Justice of the Supreme Court. The Republican party contains a vast number of brainy men, men from whom the vigor and fire of intelligence, a breathing and living personality, springs at all times. Why not give these men a chance? Can it be that President Harrison hath grown like Cassius, and can brook "none greater than himself?" Mr. Cleveland made such a mistake when he appointed Mr. Fuller Chief Justice. Mr. Fuller was decidedly not a first-rate Chicago lawyer, and outside that city one who by chance heard his name had to search the crannies of his memory to recall his occupation and condition. The people have never yet accepted the appointment with real approval. The appointment of Lamar, though much fierce objection to it was raised in a Republican Senate, was better in the sense that Lamar has brains and experience. President Harrison might do well to seek further than among his personal friends for his next Justice of the Supreme Court.

Ex-Congressman and ex-commander of the G. A. R. Warner has sensibly, after changing his mind three or four times, concluded that he does not want to be Commissioner of Pensions, and this is believed to be his final answer to the requests of President Harrison and Secretary Noble. At present General George S. Merrill of Boston seems most likely to be selected. He represents the conservative wing of the Grand Army, and is opposed to pensioning except for disabilities contracted in service and line of duty. As chairman of the pensions committee of the Grand Army, it has been largely due to his efforts that the organization has been so considerate in its official requests for favors. It is not known that he would accept.

Nothing definite has yet been done to secure Corporal Tanner a new berth, although his friends are pressing his appointment as Recorder of Deeds for the District of Columbia, a position worth twelve or fifteen thousand dollars per annum. The President is said, with some reason, to be opposed to further honoring the Corporal with offices at home, and every possible pressure is being brought to bear to induce the Corporal to go abroad in the diplomatic service where he will die out of the public mind. He has been invited by Governor Foraker to stump Ohio, and may accept, though it would be against the wishes of the administration and would antagonize the President. The President has a wholesome dread of Corporal Tanner's mouth, and wants no more of his indiscretion.

A NEW POLITICAL MOVEMENT.

NEW CONCORD, Ohio.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Thinking the enclosed circular to be of interest to your readers, I enclose it with a few suggestions:

ATTENTION, REFORMERS.

Realizing the necessity of the political reformations now pending in the United States, and that there is strength in union and believing that if all the armies of reform could be united upon one common platform we would become an irresistible force in national politics, therefore we would invite the friends of the following reforms to meet in convention in the city of Chicago on the 13th day of November, 1889, to consider the possibility and feasibility of a consolidation of our forces, in order to united action in future political contests.

The friends of the prohibition of the Liquor Traffic, Tariff Reform, Finance Reform, Restriction of Pauper and Criminal Immigration, Arbitration for Settlement of Labor Disputes and National Disputes, Reform in the Civil Service, Non-Sectarian Schools, Purity and Secrecy of the Ballot, and all other needed reforms, are included in this call; and those signing the call herewith made are to name the temporary officers of the conference when convened.

J. A. BROOKS,
J. W. ROBBINS,
E. EVANS.

1. The necessity of political as well as social and religious reformation is obvious. Not so clear are the methods and limits of such reform.

The list set forth includes much that is important, but does not include the question of the secret lodge system, a reform of more importance to the Christian church than any other. It may be included in the "all other needed reforms," but it remains to be seen whether the meeting would recognize it as a "needed reform," and allow its discussion.

Another and not less important reform is the question of war. Is war a rightful method for the adjustment of any international differences? Surely this question ought not to be ignored.

2. There would likely be a wide difference among those assembled on such questions as the tariff, and laws respecting the amount and purchasing power of money. In the apprehension of at least one who desires reform, the government has little to do with the amount of money, and nothing in reference to its "purchasing power." It is earnestly hoped that no wild theories as to the duty of the government to make the people rich by the creation of (paper) wealth will meet with favor among real reformers.

3. Shall we have a free platform where all men may (within due limits) voice their convictions and consider what can be done to promote concerted action? By all means.

REFORM NEWS.

FROM THE GENERAL AGENT.

THE SPIRIT MOVING ON THE NEW ENGLAND PASTORS.

WORCESTER, Sept. 16, 1889.

There are amusing as well as laborious features in our work, and some things indicate that ordination is not absolute proof of entire sanctification. At least all ministers have not the "same mind." After speaking to the Baptist ministers in Tremont Temple, Boston, yesterday morning, one brother came forward to sign the call, saying, "If that is against all secret societies, I want to write my name a hundred strong, for they are the curse of all curses."

A half an hour later I was conversing with a brother in his office, whom I had met a few days before, and who twenty years ago preached to the largest congregation in the city. He said, "I was thinking of writing you a letter. I am very anxious that your congress should be a success; but I want to caution you against including the patriotic temperance and benevolent orders. It would certainly damage your cause."

Three or four prominent ministers urged very strongly that I should procure the name of a certain D.D., as it would have great weight in Boston. On a second trial the desired signature was added. Later I presented the paper to a prominent clergyman of the denomination to which the first-named gentlemen belong, and he at once and strongly objected, saying, "I most heartily approve of your movement, and if you will scratch out that name I will sign your paper and do all I can for the success of your meeting. I know nothing against the man, only he is not orthodox."

The next pastor, after reading the paper, handed it back with the remark, "I prefer not to sign it," and that was all I could get from him on the subject.

The next pastor was quite in sympathy with the movement and would gladly add his name if I would allow him to strike out one or two clauses and insert others, etc. When I suggested that it would be bad faith to the eighteen ministers who had already signed, he thought I might present each with a revised copy and obtain their assent to the change. As I did not accept the proposition, involving at least a week's work and delay, I did not of course get his written endorsement, though he dismissed me with many expressions of good will.

And so it goes. Had I adopted all the suggestions and made all the changes that have been urged, there would have been scarcely a vestige of the original remaining.

This is the shady side of the work, but there is another and very encouraging side.

As a rule I find the New England ministers exceedingly suspicious of the lodge, and that their ears are open to hear on the subject. I find fifty per cent at least less of the Boston and New England clergy in the lodges than I had supposed, and some of them are vexed and sore perplexed to know what to do. Said one of them, "The Odd-fellows meet in a hall over my audience-room. Some of my members go right by the prayer meeting up into the lodge, and I know that is not right. I don't know what they do there. I wish I did. But I know the men who leave the prayer meeting and go to the lodge lose their spirituality. I don't feel as though I could stand it. I want to strike hard and I am willing to take the consequences, but when I strike I want to be sure of my facts. Can you help me?" etc.

This is the worst case I have met, but with others in the same line, it indicates the great need there is of a congress of Christians at Boston, the "hub" of New England, to start the ball rolling, and of a determined effort on the part of those who have the light to let their light shine in the darkness, whether the darkness comprehend it or not.

The new Old South Church is being dedicated here to-night. Pastor, J. F. Lovering, Grand Elect Perfect and Sublime Mason. Sermon by A. H. Quint, Sublime Prince of the Royal Secret. Comments not necessary. J. P. STODDARD.

THE WASHINGTON AGENT IN WESTERN NEW YORK.

DALE, N. Y., Sept. 16, 1889.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—It is my privilege to again address you from the Empire State. After arranging matters so we could leave Washington, with Mrs. Stoddard I took the train for this place. As we sped on over the mountains or through the valleys to this northern country, the air seemed fresher, the brooks to run more clear, and all nature to look brighter. The burning meridian sun of the southland is not conducive to thrift, nor the degradation of the laboring classes to general prosperity. The dark and dire effects of slavery are painfully manifest to one accustomed to Northern enterprise.

Our welcome at State-president Capwell's was most cordial. Bro. Capwell and his excellent companion have enlisted in the reform conflict for life, and may always be found on the right side, so far as they understand it. At the village church, but a mile from where I write, I made my first attempt at lecturing. On last evening I addressed a much larger audience in the same place. Mrs. Stoddard led the young people's meeting, held for nearly an hour prior to my lecture. A good spirit was manifest. This church is prospering under the labors of Rev. Andrew.

Sabbath before last I filled an appointment made by Bro. Capwell in what is known as the North Baptist church, near Linden. The pastor, Rev. Rasmussen, as well as many of his people, are with us in sentiment, but practically do little in the reform line. I meet thousands who do not belong to the lodge, nor approve of it, who do not do or say anything against it.

Last week was spent largely in Niagara county. Aside from the old warriors who participated in, or were familiar with, the discussion occasioned by the abduction and murder of Morgan, few are interested in our special mission. The Free Methodist is the only denomination, so far as I know, bearing testimony against the lodge in this county. They were just closing the conference year. Their annual conference convenes at Albion this week. There was a wish expressed that I give one or more lectures at Warren's Corners, in the M. E. church. This was the former charge of our highly esteemed Bro. Post. When I presented this wish to Rev. Morrow, the pastor, he replied that he knew little of Masons, but had been a member of the Good Templars, and thought them a good thing. He was sorry the subject had ever been discussed there, as he believed the discussion alienated neighbors. All was quiet now, and he wished it to remain so. Said he, "That subject has been agitated here as much as it will be while I am pastor." As this was his feeling, I could but leave him to settle the matter with the great Head of the church, who will hold every steward accountable for his stewardship.

Among those pioneer reformers whom I visited in Niagara county, are the following: Peter Miller and Andrew, his brother, of Newfane, J. W. Alberty and Washington Carl of Lockport, William Bye and Asa Warren of Warren's Corners. The great Reaper has been at work here as elsewhere. Many from whom I received council in other days are gone. Ferdinand Steadman and Tristin Corless have but recently passed to their eternal reward. They were an honor to the churches to which they belonged, and to the reforms which they loved.

With present light it does not seem possible to work up a successful State meeting in time to secure the help of the General Agent on his return West the latter part of October. I should be glad to hear from all who would assist in holding a State convention and securing the services of a competent agent. Let us put on the armor anew, friends, and contend for Christ against this foe of the church, family and state. Letters addressed to Dale, Wyoming county, N. Y., will reach me in due time. Yours for Christ and reform,

W. B. STODDARD.

STEADFAST UNITED BRETHREN IN OHIO.

BREMER, O., Sept. 16, 1889.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I have for several days been in attendance on the Sciota Annual Conference of the U. B. church (radical) at Pisgah church in Perry county near Rushville. The attendance was general, that from the community large, and the proceedings entirely harmonious. Bishop Milton Wright presided and preached with his usual ability. The brethren have strong faith in their principles, and manifested it by their liberal giving and devotedness to their work. About $240 was pledged for missionary purposes and about one-third of it paid in.

I was made an advisory member and invited to address the Conference on the relations of the secret lodge system to Christianity. I had a good hearing and much interest was manifested. Special efforts were made to extend the circulation of the Christian Conservator, and not many subscribers to the Cynosure could be obtained. Nevertheless several saw it to be their duty to sustain both papers.

The following resolutions indicate the feelings of the Conference on the subject of reforms:

WHEREAS, The experience of centuries demonstrates that all systems of license and regulation of the liquor traffic have utterly failed to remove the evils of intemperance; and,

WHEREAS, Prohibitory laws have proved most effective for this object; therefore,

Resolved, That we regard it as the duty of every citizen to demand the entire suppression of all traffic in intoxicating drinks.

Resolved, That, as a conference, we endorse the principles and work of the National Christian Association, and especially we approve of the plan of a conference of churches to consider the relation of Christianity to the secret lodge system; and that we select a delegate to such conference.

By an oversight the delegate was not elected, but it is hoped that several members of the Conference may attend. I go to Seneca Falls to arrange for a State meeting. Yours in the work,

H. H. HINMAN.

CALL

FOR A CONGRESS OF CHURCHES AND CHRISTIANS.

Whereas, a widespread and powerful system of secret societies exists in this and other countries; and,

Whereas, it appears that the atrocious murder of Dr. P. H. Cronin in Chicago was planned under the inspiration of a secret oath-bound society, claiming and exercising the power to try, condemn and execute its members for offenses unknown to the laws of the land; and,

Whereas, it is the bounden duty of civil government to protect its subjects from secret conspiracies as well as from invasions by foreign foes, and the duty of the church to not only sustain the civil magistracy by her moral influence, but to utter the voice of warning as well;

THEREFORE, We, the undersigned, give our voices in favor of a congress of churches and Christians to be held in the city of Boston, on or near the 15th day of October, 1889, to consider the relation of this subject to civil liberty and the Christian religion, and we respectfully request Joseph Cook, of Boston, Rev. Dr. P. S. Henson, of Chicago, Pres. J. Blanchard, of Wheaton, Rev. Dr. I. J. Lansing, of Worcester, with such others as may be selected, to address the said congress, promising our co-operation and moral support in its behalf.

CORRESPONDENCE.

AMONG THE WESTERN OHIO CHURCHES.

JAMESTOWN, O., Sept. 16, 1889.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—Last Sabbath was spent in Jamestown, O. In the morning I preached for Rev. W. A. Robb, pastor of the United Presbyterian church, and a reader of the Cynosure. He is away on a trip to eastern New York. At his home I met Mrs. Nichol, who had spent nine years as United Presbyterian missionary in Egypt. Her husband's health failed there, and shortly after his return he died. She began teaching in Kansas to support herself and five little children. During the past year she has been visiting the United Presbyterian churches, lecturing on the Egyptian mission, and awakening an interest in the foreign field work. She properly regards this as a continuation of her work abroad. Her children are with her sister in Monmouth, Ill. Mr. Pidgeon, another reader of the Cynosure, was present. He had harbored at his home that inveterate foe of Masonry, Bro. Stoddard, and had even assisted in making arrangements for a meeting.

Elder Joseph Turnbull drove us to his home for dinner, and then to the brick school-house on the pike, where I preached at 4 P. M. Rev. T. C. Sproull, our Covenanter brother from Cedarville, was present. In the evening I preached at a union service in the Christian church, Rev. S. S. Newhouse, pastor. Rev. J. S. Pumphrey, the M. E. pastor, Rev. R. Markland, the Baptist pastor, and the pastor of the Christian church in Columbus, O., were present. I spoke on the Sabbath question, presenting the facts. "Now, what I want is facts. Teach these boys and girls nothing but the facts. Facts alone are wanted in life. Plant nothing else, and root out everything else."

J. M. FOSTER.

AT WARE AFTER THE CONVENTION.

WARE, MASS.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—I wish to add my testimony with other friends who attended the "Ware Camp-meeting Convention." "That the Lord of hosts was with us, and the God of Jacob was our refuge." I would like to give two "clippings" taken from our periodicals here, so the dear brethren may know something of the "spirit and signs" of the times:

"The National Christian Association at Hoyt's Grove does not seem to be a rousing success, the attendance being quite small. The main object of the meeting seems to be antagonistic to all secret societies, especially Freemasonry. Several of the speakers advertised did not put in an appearance."—Springfield Weekly Union, Aug. 29, 1889.

"They had quite a time last week at Hoyt's Grove. A man who pretends to know all about it, gave an exposition of Masonry, but his audience was small, and we understand he has tried one or more of the local papers to print his remarks. Why don't he put it in as an advertisement? No one wants to read or hear what he has to say."—Barre Gazette, Aug. 30th, 1889.

The "hornet's nest" has been stirred, and I suppose somebody is expected to run for life; but they will have to get people of different type than true anti-secretists before they see a stampede in this direction. Some said "they were not brought up in the woods to be scared at owls," if those owls were "cabletowed, hoodwinked and led east in search of light." I think there would not be much danger of their seeing a pursuer, much less to harm them.

Now the convention is passed there must be somebody to be blamed for all this commotion. "Certainly it would not have been held here if that woman had not opened her grove to them;" so, as a matter of course, she is to blame for stirring up "such a muss." When I was quite young I was asked to clean out a spring for a friend, and having no dish large enough to dip it out, as I desired, I took a stick and kept stirring it with all my might. The water kept running in fast, but what a dirty stream run out! In a short time the rocks were washed clean and the water ran pure. I am not sure but it is best to keep this pool of secrecy in commotion, and see if some of the "filthy slum" will not get washed out. The Masons are boasting that this convention, with previous lectures, are bringing men into the lodge, as a number have handed in their names recently. Why find fault then? They ought to praise these anti-secretists for doing them so much good. I suppose our venerable and honored brother, Pres. J. Blanchard, and our esteemed General Agent, J. P. Stoddard, are the responsible ones for this work in Ware.

A Mason's wife in Ware said to me yesterday: "Such talk as you had in your grove I should think would help Masons, and get others to join the lodge, for all Masons are Christians, and go to heaven when they die; don't they Mr. —?" (speaking to a member of the M. E. church and of the lodge).

"No," said he, "I cannot say that, for I think the church preferable to the lodge; yet I think the lodge a grand thing, and I never was sorry I joined it."

We have received severe persecutions since we have been residents of the State, and upon inquiry and observation the very facts are it is from these "vile conclaves of darkness;" and if I am permitted to judge the future by the past and the present, we have received only a drop before a shower. At present the move seems to be to crush financially, if possible. If this is accomplished they hope to get rid of us successfully. Our trust is in God, and upon this rock we have built our hope, and the promise is "the gates of hell shall not prevail against us."

We have people here who privately advocate strong anti-secrecy principles, but when it comes to take a bold stand and publicly advocate these views they are faltering. May God give us more valiant, fearless soldiers on this field of conflict, those who dare show their colors regardless of lurking foes.

We don't want those who pray, as it is said an old lady did, "Good Lord and good devil," not knowing whose hands she would fall into; but those who take a firm stand for right and righteousness, and in the name and strength of Israel's God maintain that position though it cost them their lives. What does a soldier amount to who flees in time of battle? He is a sneak and a coward. I had rather, as one said, "have a dozen bullet-holes in my face than have one in my back."

We are here as a family on this great battlefield, and I wish to say to all the dear friends of our cause, whether we have ever met you or not, offer one prayer for us, that God's will in us, and by us, may be done, and may our ways be opened before us, so the enemy may not be allowed to triumph over us. Yours for war against the powers of darkness,

MRS. L. M. HOYT.

PITH AND POINT.

TRACTS WITH RIVER MISSION.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—You probably cannot know the pleasure the package of tracts gave us. Several times during the day I thought of faithful friends praying for us, and my courage—thanks to God!—was equal to the task of scattering or rather giving away all that were sent, also some we had on hand. I spoke to nearly every individual to whom I handed a tract. Very few refused them. I am sorely grieved with the sinfulness of fairs.—MRS. I. R. B. ARNOLD, Wheeling, W. Va.

LECTURERS REMEMBERED.

In the ten years that we have lived in this little town we have had visits from but two lecturers, the first an aged servant of God, a Congregational minister. He stayed some days with us, and before he left, some threatened him with eggs. We had another minister come, an esteemed friend of ours from childhood, Rev. J. F. Browne, known to many of you as one of the excellent of the earth. His arguments were very conclusive. They knew not what to answer, and could only resort to their old practice of abusing him, which they did, a minister being spokesman for them, and they defamed his character all they could after he left, and really seemed to thirst for his blood while he was here. One leading member of a church said he expected he would be mobbed and he thought he ought to be! Bro. Browne made an excellent impression while here, but there has been none to follow it up, and the secretists now have it all their own way. But we know that our God hears prayer, and we will continue to pray for the downfall of the lodge. The Lord in mercy hasten the day for Jesus' sake. Yours in the love of the truth.—MRS. J. GRIFFIN, Hortonville, Wis.

MANY COMING BACK TO CHRIST.

I take great pleasure in writing to inform you of the wonderful work the Cynosure is doing in this part of the land. Near Greenville, Miss., reason is also convicting many and bringing many Jacob Knights and Odd-fellows back home to Christ. I am going to die under the Cynosure flag. I must work for the Gospel of Jesus Christ as long as I live. I can do some work for the Cynosure by and by when the money comes in. Many people want to take the paper, but have not the money. Many are in favor of the great work and say they will help as soon as they can.—(Rev.) J. J. SMITH, Swiftwater Station, Miss.

LITERATURE.

SHINING LIGHTS, or sketches of eminent saints of different ages, nations and churches, illustrating the wondrous power of divine grace. By Rev. A. Sims. Pp. 228. Price 75c. For sale by the author, Otterville, Ont.

As the title suggests, this is a compilation of brief biographies. The author has made an excellent selection of his subjects, and has directed his efforts with much care for the promotion of the higher Christian life in the church. Such a biography as that of Harlan Page, which we print in this number, is always an inspiration to a closer walk with God, and greater diligence in his service. So, too, of Madame Guyon, Fletcher, Payson, Judson, Finney, Muller, and others comprising this volume. While reading we remember, too, that these lives of faith and spiritual power are not exceptional in one sense. The same faith and diligence in the Master's work may be the blessed privilege of each individual Christian, every one in his place, and with the particular work God has given him to do. It is an excellent help to such holy living to read volumes of this character.

Our Day for September opens with a noble article by Prof. L. T. Townsend of Boston Theological Seminary on "The Christian College a Safeguard of the Republic." A part of this fine argument we are thankful for the privilege of reproducing for our readers elsewhere. Rev. John Pearson contributes a timely article on the Sunday saloon question, "Sunday Saloon Lawlessness." "Three Essentials of Puritanism," by Senator George F. Hoar of Massachusetts, is the address at the Monument dedication August 1, to which reference has been made, as in strong contrast with the Masonic performance on the same occasion. For this address Senator Hoar was addressed a letter of gratitude from the president of the N. C. A. national convention. Mrs. Fawcett's reply to the appeal of several English high-born ladies against female suffrage is reprinted from the Nineteenth Century. Mr. Cook's Monday lecture on "New Catholicism in Spanish America" and prelude on "Rumblers as Robbers and Rulers" form a center of attraction in this magazine.

Among the popular scientific articles to be published in the Century during the coming year will be reports of the latest studies and discoveries made at the Lick Observatory in California, furnished by Prof. Holden. Prof. Putnam of Harvard has written a series of papers for the same magazine on Prehistoric America, in which he will give the result of his own explorations of caves, burial places, village sites, etc. A detailed account of the strange earth-work known as the Serpent Mound of Adams County, Ohio, will be printed, and the illustrations of some of the papers will include a number of terra-cotta figures of men and women in a style of modeling heretofore unknown in American prehistoric art.

The Statesman opens with an essay upon two of the early leaders of the French Revolution—Danton and Camille Desmoulins, which, without adding to our information respecting these men or their times, is yet written with an originality that will prove attractive. R. L. Starr discusses the constitutionality of local option laws, and M. M. Dawson "Assessment Life Insurance." Space has been given to Gen. Singleton to advertise his total abstinence insurance scheme. The whole subject of life insurance is to be discussed from the assessment and old-rate standards. A reply to the disciple of Henry George in a late number is made by Judge F. T. Fox. The editorials are upon the Farmer's Alliance and Enforced Sunday Labor.

In the current number of the African News of Vinceland, N. J., Bishop William Taylor writes a characteristic argument on "Paul's Correspondence Concerning Marriage," full of practical, Christian common sense. The Bishop's recollections of the early days of the African missions, and his reports of recent visits to the inland stations are full of interest. The magazine is especially valuable in its information respecting the mission work in Africa.

The fall flowers now have their time, and the popular Crysanthemum has its place at the front in Vick's beautiful monthly for September. Flowers, lawns, seasonal notes for the garden, always of practicable value, fill this popular magazine.

LODGE NOTES.

Mr. Badenock, D. G. C. of Orangemen of England, has issued a manifesto inviting Orangemen throughout the Kingdom to unite in opposition to Mr. Balfour's scheme for the establishment of a Catholic university in Ireland.

The Masonic Benevolent Society of Princeton, Ill., has decided to move the home office to Chicago. The president and secretary were authorized to secure suitable rooms by Oct. 1, in Chicago, and remove books and papers.

Camp 20, Clan-na-Gael, of this city, known as "Murderers' Roost," because of the Cronin murder, held its regular monthly meeting lately at North Side Turner Hall and subscribed $150 for the defense of the men now on trial.

Gen. J. C. Smith, Grand Master of Freemasons of Illinois, has sent a circular to the lodges of the State. The Grand Lodge has accepted an invitation to lay the cornerstone of the Auditorium building Oct. 2. On the same day will be celebrated the semi-centennial of the Grand Lodge. There will be a parade, with an escort of Knights Templars on the occasion.

Dr. Alexander T. Darrah, Past Grand Master of the Masonic Grand Lodge of Illinois, was buried Sept. 6 at Bloomington. Grand Master John C. Smith of Chicago conducted the Masonic ceremonies. The remains were conducted to the cemetery by a very long cortege of Masonic organizations headed by DeMolay Commandery, Knights Templar, and the band of that commandery. Gov. Fifer and his secretary attended the funeral.

Congressman Lawler of Chicago and fully 4,000 others attended a picnic of Foresters on a late Sabbath day. At the grounds there was dancing, boating, races, and games of all kinds, the rattling wheel of fortune and the opportunity, for 10 cents, to throw three eggs at the wooly head of a Negro which protruded from the center of a piece of canvas. In the afternoon the young men played baseball. Congressman Lawler, the orator of the day, made a brief speech, in which, speaking of Sunday picnics, he said: "Some people object to Sunday picnics. We choose Sunday for our picnic because we wanted a crowd and wanted money for benevolent purposes to pay the expenses of our sick and to support the widows and orphans of our deceased. We know Sunday to be the best day for our purpose."

The program for the entertainment of the Knights Templars during the triennial convocation in Washington has been officially announced. On Oct. 6 devotional exercises will be held at all churches. Monday will be devoted to receiving and escorting visiting commanderies to their quarters. There will be a parade of members of the Mystic Shrine in the afternoon and receptions by the local commanderies in the evening. Tuesday the parade of the grand encampment will take place, and in the evening there will be an excursion down the Potomac. Wednesday an exhibition drill will be held at the base-ball grounds, and excursions to the knights will be given throughout the day. Mrs. John A. Logan has tendered the Knights a reception for the evening. Thursday there will be a big barbecue in the afternoon and banquet in the evening.

A special from San Francisco says: "Some ideas of the critical state of affairs in Chinatown, owing to the congregation of desperate high-binders, may be gained from the fact that for a fortnight four policemen of the regular force have nightly been stationed on or about the stage of a Chinese theater in that quarter to prevent a threatened general raid and demolition of the institution by reckless high-binders. It seems that not long after the high-binder murder which occurred in that place some time ago, and no hope having been offered that the murderer would be arrested, a lot of high-binders asked Ah Kee, manager of the theater, to offer a reward for the murderer's arrest. This Ah Kee declined to do. Upon this, threats were made that the place would be cleaned out, and on several nights trouble seemed imminent. Good judges say there are fully 3,000 well-armed high-binders now living by blackmail in Chinatown."

Boils, pimples, and skin diseases of all kinds speedily disappear when the blood is purified by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. It has no equal as a tonic alternative, the results being immediate and satisfactory. Ask your druggist for it, and take no other.

All humors of the scalp, tetter sores, and dandruff cured, and falling hair checked; hence, baldness prevented by using Hall's Vegetable Sicilian Hair Renewer.

PAGAN COUNTERFEITS IN THE Christian Church.

A pamphlet of 52 pages, by Chas. A. S. Temple.

The following from Rev. H. H. Hinman shows his estimate of its contents:

"I have read with great interest 'Pagan Counterfeits in the Christian Church' by Chas. A. S. Temple. I regard the subject discussed as important, and its presentation both able and timely. There is a most manifest drift in all our Protestant denominations towards unauthorized ritualism and the substitution of human inventions in place of the simplicity of the Gospel, as given by Christ and his apostles. In calling attention to this tidal wave of formalism, the author has conferred a lasting benefit on the church of Protestantism."

CYNOSURE COLPORTEUR FOR INDIA.

Our missionary friend, Rev. W. J. Gladwin, Bombay, India, now visiting in this country, says that a native evangelist and colporteur can be supported in India on $5.00 per month, in addition to his income from sale of books. The Cynosure publisher has received on the above basis enough for three months' support for such an evangelist. The first month's support was taken by a little juvenile missionary society, the second by Mrs. M. A. Blanchard, and while writing this, a friend came in and said: "Put down our Missionary Band for the third month."

Any individual, or family, or Sabbath-school class, wishing to join in this effort, may forward $5.00 to the publisher, who will forward to the proper committee in India. No donation for less than one month's support of such an evangelist is asked for. Several may combine and have the pleasure of employing a missionary for a month, if one is not able to forward $5.00 on his own account.

What a fine opportunity to interest the children in your family, or your Sabbath-school class! But you must attend to it at once if you wish to have a part. If you need a little time to prepare for it, write and pledge $5.00 and your month shall be in the order in which your name is received. The first, second and third months are already taken. Address, Publisher Christian Cynosure, 221 W. Madison St., Chicago.

H. L. HASTINGS: "It's useless trying to force reform meetings till the people are ready for them. You can't hatch a chicken with a fork." Yes, but a very small fork may pin down the snake which is ready to swallow the chicken as soon as hatched.

AN EDITORIAL spoke of General Stark as born in Connecticut. The biographical dictionary says he was born in New Hampshire. Fitz-Green Halleck, in his poem on Connecticut, speaks of "Stark of Bennington" as one who was "nurtured" in Connecticut. We suppose he may have been born and "nurtured" in one State and removed into the other. Halleck ought to know. He was one of "The Poets of Connecticut."

THE CRONIN MURDERERS' trial continues to attract general attention. But the Masons who employed the hiring assassins, and ordered them to kill him, lie hid like snakes in the bottom of a brush-heap. Did they not denounce the murder?

MASONRY CONDEMNED BY ARNOLD OF RUGBY AND DEAN STANLEY.

In the Life and Correspondence of Thomas Arnold, D.D., late head master of Rugby School, and Regius Professor of Modern History in the University of Oxford, by Arthur Penrhyn Stanley, D.D., in two volumes, there is an extract from a letter to Rev. Trevannon Penrose, who had asked Dr. Arnold's opinion about sanctioning various provident societies by preaching sermons on their anniversaries. This letter (vol. 2, page 230) says:

"These half-heaven clubs, including, above all, Freemasonry, are, I think, utterly unlawful for a Christian man. They are close brotherhoods, formed with those who are not in a close sense our brethren."

REMARKS.—The above important condemnation of the lodge is furnished by Thomas White, Esq., of Brooklyn, N. Y., whose portrait and life sketch we hope soon to give to our readers. Mr. White and his elder brother Aaron were young lawyers, practicing the profession in Providence, Rhode Island; when the Grand Lodge of that State furnished the oaths of the first three degrees in Masonry to the Legislature duly attested, rather than stand the scrutiny of a committee who had power to imprison for contumacy, and exposure of their degrading ceremonies, before that body and the citizens at large. Mr. White, too, listened to Judge Pliny Merrick of Worcester, a renouncing Royal Arch Mason, who was employed, professionally, to discuss the lodge before the

R. I. Legislature. These two brothers bore an inconspicuous, though brave and important part in the successful struggles of that State to throw off the remnants of colonial vassalage in restricted suffrage and other aristocratic English ideas.

Mr. Aaron White, the elder brother, is dead; but Mr. Thomas White's memory is clear, his faculties bright, and his judgment and discrimination rare; and we hope to obtain from him for our readers facts and observations important to the young men of this present generation, and those which are to follow.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

WEATOGUE, Conn., Sept. 17, 1889.

There is, probably, no spot on earth, of equal dimensions and population, where there is more genuine, and, at the same time, more spurious religion than in New England.

In "The Debate on Slavery," between the writer and Dr. N. L. Rice, in the city of Cincinnati, the chief argument relied on by Dr. Rice was that the churches South were all orthodox, sound on the creed, and as no previous fundamental error ever existed alone, but a swarm of errors surrounded it, slave-holding would not be sin, because the slave-holders who believed it right were sound in every other respect. There was no Mormonism, spirit-worshiping Universalism, deism, or other forms of infidelity in the South. They all belonged to New England. Since that debate the South has shown some prevalent unsoundness in practice at least. But the charge that New England is the birthplace of error is still true.

Queen City Park, near Burlington, Vt., Lake Pleasant, in Massachusetts, and other places in towns and villages, are thronged by thousands during the summer months; and, in lectures, essays, debates, seances and sorceries of every imaginable and unimaginable sort and kind, the minds that swarm there seem to dance a tophet's reel with devils for fiddlers and jugglers to call off the figures. Balaam, the son of Beor, could not excel the eloquence of these trance-preachers, or the confusion of morals which these modern "high places" produce. They heal diseases by charms, mind-cures and galvanized brown paper, applied as handkerchiefs were from the person of Paul to the bodies of the sick, unmindful that God is the author of means as well as miracles. I have lately met a woman of fine sense and fair culture, so jealous for the honor of faith-cure that she hesitated to send for a good physician to treat a local difficulty, lest she should be guilty of unbelief in God's power and willingness to heal the sick.

AN ORIGINAL CHARACTER AND SINGULAR TALE.

I called on a fine young farmer, shrewd, industrious, well-mannered and eminently successful in life; the husband of a very sensible wife, and the father of two interesting children. This was his story:

His father and grandfather were infidels; and a club of such used to meet on the Sabbath and scout and deride the Bible. This son and grandson had learned to read; his attention was called to the Bible by their reviling it. He procured one and began to read it in course. His attention was riveted by the histories and miracles of the Old Testament, and he wept as he read the treatment of Christ in the New Testament. In short, he became converted to Christ, and is now a member of a Congregational church, and pays some thirty to forty dollars annually for the support of the Gospel.

This interesting man rejoiced to meet me, stated his case and desired my opinion of it. He said, "I had trouble in my first marriage which was dissolved by the law of Christ, and my mind had been uncommonly agitated. While in bed I saw a soft, sweet light come into the room where I lay. It filled me with intense happiness, so that I wished I could live eternally in that light. And it said, without speaking, 'I am Christ,' and it told me I had an important mission from God, but did not tell me what it was. But the conviction is so riveted to my being that I would give every dollar I possess to benefit mankind by that mission if I only knew what it was. Along with this vision came other things. It told me when my father and grandfather were to die. I told them the time, and they died accordingly; and many other such like things. Now, I wish you to tell me what it was; Christ, or the devil?"

I was thrilled by his narrative, and attracted by the good sense and sound judgment of the narrator. I said to him, "Christ has promised to 'manifest' himself to those who love him. John 14: 21. He manifested himself to Cornelius as 'a man in bright clothing' (Acts 1: 30); and to Paul in light above the brightness of the sun. Acts 26: 13. This was manifestly Christ, for he said, 'I am Jesus.' And the bliss-giving light which you saw and felt may have been, probably was, the shadow of Christ manifesting himself to you. An old philosophical writer says, 'Light is the shadow which God casts.' When Christ was transfigured 'his face did shine as the sun, and his raiment was white as the light.' Matt. 17: 2. But your 'mission' is to be found out by the Bible advice and your own good sense. Christ's birth was heralded by the angels in light to the shepherds; but they had to make their way to Bethlehem through darkness by the help of the Bible."

"And you must remember, too, that the devil pays his profoundest attention to those unto whom Christ manifests himself; that he can transform himself into an angel of light; that he thrusts his devilish presence into the counsels of the Almighty, as the prophet Micah saw him in 1 Kings 22: 20; and his impudence is such that he boldly assailed Christ himself."

"Now, therefore, my dear brother, my advice to you is to use daily the prayer for the 'whole armor of God' (Eph. 6: 14-18), and 'watch' as well as pray. Mohammed, in a cave by night, fancied the Angel Gabriel came to him and told him he was to be 'The Apostle of God,' but he proved to be a messenger of Satan. Ignatius Loyola said he received his power to found the order of the Jesuits in a cave near Enresa, a little town in Spain; and Jesuitism is a name of terror to the nations. You are to judge of your mission as you judge men, by its fruits. If these are 'love, joy, peace, gentleness, goodness, charity,' then commit your way unto the Lord, and he will teach you your mission."

FAITH HEALING.

Here at Weatogue are two excellent Christian women, who long since lost each an eye. One believed strongly in faith healing, and when her other eye was threatened she went to Dr. Cullis and was relieved. The other lady yesterday told me that her friend asked her, "Do you believe in God? Just so sure as I believe in God, so sure am I that my eye will get well." And it has been so she could read with it for some years.

A week since she arose in the morning, and her eye, which had pained her during the night, was going blind. She sent for her pastor and myself, "elders of the church," to pray for the recovery of her eye. We prayed sincerely and fervently, but her eye was not healed, and she has sent for an able oculist, Dr. Bacon of Hartford, who is now treating it. A good woman in New Britain is hard of hearing. Her husband insists that faith can and will restore her hearing. She herself does not believe her hearing is ever to be restored. Our Miss Flagg, sadly lamed by a fall, has been prayed for by those who believe that Christ can, and, if requested in faith, will heal "all manner of diseases," as he did when on earth. Miss Flagg still walks with crutches.

The Cynosure, after some experience, much reflection, observation and prayer, has some convictions and beliefs on this sacred and interesting theme. And without claiming to be beyond the liability to err, we are confident that God has given us some important truths concerning this healing movement. As:

1st. Healing sick people is a proper object of prayer; and if God gives faith he will give health.

2nd. We have no doubt many are healed by direct interposition of God in answer to prayer.

3rd. But there must be good reasons why the sick should recover; and in cases of healing, the Holy Spirit leads the person or persons praying to plead those reasons. So pleaded Moses and Hezekiah for divine interposition, and such are always miraculous and superhuman; and "with God all things are possible." The idea that "the age of miracles is past" is absurd.

4th. But the devil can heal diseases as well as God. If Satan could put boils on Job, he could take them off; and he does heal when he can make by it.

5th. Hence the present faith healing movement is badly mixed. But as Christ's coming draws near, and Satan always strives to get in his work before Christ's, faith healing is to-day more Satanic than Christian. These are some of the proofs and tokens:

1. It is tinged with sorcery. Satan's coming is with "lying wonders." The wonders are real, but they land people in lies of some sort.

2. It exalts body-healing above its relative merits. Those whom Christ healed are all dead.

"Their ashes flew; no marble tells us where."

And how much benefit the prolongation of their lives was may be questionable.

3. The motives of the multitude who seek healing are defective. They do not "seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness;" but to get well.

4. The idea of getting bodily healing leads every other at Old Orchard and the institution of Dr. Cullis. We do not know what ticket those gentlemen vote, or even if they vote at all; or whether they question their patients whether they brother with blacklegs and saloon-keepers in secret, or with Christians openly.

5. Faith healing to-day blends with familiar spiritism, Mormonism, and every species of jugglery; and the cures are often real.

6. The chief reason why Christ wrought cures was to convince people that he was truly the Son of God. At this day that reason does not exist to the same degree. For two-thirds of our globe are ruled by minds who believe Christ was the Son of God. So miracles are not so needed to work popular faith. They see that Christ's countries excel others. But the other pitfall is equally fatal. Thousands trust for healing to the doctor or his saddle-bags instead of applying to Christ by faith. Medicinal science is derived from Greek paganism, and it retains a tinge from the complexion of its origin. Let us rejoice that the question is up; and hope that Christ, as predicted, will soon heal our diseases, as well as pardon our sins.

JUDGE MCCONNELL AND THE CRONIN CASE.

The Cronin trial would be a good original for the fable of Sisyphus and his stone. Another week has passed, 564 men have been examined for the jury, and four only had been sworn in when court opened Monday morning.

We have noted during the week that Judge McConnell had somewhat relaxed the rigidity of his ruling and seemed willing to accept members of the secretly sworn American League and Order of the Sons of America. The lawyers for the defence, however, exercised the right of peremptory challenge with all such cases; not, probably, because of the foresworn condition of their moral convictions, but because of a prior and deep-seated prejudice against the religion of the Catholic defendants.

But our readers are more interested in the examination of gentlemen who are of like faith with themselves in respect to secret societies. A number of these had been excused because their "prejudice" against secret societies was held to incapacitate them for jurors, when on Tuesday, the 10th inst., the examination of Mr. George H. Wells, a wholesale grocer of Chicago, closed with as remarkable a ruling from Judge McConnell as that concerning the Catholic church which we criticized last week. Mr. Wells did not belong to any secret society, and would believe the testimony of members of the Clan-na-Gael only when corroborated by other witnesses. Judge McConnell continued the examination by saying:

"It will be your duty to take the statements of the witnesses who come upon the stand without any preconceived notions as to the character of the witnesses, or their testimony, but to determine from the particular evidence given, the continuity of their story, and their appearance and the value of their testimony. Yet, you have already stated you would require corroborative evidence before you would believe such a man. Did you mean to be understood that way?"

Mr. Wells replied:

"I mean to say, from what I understand of the oath taken by each member of a secret society, and by which he is bound, that I would hardly feel able to take his evidence as worthy of belief without it was supported. I cannot help saying I feel his evidence would be governed by his oath."

This was a clear and honest statement of a fact which is recognized by nine men out of ten, or ninety-nine in every hundred, who have made a fair examination of the oaths of secret societies, or have observed to what degree their members are held by such oaths. There was no "prejudice" in such a judgment, no malice toward any class of men. It was a simple statement of fact. It is as if we should say that the testimony of a husband or a wife, whose vows are unbroken, would probably be affected by their relation to each other. But Judge McConnell excused Mr. Wells with the remark, "We cannot receive a man as a juror who has preconceived notions of men who may be called upon as witnesses."

Mr. Wells may not have desired a place on the jury, but we are sure he probably did not thank the court for such a judgment; and if the final decision of this case should follow in the same line we need not expect the murderers of Cronin will be punished. Judge McConnell thereby gave it as his opinion from the bench that the recognition of the fact that Freemasons, Odd-fellows, Jesuits, Clán-na-Gael, Hibernians, White Caps, etc., etc., have taken obligations which between themselves are held to be binding as oaths; and which are regarded by them in actual experience, no matter how many other obligations may be super-imposed, or by whom,—such recognition of facts is "prejudice," "preconceived notion," that incapacitates a man from passing a fair judgment upon his fellows.

On the other hand, Mr. Wells and Sidney Buggs and Duncan Cameron, and numerous other talesmen who have been rejected because of their candor and wise discernment of a notorious fact, are men who for that very reason would make the best jurymen. They only are in position to judge the men by whom lodge oaths have wrought a horrible murder. State's Attorney Longenecker and his associates, Hynes and Mills, have seemed to honor the convictions of these men; but, though since the above case Judge McConnell has modified his ruling, the defense has promptly rejected them.

THE ILLINOIS REPORT OF FUNDS shows a meager business the past year, and the Executive Committee are prepared to appeal earnestly for help. Let there be a frank consideration of this matter by friends in this State. The approaching convention will require more than is now in the treasury to meet expenses, and there should be by that time several hundred dollars pledged to begin the next year with a strong hand. Anticipate the appeal of the Committee by generous contributions. Send to the treasurer at this office.

—Bro. Hinman is at work for the State meeting at Senecaville, O. Bishop Milton Wright, of Dayton, and Rev. S. A. George, of Mansfield, are down for addresses. See the notices elsewhere.

—The young N. C. A. agent, E. W. Shaw, is greatly encouraged by the Michigan work which opens well. He has four appointments for lectures this week and two for next. The Michigan friends are not all dead neither are they sleeping. In good time we shall have cheering messages from them.

—The argument by our College agent, Rev. S. F. Porter, on Bible wines is remarkable for common sense and clearness of statement. The case has often been discussed with more show of learning and with more abundance of words; but seldom in a way to convince the unlearned so surely and fix the conviction of the truth upon them. After reading this article it would seem most improbable that any body of believing Christian men should continue the use of alcoholic wine at the communion table. Mr. Porter will issue this article in tract form.

—By an error in making up the forms last week it was reported that the College church, Wheaton, had taken a collection for Col. George A. Clarke's mission (the Pacific Garden in this city). It is proposed to hold a union meeting soon, at which such a collection will be taken, when Col. Clarke will be present to make an address. The collection referred to was voted by the church to the American Missionary Association.

—It is only needful to refer to the Chicago Sunday papers to see the kind of piety indulged by the lodges. Those are the sheets patronized by the secret orders; just as are the Sunday trains always and everywhere. We counted four Knight Templar meetings, three of Royal Arch Chapters, five of Blue lodges, one of a Scotch Rite consistory, one of a woman's attachment to Masonry, and three of other orders, in a late Sunday sheet. The lodges have no need of the Sabbath. As the late saloon-keeper Frank Lawler (now M. C.) said at a Sunday picnic of Foresters the other day, "We chose Sunday for our picnic because we wanted a crowd and wanted money." The law of the lodge is paramount in every secret order.

—At a meeting of the Illinois State Executive Committee, meeting Saturday, it was decided to hold the next State convention at Elgin on the 5th and 6th of November. Col. George R. Clarke of the Pacific Garden Mission in this city and Mrs. L. S. Rounds, president of the Illinois W. C. T. Union, are expected to speak; also it is hoped that Miss E. E. Flagg, our New England agent and correspondent, will give an address, since she is expected at the National W. C. T. U. meeting in this city on the 8th of November. The Executive Committee have also provided for a prize oratorical contest by college students from the northern part of the State. This will probably be one of the most interesting of the Illinois meetings. The formal call will appear next week.

—We should not pass the article of Rev. Mr. Oglesby, who has for many years been an earnest advocate of our reform, without a word of explanation. He ignores the distinction between usury and interest which is commonly accepted, and which we believe to be a fair one. He has also, we think without intention of dishonoring the Christian church, accepted the customary phrase of many reformers of our financial and social systems, and seems to speak of the church and its Founder with disrespect. He does not mean so much as his words imply, when he says that "our Christianity needs remodeling." Who is able to do it, if Christ does not come back to suffer again? Nor do we at all believe in the worn out phrase that the church "has lost its grip on society." There is no greater power on earth to-day than the church of the living God. Christian men may err in judgment, and be full of defects; but that fact is not going to help us to a new Christianity.

PERSONAL NOTES.

—Rev. J. A. Richards of Fort Scott, Kansas, who has been very low with severe sickness, is slowly recovering health. We hope the Lord has yet much work for men of his earnest spirit.

—The Cynosure has referred once or twice to a so-called "faith healer" in this city named Teed, whose misguided followers have assailed us in consequence. The Evening Journal, of this city, last Wednesday gave four or five columns to this impostor, showing that he is a kind of Mormon in disguise and "dead-beat," for whom the penitentiary should open its doors.

—Miss M. F. Cusick, better known as the "Nun of Kenmare," is at present in Chicago, stopping at the Sherman House. She is described by the press as "a woman in middle life, with kindly face and bright twinkling eyes, her short gray hair showing beneath a neat white cap." She proposes to lecture during her stay in Chicago on Romanism and will be sure to draw a large audience. Few are as able as she to expose the errors and follies of Romanism.

—It is reported that John A. Greenlee of Kearney, Neb., a Freemason of high degree, has been missing since the 6th of May last, when he left Belle Plaine, Iowa, to go to his home via Des Moines. It is said he was seen in New York in a ragged and demented condition on the 16th of September. We fear the recollection of the night he played Hiram was too much for his nervous system to endure, especially since it is known that the murderous Clan-na-Gael was founded by a Freemason on the plan of Masonry.

—Memorial services in honor of the late A. M. Delight were held last Thursday at the First Methodist church in this city. A large number of Mr. Delight's friends were in attendance. The departed evangelist was eulogized in well-chosen words by the Rev. Dr. Bolton, and by Messrs. S. D. Pierce, Simeon King and Col. Clarke; and a subscription was started with the following head: "We, the citizens of Chicago, appreciating the good done for the cause of temperance by the late A. M. Delight, do most heartily contribute to the building of a drinking fountain, to be known as the Fountain of Delight, and to be located by the city hall."

THE HOME.

FAITH AND SIGHT IN THE LATTER DAYS.

Thou say'st, "Take up thy cross,
O man, and follow Me;"
The night is black, the feet are slack,
Yet we would follow Thee.

But oh, dear Lord, we cry,
That we Thy face could see!
Thy blessed face one moment's space—
Then might we follow Thee!

Dim tracts of time divide
Those golden days from me,
Thy voice becomes strange o'er years of change;
How can I follow Thee?

Comes faint and far Thy voice
From vales of Galilee;
Thy vision fades in ancient shades;
How should we follow Thee?

Unchanging law binds all,
And Nature all we see;
Thou art a star, far off, too far,
Too far to follow Thee.

Ah, sense-bound heart and blind!
Is naught but what we see?
Can time undo what once was true;
Can we not follow Thee?

Is what we trace of law
The whole of God's decree?
Does our brief span grasp Nature's plan
And bid not follow Thee?

Oh, heavy cross—of faith
In what we cannot see!
As once of yore, Thyself restore
And help to follow Thee?

If not as once Thou cam'st
In true humanity,
Come yet as guest within the breast
That burns to follow Thee.

Within our heart of hearts
In nearest nearness be;
Set up Thy throne within Thine own;
Go, Lord; we follow Thee.

HARLAN PAGE.

BY REV. A. SINS.

Harlan Page was born in Coventry, Connecticut, U. S., July 28, 1791. At twenty-three years of age, he and his wife publicly professed their faith in Christ, and joined the church.

As soon as he was converted he began to interest himself in the salvation of souls. One of his favorite methods of work was writing letters to different individuals about their eternal welfare. It would be difficult to compute the number of pointed, earnest, and powerful appeals which he sent all over the land through the mails. In Sabbath-school work he took a very prominent part, and labored assiduously for the conversion of his pupils. Of his success in this direction, a Christian friend says: "A number of ladies, who, when in youth, attended this school, still feel under great obligations to him, and to God, for his faithful and untiring efforts for their salvation, and attribute their conversion, under God, to his instrumentality."

His biographer says that "During his stay in Jewett City, he worked fifty-seven days, at seventy-five cents a day. Here was a mechanic performing his daily task on time; establishing and sustaining a religious meeting at the boarding-house, on Wednesday evenings; a meeting of the people of God for prayer on Sabbath mornings, at sunrise; and, though he went about three miles to attend public worship, throwing his efforts into a Sabbath-school at 5 P. M., and instructing a class; devoting Sabbath evenings to meetings and family visitation; conversing with the sick, the careless, the anxious, and those indulging a hope; distributing tracts; endeavoring to awaken an interest in the benevolent operations of the day; keeping a brief diary; abounding in prayer; and adopting methods for the foundation of a church, and the settlement of an evangelical pastor."

The friend with whom he lodged there says: "Religion was always first in his mind. If he entered a family, after his usual salutation, this subject was immediately introduced. In promoting the Sabbath-schools, he went out into the highways; and wherever he found those of suitable age—however far from God they might seem

—he would gain their attention, and, if possible, bring them in. Six or eight wild boys, from twelve to fourteen years of age, were thus induced to attend; were led to see their ruin by sin, and brought hopefully to Christ."

In the providence of God Mr. Page was, in Oct., 1825, appointed as depositary of the American Tract Society—a position for which he was eminently fitted. It is said that "one consideration that satisfied his mind of the propriety of changing his sphere of effort was, that he could think of no young persons, within the bounds of his congregation, whom he had not seriously addressed, either personally, or by letter, on the subject of their salvation. Many of them had already united with the church." He at once set to work to bring all the employees of the Tract Society under the influence of grace. In this he was eminently successful. God crowned his labors with glorious results. In one of the most wonderful revivals that was ever experienced in the city of New York—a revival which resulted in an accession to the evangelical churches of about two thousand souls—this indefatigable worker labored with all his might to win souls for Christ. His labors and his incessant prayers contributed greatly to the accomplishment of this glorious result.

To persuade the young to abandon swearing, Sabbath-breaking, drinking intoxicants and using tobacco, but more especially to get them soundly converted, was his constant aim and work. In speaking of his labors, while in connection with the Brainerd church, the minister, who was then his pastor, says: "His influence, while the Lord continued him with us, was excellent. He was always engaged—always spiritual. His zeal seemed to suffer no declension; it savored of the closet, of self-communion, of heaven. He had a wonderful tact in conducting our prayer meetings and making them interesting; always diversified, and yet always solemn. His remarks, though simple, were never commonplace. The point and spirit of them appeared to have been premeditated, and they were generally well adapted to the character and condition of those present. He had also a happy talent for addressing strangers on the subject of personal religion; and, after our meetings, would almost always single out some individual, and engage in close personal conversation. Several persons were in this way brought under conviction of sin, and some will have reason to bless God to eternity for his persevering faithfulness."

"When engaged in his usual business, the religious welfare of persons, with whose state he had become acquainted, was generally pressing on his mind. It is now known, that for several years before he died, he usually had by him a memorandum of the names and residences of a few individuals, with whom he was to converse. On these he would call, as he went to and from his office, or religious meetings. If no names were on his list, he felt that he was doing little good. He also uniformly had in his hat some awakening tracts, that he might present as he should judge them adapted to the state of those whom he met. Not unfrequently he would seize a few moments from his usual occupation, to go out and address some individual. When the business of the day was closed, he hastened to some meeting, or other religious engagement for the evening. Every evidence of good accomplished gave him new joy; and every opening for usefulness added a new impulse to his efforts. He felt that, under God, the eternal joy or woe of immortal souls depended on his fidelity."

"It was not the great object of his spiritual life himself to be happy in religion, but, rather by persevering labors and holy self-denial—like the apostle who testified that he died daily—to glorify God in winning souls to him. He ardently desired to devote the whole undivided efforts of his life to this work; and nothing but the duty of providing for the support of his family prevented it."

"He brought his efforts to bear upon individuals, and followed up impressions made. All the triumphs of the Gospel, he knew, consist in the conversion and sanctification of individuals; and he was not satisfied with merely praying and contributing for the salvation of the world as a whole, or having a general impression made on the minds of a congregation. His intense desire was that individuals should be turned from sin to God. Not unfrequently he would observe in the congregation a person unknown to him, who seemed to give solemn attention to divine truth; ascertain who he was, and seek a personal interview; and, in all cases, if he left an individual to-day in an interesting state of mind, he would endeavor to see him again to-morrow, and follow up the impression at brief intervals, till there was no longer encouragement, or he had evidence of true conversion."

His biographer says: "There is no doubt that it was by continual and fervent prayer that he imbibed that glowing sense of eternal things, that love to souls, and that heavenly unction, which were at once the spring of his fidelity, and, under God, the ground of his success."

"He was uniform and unwearied. I know not who has made or heard the charge of inconsistency in his Christian character."

"Is it wonderful that God should have blessed his efforts?—that, in each church with which he stood connected, individuals, when relating their religious experience, should be heard referring to his faithful endeavors as the means of bringing them to Christ?—that a revenue of souls should have been gathered from the place of his nativity, thirty-two teachers be brought publicly to confess Christ from one of his Sabbath-schools, and nine of them have set their faces toward the ministry?—that thirty-four souls should have been gathered by him and his fellow laborers from one ward of the city; and fifty-eight, in connection with his efforts, and those of a few endeared associates, have been brought to join themselves to the people of God, from the tract and Bible houses?—that individuals should come to his dying bed, and thank him, with tears, for his fidelity to their own souls? Is it wonderful that, in speaking to her who is now his widow, of his early departure, and looking back on his work on earth as ended, he should, with the solemnity of eternity on his countenance, say: 'I know it is all of grace, and nothing that I have done; but I think I have had evidence that more than one hundred souls have been converted to God through my own direct and personal instrumentality?'"

As he drew near death he exclaimed: "Oh, for a holy ministry, devoted to the salvation of souls! I cannot bear to have so much time wasted in controversy. If all would devote themselves to the salvation of souls, how many might be saved from eternal burnings!" Of him it might truly be said that "he ceased not to warn every one night and day with tears." He died in great peace and triumph, Sept. 23, 1834.—From "Shining Lights."

THE WORK-AND-PLAY SCHOOL FOR LITTLE CHILDREN IN MARDIN, TURKEY.

BY MRS. M. G. NUTTING.

For several years both the missionaries and the native brethren had felt that a school for little children, under direct missionary supervision, was essential to the successful prosecution of our work; and the kindergarten idea was in great favor. But there was no place, no material, no practical kindergartner. However, in the course of changes made during the summer of 1887 it was decided to disregard obstacles and begin. Passable little tables and seats were made from packing boxes, whatever material could be utilized or purchased in the city was gathered together, the bedroom of the Girls' High School was the place, and the writer, recently arrived from America, was placed in charge. The first prospectus states that the school is for children of the city from 4 to 8 years old, who will be cared for from 8 A. M. to 4 P. M. The object of the training is the systematic development of both body and mind, heart and soul, through instruction in motion, color, size, form, reading, singing, numbers, memorizing, general lessons in simple geography, physiology, time, etc., somewhat according to the kindergarten idea, directing the energies of mind and body from early years with the hope of greatly increasing the efficiency of future helpers in our mission field.

The school was opened Sept. 12, 1887. Thirty-seven pupils were enrolled that first year, and the average attendance was nearly as many, absences being very rare. School is evidently the pleasantest experience of the little ones. Their homes are so cheerless and so without discipline that both parents and children would be glad to have the daily school hours lengthened. The price charged for tuition was one-half piaster weekly for every child. (A piaster is a little more than four cents.)

The school was so successful and popular that the girls' bedroom soon proved a very strait place, and in March new quarters were found in the Theological Seminary building, where we worked very satisfactorily until the final examination day, July 25, 1888. Even though invitations were restricted to the immediate families of pupils, our rooms were overcrowded; but all seemed much pleased to see what a variety of interesting things the children could do. And all through the year there had been many visitors.

For our second year, opening Oct. 1, 1888, we were obliged to go to a third place, each removal necessitating considerable expense in the way of repairs, refitting, etc. This time the place was over the chapel in the city, about fifteen minutes' walk from our premises, a more convenient place for the children, but much harder for me, since no lady can go through the streets unattended without exciting remark, and occasionally feeling the force of a stone or a snowball. Even mounted on my horse, with a servant man at my side, I do not always escape these disagreeable incidents. Pelted with rains, masses of snow thrown from the flat mud roofs into the narrow streets, unspeakable mud and filth, intense sunshine beating down—these are varieties.

That the work of this second year has been far more satisfactory, quiet and efficient than the first, may be gathered from the following review. I have a little more command of the language (Arabic), and my assistant is a very efficient, willing-hearted, devout young Armenian lady who graduated from the Constantinople Home last year. Her father's home is here, and her elder sister is assistant in the Girls' High School. They use Arabic, Armenian, English and Turkish, for it is not unusual here to find even ordinary people with enough of several languages to converse in them.

Before re-opening, the eighteen little tables were painted walnut brown, with paint from America, a rare thing here, and half of them scratched in the inch squares so essential to the exactness of much of the children's handiwork. I had to do this painting the best I could, for we cannot trust a native with a paint-brush. I was quite puzzled about how to square off the tables; but finally took a sharp nail, and wedging it into a tool-handle, scratched away, guided by a heavy carpenter's square. And I will confess that the reason for the other nine little tables remaining unscratched until this day—excepting as some venturesome youngster has tried etching on his private account, and found his hands tingling from my little stick in consequence—is that the work so lamed my wrists and hands that I could not finish.

The tuition was slightly increased this year, being three piasters monthly for every child; yet, notwithstanding this heavy price—as it seems to the people—the number of pupils enrolled has been fifty-two, most of them from the families of the Protestant community.

Through friends in America and missionaries here the school has received a good supply of kindergarten material, a "baby organ," a large clock, bells, scrap-books, pictures, cards, etc., and about twenty-five dollars in money, so that at the close of this second year not only are all running expenses paid,—excepting the salaries of teachers—but there is a sum of nearly ten dollars remaining in hand to make necessary repairs this summer, and pay the tuition of three or four poor children next school year.

The one great pressing need of the school is a new, large, substantial building for a permanent home for the school. What would you think of children having no place to play at recess but a sort of stone balcony scarcely large enough for standing room for the forty! Then, in the narrow, high-walled streets and at their homes they almost never see green things growing, and our simple lessons in natural history must be explained and illustrated almost as to the blind. So we are anxious to have not only the "kinder," but also the "garten," which we should plan for in erecting the new building.

Very crude, very obtuse, very undisciplined most of the little ones are as they enter school. And it is only by infinitesimal degrees in most cases that progress is apparent, that the little souls are won toward Christ-like living. But as we see the glimmering of an apprehension that truth is better than lying (in this land of deceit and falsehood), the growing appreciation of beautiful things and gentle ways, the efforts at self-control in word and action, the ennobling self-reliance and spirit of helpfulness, we feel that the little ones are somewhat nearer the kingdom than they were a year ago.

TEMPERANCE.

PATRIOTISM AND BEER.

The word Milwaukee suggests beer, and no old soldier was allowed to forget its principal industry during the late encampment just closed.

At the first meeting of the G. A. R. council, a letter was received from the Pabst Brewing Co., offering to defray the expenses of the amphitheater seats, erected for the spectators of the naval battle, the cost being $15,000. The council immediately broke into cheers, and accompanied by the exposition band, marched to the office of the brewing company. Col. Watrous thanked the Big Boss Brewer, "In behalf of every old soldier, living or dead" (what an insult), and gave him a badge making him a life-member of the council. The Sentinel says:

"There were more cheers, and the band played 'The Battle Cry of Freedom,' as the column wound around on Tenth street to a little saloon. Word had already been sent ahead, and the saloon keeper opened his house. It was now nearly midnight, and four members of the encampment council pulled off their coats and drew beer for the serenaders."

On Monday Pabst and his brewery received a grand ovation. The Sentinel says of this affair:

"Capt. Fred Pabst and Gambrinus held a reception yesterday on Chestnut street. Gambrinus stood guard while Capt. Pabst hired fifty men to show visitors around the brewery. From morning until night, a crowd of people besieged the establishment, and after 10,000 had drunk, there was plenty of beer left. Having heard of Capt. Pabst's princely gift to the veterans, all the old soldiers wanted to see the big brewer. The brewer had anticipated the visit and was prepared to receive his friends. With his straw hat tipped on the back of his head, and wearing the badge of the executive council, Capt. Pabst stood at the door of his office and shook hands with 10,000 people. Then he grouped his visitors together in companies of a dozen or more, and after each had been given a souvenir and a little bottle of beer, the party was conducted through the brewery, returning to a mammoth bar-room in one of the malt houses. There a bar 150 feet long had been constructed, and the people drank their fill without money and without price. Delegations from Iowa and Kansas quenched their thirst and blessed Gambrinus."

On Tuesday the line of march was extended twelve blocks in order that the old soldiers might bow to the big brewing interest. We again clip from the Sentinel:

"The veterans all cheered when they saw the big brewer. The remnant of the grandest army the world ever saw was passing in review before Capt. Pabst, and the brewer was great enough to appreciate the compliment. It was one continued round of cheering for more than two hours. The bands would always begin to play directly in front of the open window, and the colors were lowered and raised as a mark of respect. Not a veteran out of the thousands who passed forgot to raise his hat, and not a post who went by without giving three cheers for Capt. Pabst. The brewer was well repaid for his gift, for with his millions he could not have purchased such genuine friendship as was shown him from the grizzled old veterans as they passed. At last the long line had wound its way down the street, but the veterans had all read a big sign which invited them to return before they left the city and drink all the beer they wanted, free of charge."

On Thursday a large tent was pitched on Pabst lawn, and the encampment committee was dined and wined and beered. From the Northwestern Mail we clip the further account of the disgraceful encampment:

"For half a block down Chestnut street special police kept the crowd in line that poured into Pabst's office. As they passed through each was presented, if they wished it, with an illustrated souvenir, a small bottle of beer and a cane. The line was guided through the engine house and brewing rooms, then across the street to the fire-engine house and cooper yards, then back to a malt cellar for refreshments. Many cut the route short by turning into the cellar. There were evidently many 'rounders' in the crowd—men who made the trip repeatedly in order that they might pass through the beer cellar. I crossed Tenth street with a member of the 'Old Guard' of Washington, who was so full of beer that he was scarcely able to stagger from the front of a passing dray. The scene in the beer cellar passed anything that even Milwaukee ever saw. On one side was a bar 150 feet long, and behind it not less than twenty bar-tenders were drawing and passing out beer at an incredible rate of speed. Half barrels of beer sat against the wall with tin pails below the faucets. Tubs of water sat beneath the bar. Five hundred people were drinking all the time, while for the half hour I watched the performance not far from one hundred people passed through the cellar every minute. The local papers estimate that for five days an average of 16,000 visitors drank free beer at this bar daily. The constant clatter of a thousand beer glasses, the laughter and shouts of the drinkers, the babel of German and English, with the rolling of kegs across the concrete floor and the pounding of beer mallets united to make a din such as is seldom heard in a civilized land. The crowd at the bar was crushing and clamorous. Old soakers held the first row fairly well. Old inmates of the soldier's home stood about too stupidly full to talk, and waited for chances to renew their attack on the bar. The floor was flooded with beer spilled by the drinkers and bar-tenders, and stirred into mud with the dust from the visitors' feet."

We suggest that the big brewer perfect his patriotism by donating a picture of the scene above described to each G. A. R. and S. of V. post for the adoration of the Sons of Veterans.—The Geneva Patriot.

THE NATIONAL W. C. T. U. MEETING.

The sixteenth convention of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union meets in Battery D, Chicago, November 8, and continues through the 12th, with meetings of special interest on the Sabbath day. The society represents over two hundred thousand earnest-hearted women who are devoted to works of philanthropy along lines that build up the temperance reform. That their view of this reform is very broad is proved from the fact that they have forty distinct departments of work, under the general heads of Preventive, Educational, Evangelistic, Social, Legal, and the Department of Organization. Through their influence, scientific temperance instruction has been secured by law in all the territories in all schools supported in whole or in part from the United States Treasury (namely: West Point, Annapolis, the Indian schools, army post schools, etc.), and in twenty-seven States the same laws are now in operation. They have special lines of work for soldiers, sailors, miners, and all classes who are in circumstances of especial temptation so far as pure and wholesome habits of life are concerned. They have a network of juvenile societies extending from Tampa Bay to Puget Sound. They have a systematic course of reading for mothers, and mothers' meetings are a feature of the local auxiliaries. In these heredity and hygiene are subjects especially considered. They have a publishing house in Chicago which sends out about sixty millions of pages annually, and prints the Union Signal, which has sixty thousand subscribers, and is the chief paper ever edited and published by women. Their Gospel work has permeated the nation, and was never more earnestly pursued than now. In the social realm they seek especially to enlist the influence of young women, and to hold up the standard of total abstinence for others' sake. The Department of the White Cross and the White Shield, which is one of the largest, has called especial attention to the securing of laws for the protection of women, and to the equalizing of the standard of an upright life, making it the same for men that it has always been for women. This society has about ten thousand local auxiliaries, and representatives from every State and Territory will be in attendance at the coming convention. The influence of all our readers, by way of good will and good word, is hereby respectfully asked, to help make this convention a success, and their presence will be most cordially welcomed.

COMMENTS ON THE S. S. LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The Anointing of David. Vs. 1-3. After many years of patient waiting David is at last recognized by the people as their king. With all great leaders the divine anointing for their work comes first, the human recognition afterwards; and like David, Cromwell, Luther, or our own Lincoln, they must spring from the people. The kings who are of God's anointing, must be of the same bone and flesh as their subjects, to have that common sympathy necessary to true kingship. Christ Jesus, God's own Son, who was "given to be a leader and commander to the people," was lowly and obscure in his earthly origin; nor did he "take on him the nature of angels, but the seed of Abraham," that "he might be touched with the feeling of our infirmities," and pitiful to our human weakness. The whole proceedings were ratified by a solemn covenant between David and the elders. The monarchy was a constitutional one. The king was merely Jehovah's viceroy, bound by the laws of God equally with his meanest subject. It would be possible to cull from the Old Testament alone a complete text-book on political economy. Sanitary and moral laws, the rights of the people, the duties of the civil power are therein set forth with the most singular clearness, and with the force of an Almighty fiat behind it; and yet we are casting out this wonderful book from our public schools, and thus laying the foundation for infidelity and mere materialism. The Bible is the patriot's book. Teach the Bible to the children, and you teach them love of country.

2. The Taking of Jerusalem. Vs. 4-10. Many commentators believe that the blind and lame here spoken of were idols placed on the walls of the fortress for its defence; and as David had probably spoken mockingly of the helplessness of false gods even to defend themselves, the enemy sent back this answering taunt. One idol is as powerless to save as another. The man who puts his trust in bank stocks is not a whit wiser or better off than the benighted pagan who confides in a stone. The essence of heathenism is to trust in something else besides God. Some men put their faith in a secret lodge vow. They cannot trust God to protect them when traveling, or take care of their family or business interests. Many are trusting to Masonry to save them. As civilization advances the grosser forms of heathenism necessarily die out, but the principle will always remain and need to be steadily fought. Masonry is the heathenism of modern times, taking its own writers as authority; and this is only the chief one among many lower reasons why every Christian should be interested in its downfall, and should seek to save the young men of our country, especially, from falling into its snare. "Nevertheless David took the stronghold of Zion." Idols are as powerless to-day as they were then. The stronghold of the liquor traffic, and of every social evil, is guarded by the false gods of Mammon and Lust, but when the Lord's people have the same heroic spirit that inspired David's little army, they too will be hurled down.

3. David's Prosperity. Vs. 9-12. A reform that simply pulls down is not worth much. There must be a building up. The strongholds of evil must be cleaned out and made strongholds for the truth. Our cities, our frontier settlements, are to be possessed for Christ. The nation that honors God is the nation God will honor. It is interesting to read how David took all his fame and prosperity. He not only recognized the divine Source of it all, but he realized that God had established his kingdom, not for his own sake that he might enjoy the honor and luxuries of sovereign power, but for the people's sake over whom he reigned. If riches, greatness, or even an ordinary share of worldly success comes to us, it is only that we may use it for others, or the blessing becomes a curse.

HELPFUL THOUGHTS FROM PELOUBET'S QUARTERLY.

1. No country is on a sure foundation without religion. They that seek first the kingdom of God shall receive not only life everlasting, but, in this life, an hundred fold of houses and lands. The true Christian is the wise patriot.

2. Jerusalem, before David captured it, was a type of the unconverted man. In the city below, the people of God were freely admitted, and there were many pleasant and good things, and the Jebusites cared not so long as they held the citadel. So there are many pleasant things in the lives of the unconverted, and they are willing to admit much that is religious, provided only they may hold the citadel, the heart, which holds the mastery over all.

3. Conversion is like the capture of the citadel and placing God on the throne of the heart. And then, although some worldly things insinuate themselves into the life, yet the Lord God sits on the throne.

—The Gospel is spreading rapidly in Japan. In Tokio it is estimated that the new converts average five hundred a month.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—A new Missionary Training Institute was lately organized in Minneapolis, representing several evangelical denominations and the Young Men's Christian Association of that city and St. Paul, and in connection with the work which has long been carried on in England under Dr. H. Grattan Guinness. It will open Oct. 2, at 828 Sixth Avenue South, Minneapolis, at 2 P. M. This institute will be undenominational in character and open to students from all evangelical denominations, both men and women, and will prepare for both home and foreign work. Instruction will be given in the following departments: Biblical, Evangelistic, Medical, Linguistic and Historico-Missionary. The instruction will be gratuitous and under competent direction.

—A branch of the American Tract Society was organized, known as the Chicago Tract Society, at the Grand Pacific hotel a few days since. The society will distribute tracts, periodicals, and books, printed in the various languages spoken in Chicago, among the destitute and foreign population of the city.

—A correspondent of the Christian Worker, representing the Friends' mission in Alaska, recommends that missions in that country be made independent by starting saw-mills and canning factories in connection with them. Alaska salmon are the best in the world, and her magnificent pine forests are almost inexhaustible.

—The work of Nathan T. and Esther G. Frame, the Quaker evangelists, in the South this summer, has produced a profound impression wherever they have gone. They held meetings in Savannah, Linden, Clifton and other points in Tennessee. The Midland Headlight, speaking of Esther G. Frame's ministry and the result, says: "Hundreds were unable to get into the church, and for over an hour before services began standing room could not be obtained. What was the result? Twenty-one accessions to the Methodist church here. The whole number of conversions are unknown, and eternity alone will reveal the good accomplished by her two weeks' work in Linden." The Clifton Times says: "Those who have believed that there is a Scripture injunction against women occupying the pulpit have surrendered their belief in the presence of her grand Christian character and inspired discourses. Tuesday the business houses, saloons and all, were closed, showing what a change has been wrought in so short a while."

—There were 516 conversions and accessions in the mission churches served by students of Garrett Biblical Institute last year.

—The visit of Rev. W. F. Crafts, Field Secretary of the American Sabbath Union, to the Pacific Coast has aroused much interest in the cause. A Sabbath Convention, composed of members of different denominations, was held in San Francisco, and measures were begun for securing legislation and the better observance of the Sabbath. California is the only State that has no Sabbath law.

—There are twenty-seven societies having missions in Africa, with 453 ordained and 107 lay preachers and helpers; 186 women, 10,000 native pastors and helpers, and about 16,000 communicants. The latest news from Malange, one of Bishop Taylor's stations, is that an entire family of natives, five in number, have forsaken their idols and turned to Christ. Bishop Crowther has lately opened at Bonny a new church built of iron, with sitting accommodation for 1,000 worshippers.

—The Jewish Quarterly Review says that religion among the Jews is a dead thing. "In Austria, the Jewish teachers have openly broken with Judaism; in Australia, Judaism is an anæmic invalid; in America, even more than in Germany, the boldest, the most liberal, the purest doctrines of natural religion are preached by salaried Jewish ministers." "Yes, both Biblical and Rabbinical Judaism seem to have had their day. The cloak that could not be torn off by the tempest of Christianity and persecution bids fair to be thrown off under the sunshine of rationalism and tolerance."

—A recent house-to-house canvass of St. Paul, Minn., showed that not less than 3,000 church letters were held by persons in that city who had not yet presented them.

—There were more than 1,200 converts in the North India Methodist Conference last year.

—A loud cry is being made for missionaries in Chili, Brazil and other South American States.

—Three Christian Japanese recently sailed from San Francisco to preach the Gospel among their countrymen on the Sandwich Islands, who number 5,000.

—Five hundred women in Tokio and Yokohama have subscribed to a fund for the purchase of a handsome Bible to be presented to the Empress of Japan.

—A great revival in the Methodist missions is going on in India. Rev. E. W. Parker reports that in the Rohilcund district 900 adults, all firm Hindoos and Mohammedans, were baptized the past year.

—For the first ten months of the financial year the receipts of the American Board from donations were about $4,100 less than those of the corresponding months of the preceding year. From legacies for the same period the falling off was a little over $40,000, so that the total falling off was over $44,000. During the last two months of the year, therefore, extra generous donations from churches and individuals are earnestly called for.

—The Department of State has been informed that the King of Siam has recently presented, for the use of the American Presbyterian missionaries, one of the royal palaces, together with extensive grounds and buildings.

—Rev. W. F. Connor, of the Church Missionary Society Palestine Mission, has been transferred to the Cairo Mission, in view of the importance of stationing at Cairo an additional clerical missionary acquainted with Arabic.

—The Turkish Government has sent out an important order to the Governors General of the different provinces declaring that established American schools shall not be closed for the lack of official permits, and that complaints against schools must be sent to the capital, and not be dealt with by the local officials.

NOTICE.

Call for a meeting of the Ohio Christian Association opposed to secret societies.

Dear brethren in Christ, together with all who desire the purity of the church and the maintenance of justice and civil equality: Recent developments in Chicago and elsewhere of the inherent nature and tendency of the secret lodge system to promote and conceal crime, to pervert justice and corrupt public morals, and, above all, to subvert and destroy the religion of our Lord Jesus Christ, makes it more than ever important that we renew and press forward our warfare with the "unfruitful works of darkness."

After conferring and corresponding with some of the leading friends of the reform in this State, it has been determined to call our annual meeting at Senecaville, Gurnsey county, Oct. 22, 1889. Our meeting will, D. V., be held in the Wesleyan Methodist church, and be opened Tuesday, Oct. 22, at 7:30 P. M., and continue, if thought best, during the 23rd and 24th. Let there be a full attendance. By request.

H. H. HINMAN,
Agent of N. C. A.

Persons attending the Ohio Annual Meeting should come by the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad to Morgan Junction (near Cambridge, Guernsey county), and there they will find trains at 11 A. M. and at 4 P. M. which will take them (four miles) to Senecaville. Arrangements will be made for entertainment. Persons expecting to be present and desiring entertainment will write to Rev. E. Thompson, Senecaville, Ohio.

THE N. H. ANNUAL MEETING.

C. L. BAKER, President.

S. C. KIMBALL, Secretary.

IN BRIEF.

Recently L. B. King, of Hebron, Neb., visited his brother at Blunt, D. T., using a thirty-day round trip ticket. Mr. King died while at Blunt; and after considerable discussion the railway people decided that the body could be returned to Hebron on the same ticket, which was done.

An old lady read a paragraph in one of the papers the other day, describing how a grindstone burst in a sawmill, and killed four men. She happened to remember that there was a small grindstone down in the cellar, leaning against the wall; so she went out and got an accident insurance policy, and then, summoning her servant, and holding her pie-board in front of her, so that if the thing exploded her face would not be injured, had the stone taken out into the road, where twenty-four pails of water were thrown over it, and a stick was stuck in the hole bearing a placard marked "Dangerous." She says it is a mercy the whole house was not blown to pieces by the thing before this.—The Locomotive.

The Atlanta Constitution publishes statistics of the Negroes of Texas to prove their prosperity. It says that "the Negroes of Texas own 1,000,000 acres of land, pay taxes on $20,000,000 worth of property, have 2,000 churches, 2,000 Sunday-schools, 2,000 benevolent associations, ten high schools, 2,500 common schools, 3,000 teachers, 125,000 pupils attending school, twenty-three doctors, twenty-five lawyers, 100 merchants, 5,000 mechanics, fifteen newspapers, hundreds of farmers and stockmen, and several inventors." But why not let such prosperous people have their natural rights, guaranteed to them by the Constitution of the United States? Let the word go out that whipping and murder shall cease.

A terrible tale of suffering in the far North is told by Rev. E. H. Black, Church of England missionary near Fort Simpson, who has just arrived in Winnipeg. The season has been a very hard one for the Indians, owing to the absence of reindeers and the impossibility of hunting the moose successfully, on account of the lack of snow. Ten persons succumbed at Fort Wrigley. Mr. Black fears that the mortality during the coming winter will also be great unless there comes a heavy fall of snow. Provisions, he states, gave out at the fort as early as last January. Flour is dear enough there at all times, the regular price being $30 a bag at Fort Wrigley, while it is $27 a bag at Fort Simpson. But Mr. Black says he would have given $200 a bag if he could have purchased some and given the Indians a share. The distress in that district is really terrible and the suffering intense. He had to leave himself to avoid starvation. At Fort Laird seven died from starvation last winter.

The city of Jerusalem is growing in size and population at a remarkable rate. Its growth is all the more surprising because neither its situation nor its trade are favorable to a rapid increase; it lies among a not very fertile group of mountains; it has next to no commerce, and has no manufactures. Nevertheless, new buildings are rising daily; churches, gardens and institutions of various kinds are filling up the formerly desolate neighborhood to the distance of half an hour's walk beyond the old limits of the city. The Jews are to the front as builders. Their houses spring out of the ground like mushrooms, uniform, ugly, one-storied, plentifully supplied with windows, but with no manner of adornment. The Rothschilds have completed a new hospital. Close beside it there is a new Abyssinian church. The Russians are also great builders. They have erected a new church, consulate, lodging houses for pilgrims of the orthodox national churches, and a hospital. Near to the Russian group stands the "German House," for German Roman Catholics, from whose top the German and papal flag float side by side. The Russians have also built a high tower upon the Mount of Olives, from whose summit the Mediterranean and the Dead sea can be seen. The Greeks and Armenians are also busy builders, but they provide for the bodily rather than the religious demands of the pilgrims. The former build cafes and bazars, and the latter set up shops.

HOME AND HEALTH.

TAKING CARE OF SHOES.

In nearly all homes, more particularly where there are children, there is generally an accumulation of shoes of all kinds, half worn, and very little worn. In the majority of homes these are thrown promiscuously together in a closet or some other receptacle, to be assorted when wanted. Some of these are of no earthly use to the possessors, but are hoarded up with the idea that they may some day be found useful; yet rarely is this true, for if put away for any length of time they are, when taken out, generally unfit for use. There are few things that will collect mold as quickly as old boots or shoes, more particularly if in a close receptacle, such as a dark closet. Consequently, when they are laid away for any length of time, they should be taken out into the light and air occasionally, to keep them in fair condition. Musty shoes in the home will not tend toward the good health of the family. And the fewer of these things there are the better. It is much the better way where there are more than one extra pair of cast-off shoes to each person, to see that the superfluous shoes are given to some one in need of them. The housewife may think that they are not worth giving away, being worn so badly, yet the shoes she would think unfit for this purpose would be accepted with gratitude by many a poor unfortunate person. It is wonderful how very much worn a shoe may be ere it is rejected by a needy person. Do not allow old boots and shoes to accumulate, but give them where they will do the most good, and you will never regret it.

Shoes that are worn regularly, if cared for, will last much longer than if neglected, as is too often the case. A French kid shoe, if carelessly cared for, will not look as well nor last as long as one of an inferior quality that is looked after properly. When shoes are taken off they should be thoroughly brushed, to remove the dust that invariably collects in the creases, smoothed out with the hand and placed away in a shoe bag or box away from the dust, and when wanted for use they can be taken out ready for wear. Where there is not a box or bag for this purpose, a closet is the next best thing. Shoes will last much longer if, when new, they are rubbed with castor oil. Hold them in front of a fire and rub the oil well into the leather. The oil makes the leather pliable, fills up the pores, and prevents it from cracking. When boots are worn every day, once a fortnight is not too often to oil them. At first the oil after standing will give them a gray look, but when dressed it gives them a nice soft finish. It is not advisable to use much of the dressings so fashionable for ladies' and children's shoes nowadays, as the most of them in a short while crack the leather. The box blacking used for men's boots is much to be preferred, although it is a little harder to apply. When using the dressing apply a thin coat, and do so as seldom as possible. We have seen some fine shoes ruined by using a poor dressing, therefore, unless you can find one that has been well tested, it is better for a fine grade of leather to depend on the box of blacking.

There are many patent button-fasteners in the market that are excellent for children's every-day shoes, more particularly where there are boys, as they are much stronger than thread, and the children learn very soon to adjust them, thereby saving the mother some work, besides keeping their shoes in good condition. For a fine grade of leather we have never seen any fasteners that ought to be used, as in a short time they cut the leather, making an unsightly tear, and some of them, when the shoe is tight-fitting, will tear the stocking. The fine shoestring with needle attached, which may be purchased at any shoe store, is the best thing with which to fasten on shoe buttons. Fasten them quite tight at first, as they work loose, owing to the shoestring stretching. Never wear a shoe unbuttoned if you care at all to have it shapely. Never put a wet shoe close to a fire to dry, for when dry it will be difficult to get on. When taken off the foot

The True Way To Reach Boils

TO CURE Eczema, Pimples, and Eruptive Diseases of all kinds is to purify the blood with Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Until the blood is cleansed, there can be no permanent relief from these troubles.

"Four years ago I was severely afflicted with salt-rheum, the itching being so incessant as to seriously interfere with sleep. Painful scrofulous sores appeared on my neck and the upper part of my arms, and from there the humor went to my eyes. My appetite being poor, my health rapidly failed. I began to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and before I had finished ten bottles I regained my appetite, improved greatly in strength, and was permanently cured of the salt-rheum and scrofula. I consider that what I spent for this medicine was well invested. The Sarsaparilla has indeed done me incalculable good."—Mrs. Caroline A. Garland, Deerfield, N. H., (formerly of Lowell, Mass.).

"My little niece was afflicted with a severe cutaneous disease, which broke out at intervals and resisted treatment. At last, we tried Ayer's Sarsaparilla. This acted like magic. She is now entirely cured and has been in perfect health for several months."—Margaret Peyston, Clarendon, Ark.

"For a long time I was afflicted with salt-rheum, and could find nothing to relieve me. A friend recommended sarsaparilla, and after taking four bottles I was cured."—Edwin R. Tombs, Ogemaw Springs, Mich.

Made by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.

And Carbuncles, take Ayer's Sarsaparilla. No other medicine produces such immediate and salutary results.

C. K. Murray, of Charlottesville, Va., was almost literally covered with boils and carbuncles. These all disappeared as the result of using only three bottles of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. This proves that the true way to reach these troubles is through the blood. "It is now over six years," writes Mr. Murray, "since I took Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and I have not had a pimple, nor boil, nor a sign of one in all that time."

"Last May a large carbuncle broke out on my arm. The usual remedies had no effect and I was confined to my bed for eight weeks. A friend induced me to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Less than three bottles healed the sore. Another effect of this medicine was the strengthening of my sight."—Mrs. Carrie Adams, Holly Springs, Texas.

"I had a number of carbuncles on my neck and back, with swellings in my armpits, and was tormented with pain almost beyond endurance. All means of relief to which I resorted failed until I began to take Ayer's Sar-

wet, smooth into as a good shape as possible, then put in a medium warm place and let dry. To be sure, it will take a longer time than if dried at the fire, but it will be in a much better condition when wanted. Shoes hardened by being dried at the fire can be wonderfully softened by using a little castor oil well rubbed in. When throwing away old shoes, cut off all the good buttons and put away for future use.—Ex.

FARM NOTES.

Too many fences are made and kept up. They are expensive, they often harbor weeds, they are frequently a great disfigurement to the landscape, and in many cases useless. Still, there are localities where front fences, at least, cannot be wholly dispensed with. The question is one for each landholder to decide for himself, but he should decide it in accordance with the facts, and not with old usage or prejudice. — Vick's Magazine.

According to Prof. Long, a ton of butter takes from the soil nitrogen, phosphoric acid, and potash to the value of about 50 cents. No other product takes so small an amount of fertilizing material off the farm.

The United States last year imported poultry and eggs to the value of $4,000,000—every dollar of which should have been kept at home.

Salt, used as a fertilizer, acts like lime and the phosphates, rendering available the inert plant food of the soil. Of itself it possesses but little fertilizing value.

The story is told of an Ohio clergyman who resided in a parsonage to which was attached a farm of twenty acres. Being a man of brains and having a taste for rural life, the pastor brought the little farm up to a high state of productiveness, until finally the farmers of his congregation compelled him to quit farming or preaching, because he was making more than they could on their larger farms. They had much better kept him at it, and profited by his example as well as his precept.

A remarkable tree is told of by the Jamesburg, N. J., Record. "It stands in the rear of the telegraph station at upper Jamesburg and produces three different varieties of apples and one kind of pears. The apples are Red Astrachan, Fall Pippin and Smith's Cider, indicating that the grafters had a practical turn and were endeavoring to get the greatest amount of good out of the tree, for one crop follows another throughout the summer."

There will be little or no exportation of wheat within the coming year from Austria-Hungary, the crop being only sufficient for home consumption.

The United States last year imported 10,831,461 bushels of barley, which fact proves that the home product is not sufficient to supply the demand. The import duty is but 10 cents a bushel, and quite likely that fact accounts for the heavy foreign import and the deficiency of the home crop. America should certainly raise its own cereals.

The onion crop at the East is a partial failure. This will cause no tears to be shed, possibly, but it is a serious loss to the producers of that wholesome vegetable.

Secretary Rusk says: "The number of cattle shipped to Europe has rapidly increased, and the trade is probably more promising than ever before. This relieves our markets, gives new vigor to the cattle industry, and proportionally increases the business of the transportation companies." This will be a very gratifying item of news to the cattle growers of the West.

Corn should be cut early to get the best quality of fodder. The best time is when the ear is a little past the roasting period, and is partly glazed.

Prof. Crosby says: "A small cow, with the right kind of machinery in her, can get all the milk solids out of a given amount of food as well as a big cow. But if you have good big cows, and they give you a fair profit, keep them, but breed them to the smallest good dairy bull you can find, and if the result is a more concentrated cow, I think you are the gainer."

A somewhat marvelous story of Kansas productiveness is in circulation, to the effect that a Mr. Sternberg, of Ford county, last year planted twenty acres of watermelons, from which he manufactured 1,000 barrels of vinegar, valued at $10 per barrel, and sold the seeds to a New York seed house for $400. Ford county is in, or near, the so-called arid

As it saves the worst of the work, so it saves the worst of the wear. It isn't the use of clothes that makes them old before their time; it is rubbing and straining, getting the dirt out by main strength.

For scrubbing, house-cleaning, washing dishes, windows and glassware, Pearlina has no equal.

belt, and if it can produce watermelons in such prodigious quantities the aridity cannot be as bad as has been reported.

The estimated wheat crop of the United States this year is 498,000,000 bushels. The requirements of the country for bread and seed will be 355,000,000 bushels, leaving 143,000,000 for export, or about 55,000,000 bushels more than last year. The present indications are that the shortage of the crop in foreign wheat-producing countries will cause an active demand for our entire surplus at a fair price.

It is reported from Rio Grande river, that Mexican citizens had a desperate battle with Mexican officers and soldiers in Mexico, in which 400 participated, and many were reported killed. It is said the citizens succeeded in routing the soldiers, when the governor appeared upon the scene to assist in quieting the rebellion, but he was forced to leave or lose his life. The trouble was over the collection of enormous taxes.

DEAFNESS
A NEW TREATMENT.
Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membrane of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact, and the result of this discovery is that a simple remedy has been discovered which permanently cures the most aggravated cases of these distressing diseases by a few simple applications made (two weeks apart) by the patient at home. A pamphlet explaining this new treatment is sent free by A. H. DIXON & SON, 337 and 339 West King Street, Toronto, Canada.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canadian jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemason to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his name to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT to it.

In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies."

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the latest historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. (Chicago, National Christian Association. Single copy, 5 cents.)

The Cronin trial, like Pope's "Alexandrine," "That like a wounded snake, drags its slow length along," still verifies the prophecies of interminability. When another week closed Saturday, 689 men had been examined for the jury and four only sworn in. But if it is trying to a patient public, it is also enlightening an indifferent one on the character of lodge oaths. The number of men who believe under oath that the obligations of secretism are held by those who take them as paramount to oaths of the state is increasing; and the number of men who hesitate to put themselves under such vows to irresponsible and perhaps unknown masters is increasing also.

"Engineer Twombly was under the influence of liquor last Tuesday evening when he ran his engine into the Washington Heights passenger car," says a morning paper. Six persons were killed outright and a dozen wounded. The coroner's report held him to the grand jury, and afterward his fireman confessed to false witness at the inquest, when he tried to shield his companion. The engineer was too much under the influence of liquor to see a plain signal and stop his train. The Rock Island road will have a heavy bill of damages, but that will be far from paying for the loss that has fallen upon the community of the Washington Heights suburbs. But there are men in that same community who will never again vote for a saloon or a saloon party.

The campaign for the closing of the saloons of Chicago on the Sabbath day is becoming spirited. The Daily News has almost won its battle. It fires argument, persuasion and ridicule from a 250,000-shot Gatling gun, and its cartoons are worth preserving in our historical records. The churches and city mission rooms are speaking fearlessly, but while they wait for Mayor Cregier they wait for the mountain to come to Mohammed. Last week, to be sure, he revoked the licenses of thirteen grog-sellers for not keeping down their blinds. But this, too, was a blind. This week "his honor" will have no time but to hob-nob with his Masonic comrades in the Grand Lodge, and with every passing day the confidence of the saloons is stronger, for with every day's postponement of a known duty, the more difficult does that duty become. The great union Sabbath afternoon meetings in favor of this movement have a piebald look. A Catholic priest was to be one of the speakers, but was absent. At the same time the Romish hierarchy with all their subordinates and dependent societies, secret and open, were marching through the city with a number of bands under pretext of laying a corner stone. The Knights of Labor were also represented in the union meeting by a speaker, but the papers report the meetings of Knight of Labor lodges at the very same time to plot and harangue. How much worse are open saloons, than these lodge meetings and noisy parades on the Lord's day?

In the midst of Paris and her Sabbath-ignoring exhibition, a congress was sitting last week to discuss the observance of the Lord's day. All the record of its proceedings sent us by cable is the advice to employers not to pay their men on Saturday or Sunday; and to give a Saturday holiday where Sunday work seems necessary. This advice is probably for those who have been accustomed to a Continental Sabbath. President Harrison wrote the conference, saying: "Experience and observation have convinced me that every one who works with hands and head needs the rest which the Sabbath alone can give. Philanthropists and Christians may view the question from different points, but whether we regard man as an animal, or an immortal being, we should unite to assure him the rest which body and mind both require to keep them in the best possible condition."

The conference with which the Moody Institute opens began with a multitude last Thursday evening. Miss Willard was the principal speaker, with Francis Murphy to dissipate all serious impressions with a closing piece of low comedy. It was almost cruel in Mr. Moody to so arrange his speakers. But perhaps he does not know what has been said and done by Miss Willard for, and by Murphy against the great prohibition cause. No one who is informed can blame Miss Willard for lack of cordiality. Her address was winning and eloquent, and we can pardon her for exaggerating the importance of this training school because it sends out men and women with equal training. No school can prescribe for them the same work. Mr. Moody in his explanation said this school of instruction is not to interfere with any other institution for theological training. It is not to train men for the ministry, but to prepare those who have been scared away from the ministry for Christian work by Bible study and actual labor as city missionaries. Dr. A. T. Pierson of the Missionary Review will lecture during October, and Prof. Moorehead of Xenia United Presbyterian Theological Seminary is engaged for three months next summer.

The report of the Utah Commissioners under the Edmunds law has just been made to the Secretary of the Interior. They show that while the open practice of polygamy is becoming rare, except in remote places, yet the hundreds of convictions by the courts proves that the curse is not removed, and the firmly maintained faith of the Mormons yet teaches the doctrine as a revelation from God through the prophet Joseph Smith. There is no recantation of this doctrine in the Tabernacle, but it is still taught that whoever desires to do so should have the right to comply with the doctrine of the church. The laws forbidding polygamy are declared unconstitutional, and those who practice it are given a higher exaltation in the Mormon heaven than those who do not. It is evident from the report that the Mormons are only "unreconstructed," and bide their time. The Commissioners say that no Gentile would long be left in the Territory if the Mormons were not kept under restraint.

The most significant part of the Utah Commission report is the recommendation that Mormon immigration be put on a level with that of Chinese paupers and contract labor, for it is a source of greater danger than either. Upon this point they say: "While we forbid the immigration of the non-proselyting, peace-loving, docile Chinaman, because we fear a future danger from his coming; while we forbid the landing on our shores of contract laborers, because they cheapen wages of American-born citizens, and paupers, because they become a burden, there is far greater reason for closing our doors as a nation, and forbidding citizenship to the hordes who are brought here to swell the ranks of an organized body which teaches them in advance to hate our government, denigrate its executive, law makers, judges and prosecutors as persecutors, and instills into every mind the constant teaching that their pretended revelations are more binding than the highest and best laws of the land, and that resistance to such laws is a virtue and a rendering of obedience to God. How far short of treason these teachings are we leave to those who can answer."

A PERIL OF THE AGE.

BY REV. PAUL S. FEEMSTER.

I have spent two days in Kansas City—noisy days, whirling days, jamming days. They were days full of opportunities, withal, and full of close observations. I came here to raise some money. We are building an academy in Ozark county, Missouri, and we needed a little help to finish it. We thought we had a good case. We were down, very low down, but we were struggling to rise. We said, Surely our more favored localities will help us just a little, and they did.—just a little. They sympathized abundantly with our struggles. They wished us all success. They recognized our need, and they gave us the crumbs, some of them, which fell from their table.

Why did they not do more? Simply because we did not approach them through the regularly organized channels. One man told me very frankly that he would help no enterprise which was not denominational. And most of those I approached gave me to understand that this was the fatal defect in my appeal. I went to my hotel and many thoughts filled my mind to a late hour at night.

Verily this is, above all others, an age of organization. We have civil organizations, church organizations, and commercial organizations. We have societies for men, societies for women, and societies for children. There are societies for white folks and societies for black folks; open societies and secret societies. We have temperance societies and whisky societies, military societies and societies for the cultivation of peace. Every profession, every trade, every color, every age, and every interest has its society; every man and every woman that is so lucky as to catch some new idea rushes with breathless haste to the nearest neighbor to begin a new organization.

Far be it from me to say this is all wrong, but he would be a bold man who would dare to say that it is all right. Surely these signs of the times would tell us much if we could only read the writing. One thing I know. Organization is power. Enthusiasm and numbers, without organization, are but elements of confusion. He is the strong man who can muster the millions and hurl them as one mighty mass against the ranks of the foe.

Paul tells us that in the last days perilous times will come. He surely expects us to look for times in some way more perilous than had ever been before. But how more perilous? Are men more wicked than they ever were before? I doubt it. They have always been as wicked as the devil wanted them to be. But wickedness has never been so thoroughly organized as it is to-day; while the church has never been more broken into denominational fragments.

Yet, broken and battle-scarred as she is, the church of Christ is marshaling the hosts of the pure and the true. I find them everywhere. God bless them! They are the hope of the world. But verily the foe is strong. I stand aghast as I see the mighty array of forces marshaled and drilled, and the tramp, tramp, tramp of their marchings to and fro speak to my listening ear of that coming day—that great day of God Almighty.

EYES OPENING UPON GOOD TEMPLARISM.

BY REV. M. A. GAULT.

I recall some facts from my experience in the lecture field last year, which encourage me to believe that Good Templarism is on the decline. It is a dangerous form of secretism, because its object is good, and its ritual has so little secrecy that many are enticed into it who would not enter the lower and more secret associations; and as wine-drinking develops an appetite for stronger drinks, so these minor orders train their members for the oath-bound lodges. It is an indication that the agitation against secretism is taking effect on the better class of people when we find Good Templarism becoming unpopular, because it is the better class who are usually attracted by this order.

Last autumn, while lecturing in Wisconsin, when a Good Templar's chart was upon the wall of the church or hall, I would ask if the lodge was flourishing, and the answer in nine cases out of ten would be, "We once had a good lodge here, but it has gone down." Further questions would bring out the facts that the lodge fell into the hands of a pleasure-loving class of young people, and degenerated into a sociable or dance, and the better class left it.

Last winter, while lecturing in Missouri, I met a young man named Wheat, son of a Methodist minister, who was then a presiding elder. He had recently graduated at college and was traveling the State, arranging lecture appointments for Mr. Long, who was State organizer for the Good Templars. Young Wheat was discouraged over the results, and told me that Good Templarism was growing unpopular; that he found it difficult to make appointments for Mr. Long; that the people felt that Good Templarism was a thing of the past, and was worn out. He found the most difficult task was to revive old lodges that had run down.—in fact he was about to quit the business. I lectured at Brookfield, Missouri, soon after Mr. Long and John Sobieski had both been there trying to reorganize the lodge. First, Long tried it and failed; then some weeks afterward Sobieski tried it with like results. It was owing. I was informed, to the opposition of the M. E. minister, who was opposed to secret societies. But what was rather significant, it was a Freemason, and the most rabid Republican of the place, who took the lead in trying to start the Good Templars, and at the same time Long and Sobieski were both third-party Prohibitionists! I found many Prohibitionists of Missouri who had once been leading Good Templars, now condemning the order because of its non-partisan character. They said the order was a hindrance rather than a help to prohibition, and they had withdrawn from it.

This week, while lecturing in Nebraska, I met A. G. Wolfenberger, who was formerly a prominent worker for the Good Templars, and was associated with John B. Finch. He was nearly pounded to death in the town of Hardy, Neb., in the fall of 1887, by a prominent Republican banker, who tried to make him give the name of a correspondent in the New Republic, of which Wolfenberger was then editor. He told me that Good Templar work was being dropped in Nebraska as the prohibition battle grew hotter. He was now working almost entirely under the auspices of the W. C. T. U. Prominent Republicans have left the order of Good Templars, because in Nebraska it is in the hands of third-party Prohibitionists. Henry McCartney, of Nebraska City, took a deep interest in John B. Finch when he first came to the State. It was at his house that Finch frequently made his home when in the city, and Mr. McCartney was at the head of the Good Templars in his county for years. But he told me last week that he had given it up, not only because it had been turned into a political machine, but found its main object was to make its workers the tools for raising money and keeping up an organization for the purpose of giving power and prominence to a few of its leaders.

Let us hope that as the light shines brighter, and the moral conflict grows hotter, all such tactics as Good Templarism shall be abandoned.

On the train in Nebraska, Sept. 19.

THE MONDAY PAPER.

BY REV. WILBUR F. CRAFTS, FIELD SECRETARY OF THE AMERICAN SABBATH UNION.

In a certain city the people were divided by their occupations into six sections, each residing in a different district, with a separate gate; the professional men, the mechanics, the merchants, the hucksters, the carriers and the amusement vendors. There came a giant against the city, and with his battering-ram broke down, one after the other, the six gates that protected these six groups and all they held dear, and let in his hungry horde of followers upon them: "Which things are an allegory." The city is the citadel of the Sabbath, which protects these six great groups in that which is almost the dearest treasure they possess, their Sabbath of rest. The giant that breaks down all these gates is the Sunday newspaper. He breaks down the gate that protects the Sabbath rest of the professional man by requiring Sunday work of the editor; he breaks down the gate that protects the Sabbath rest of the mechanic by requiring Sunday work of the printer; he breaks down the gate that protects the Sabbath rest of the merchant by requiring Sunday work of the newsdealer; he breaks down the gate that protects the Sabbath rest of the hucksters by requiring Sunday work of the newsboy; he breaks down the gate that protects the Sabbath rest of the carriers by requiring Sunday work of the men in the mail service and on the trains. He breaks down the gate that protects the Sabbath rest of the amusement vendors by sending out the Sunday newspapers on the plea of amusement, thus opening the way for dime museums and theaters to claim the same right. There is not a single form of labor or business, nor a single form of public amusement which a man can consistently condemn who either publishes or patronizes Sunday newspapers.

In this allegory is the conclusive answer to the shallow excuse that "the Monday paper requires most of the Sunday work." There need not be any Sunday work done on a Monday paper, and in some cases there is none. There are twenty-four hours outside of the Sabbath in which to make it up if no Sunday paper is issued. It is as if I gave a tailor a day's work to do for me between Saturday morning and Monday morning. If he uses the Sabbath instead of Saturday, it is his fault; but if I require that same amount of work daily seven days in the week, it is partly mine. As a matter of fact, the editorial staff and the printer do usually perform more or less of Sunday work on the Monday paper, but this work of making up a paper, done by a few persons in the early hours of the Sabbath, is as nothing to the work of the hundred times as many who distribute a metropolitan paper after it is made up, the newsdealers, newsboys, postoffice employes, expressmen and railroad men, who handle the paper all day long. These have no Sunday work to do, on "the Monday paper." The number of persons who do Sunday work in distributing a Sunday paper is, in some cases, a thousand times as great as the number that work in making up its Monday edition. The Sunday newspaper, then, from the standpoint of the civil Sabbath, is chiefly objectionable in that it involves and sanctions almost every form of Sunday work, manufacture, trade and importation. To buy one of them is not a small vice, but lending a hand to the rope that draws the car of Juggernaut, under whose wheels the health and conscience of two millions are being crushed with Sunday toil. If Sunday newspapers were like the tutti-frutti gum machines into which you drop a nickel and out comes what you desire by a purely mechanical process, the objection to them from the standpoint of the civil Sabbath might be removed; but they mean work, and work of almost every kind. He who holds in his hands a Sunday newspaper, cannot consistently oppose the doing of any other form of Sunday work. Equity requires that all needless Sunday work should be impartially suppressed.

My own belief is that Sunday advertising, which is the mainstay of the Sunday newspapers, is a craze, like roller-skating rinks, that has not "come to stay," but has got to go. The two first merchants in the land, John Wanamaker and Marshall Field, get on without Sunday advertising, and many who are less wise will some day learn that the days to advertise are the days when readers can buy what is advertised. It is absurd to suppose that, with a score of blank pages of gossip to read, and other members of the family waiting for their turn, the advertisements in the Sunday paper are so carefully read as to be remembered to the next day. When our Christian business men come to realize how they waste their money as well as kill their influence for good by opening their business on Sunday in newspaper columns—it might as well be at their stores—the Sunday newspaper will lose its mainstay, and give its employes and the public a rest.

Equity should be used as a watchword for the enactment, improvement and enforcement of our Sunday laws. In the general suspension of Sunday work and business, there are three notorious exceptions in many places. The saloons, the trains and the newspapers are allowed to carry on business secretly or publicly in the interests of their rich proprietors, while the peanut stands and the little stores of the poor are closed. A few Sabbaths since in New York, when all the rich florists were selling flowers without resistance, contrary to law, a burly policeman arrested an Italian who was selling five-cent button-hole bouquets, and doubtless in five minutes made him and all his friends anarchists. If such discrimination is made in the law itself, the legislature perpetrates a crime against equality. Such law is violation of law, and cannot long be enforced. The only law that can be either justified or maintained in practice is a law which impartially forbids, in rich or poor, forms of Sunday work that are not works of mercy or necessity.

THE TRUTH THE WAY.

BY REV. CYRUS SMITH.

All truth, on whatever subject, has its effect according to the way it is received. God honors the truth, though it be given even by an enemy of righteousness. For us to honor the truth by word and deed in that we are diligent in seeking her with the whole heart, is the effect of godliness. To act in a contrary way is to be ungodly. Christians will identify themselves with the truth joyfully, though it may be on a subject that is unpopular with the majority. If it is their pleasure to suffer for their fidelity to the truth, "they shall also reign with Him" for whom they have suffered. There is the promise of a loving father for every loving obedience. "The ungodly are not so, but are like the chaff which the wind driveth away." When the sifting time comes they have not the grace to stand. Grace is received according to law which is the word, the truth of God. "Thy word is truth."

In speaking of the Christian it is said in the first Psalm: "In his law (truth) doth he meditate day and night." It enables us to receive the light on all subjects according to our ability. Grace enables us to "walk in the light as he is in the light," as we are commanded. Then the promise of the blood to cleanse from all sin is sure to follow.

The rejection of any truth on a popular or unpopular subject, in the church or out of it, will affect us eternally in an unprofitable or miserable way. Every subject has its relation to truth and error, a right and a wrong side. Any truth that is in our power to know we will be held accountable for. There is danger that we appear at the Judgment in the name of "Ignorance" instead of the name of Christ, who is the truth. In receiving him we receive the truth, and every truth we receive with the whole heart is receiving more of Christ. "As ye have received Christ Jesus the Lord so walk ye in him." He says, "I am the way, the truth and the life." "I am the light of the world."

In rejecting the truth we reject the right way, the life and the light. Those who receive Christ are in harmony with all truth, in that they entertain it instead of ignorance on an unpopular subject. Those who put their trust in him are in a plain and safe path which will shine "brighter and brighter till the perfect day." All error, whether in the church or out of it, must depend on ignorance and will have a miserable end.

The whole lodge system must depend on ignorance among the outsiders in regard to the so-called secrets. They must "conceal and never reveal" the truth to help "Ignorance." Worst of all, the members of the lodges are ignorant of the true character of their organizations.

STAND LIKE AN ANVIL.

"Stand like an anvil," when the strokes
Of stalwart strength fall thick and fast;
Storms but more deeply root the oaks
Where brawny arms embrace the blast.

"Stand like an anvil," when the sparks
Fly far and wide, a fiery shower;
Virtue and truth must still be marks
Where malice proves its want of power.

"Stand like an anvil," when the bar
Lies red and glowing on its breast;
Duty shall be life's guiding star,
And conscious innocence its rest.

"Stand like an anvil," when the sound
Of ponderous hammers pains the ear;
Thine be the still and stern rebound
Of the great heart that cannot fear.

"Stand like an anvil," noise and heat
Are born of earth and die with time;
The soul, like God, its source and seat,
Is solemn, still, serene, sublime.

—Bishop Doane.

THE CLAN-NA-GAEL LEPROSY.

Leprosy was one of the greatest evils Israel had to contend with. In olden times it was very prolific in Oriental as compared with Occidental countries. Israel was directed as to the manner in which she might detect the disease, and a divine method was given for ridding the house of it. While the disease, leprosy, is bad enough when found in individuals, it threatens society when it becomes epidemic. So to-night we are to consider the subject in its relation to collective bodies. It is not enough that we are troubled with monopolies that grind the wages of the laboring man down to a mere pittance; it is not enough that we are troubled with strikes brought on by the injustice of employers; it is not enough that we are troubled with anarchists who are seeking to overthrow our established institutions; it is not enough that society is impregnated with intemperance and vice; it is not enough that we have all these disturbing elements, but to crown them all we have that organization, the Clan-na-Gael.

We knew comparatively nothing of this organization till a few weeks ago. Through the processes of the law, carried on by the officers, we have gained a knowledge of this society and its purposes. Having described the clan and its ceremony of initiation, the speaker said: "If you ask me why there is such a general interest, not only in this, but other nations, I answer that it is not on account of Dr. Cronin's personality, but because of the organization by which he was tried, convicted, and condemned. This society is usurping some of the laws of our country, for it essays to define what is treason, a prerogative belonging only to the government. When a society sets up a standard of allegiance above that of the nation it is setting up a government within a government. On the other hand, it takes upon itself the right to try its members and execute them, when the law of the land is that every man shall be accorded a fair and impartial trial. There are three remedies by which this evil may be done away with: If leprosy is found in a house, let the walls be thoroughly cleansed. This is the mildest method. So, in Chicago, the mildest means shall be tried first, and the city is composed of the right kind of citizens to make the trial thorough. But we can hope for nothing from the politicians. They will work for votes and nothing else.

The second method is to remove the stones from the walls. So with this society; remove those in offices of trust who are hindering the investigation, and the first place to begin is with the police force.

The third method is to tear down the walls. This must be done, or these organizations will ruin the country. Either crime must be stopped or we cannot exist as a nation. Greece and Rome had this leprosy in their walls, and as they did not put it away they were destroyed. Let us hope that the effort now being made to free our country of this shame will be crowned with a glorious success.—Report of sermon by Rev. C. E. Mandeville, Chicago.

A BAD ATTACK OF LODGE DEGENERACY.

Last week we reprinted from Milwaukee papers the Grand Army record for beer-swilling. The condemnation of the Knight Templar Masons at their Chicago conclave in 1880 was no worse. Such papers as the Interior, Advance, Daily Tribune and others spoke not with doubt or hesitation at the disgraceful exhibition of immorality made by the lodge men at that time. The Milwaukee business is more distressing, since it shows the evil results of lodge companionship upon men whose generous bravery for the sake of American homes has everywhere been extolled.

The following from the Washington correspondence of America is another unhappy revelation of the lodge degeneracy of the G. A. R. It was inevitable that it should be so, when some of the old soldiers, trusted by the nation on the battle field, should turn aside from the Americanism they had defended to the practice of lodgery. The letter says:

Whether this vast society is guarding its honor as carefully as it might is rather a delicate question to raise. But, as two-thirds of the survivors of the Federal armies are not in the order, an allusion to this matter ought not to be regarded as disrespectful to the old soldiers, as such. I believe it is permitted in Chicago to oppose the Clan-na-Gael without losing caste as an Irish patriot, and I hope we may discuss one of the numerous societies of soldiers without being deemed hostile to the veterans as a class.

The Union Veterans' Union has commands in twenty-three States, with from three to a dozen commands in each. What its total membership is I have not learned, but Sheridan Command, in this city, started with 87 members, and has been constantly growing. Hancock Command has 130 to 150 members, and Logan Command has about 125 members, and two-thirds of them are minus a leg or an arm. There is a command in Bloomington, Ill., with a membership of 200. This order is only open to men who can prove that they were six months with the troops at the front or were present in a battle. The men who enlisted just at the end of the war for large bounties and who never got to the front, and the men who enlisted for three months to guard Confederate prisoners at Elmira, are not eligible for membership in the order. I don't know much about the conditions of membership in the Grand Army, but I conclude that they are a great deal easier to comply with than these, for the Union Veterans' Union was organized by men who seceded from the Grand Army on account of the facility with which pseudo-soldiers could come into that body. Commander Dillon, in his speech to the Union at its very first annual convention, made these significant remarks:

"If other soldier bodies had started out as we have done, with a genuine soldier record on the battle field for eligibility, there would have been no necessity for our order, but, who among you cannot place your fingers on from ten to one hundred men in our nominal soldier organizations who never were soldiers, never intended to be, never enlisted as such, who never left their own hearthstones as soldiers, but who to-day are bedecked with uniform, badges, brass buttons, slouched hat and cord, who parade our streets on all occasions as the soldiers of the Union during the dark, dark days of the rebellion, a base, cowardly libel on the brave men who followed McClellan, Hooker, Meade, Grant, Sherman, Thomas, Logan, and others against the enemies of our flag and country."

When veterans use such language as this, and the very largest of the soldier organizations does not include more than one-third of the old soldiers, it is a question how far any of these organizations should be allowed to dominate the politics of the country in the name of the Union soldiers.

Nowhere is the power of the Grand Army felt more than in the departments here at the capital, and never was its power felt more than it is now. Among the Grand Army men in the public service, men who do not wear the bronze button on their coat lapels, are contemptuously spoken of as "foreigners," and if you are on sufficiently good terms with the Grand Army men you will hear them discuss the progress they are making in working "foreigners" out of the service on one pretext or another and filling their places with "our men." A local newspaper man had the temerity to suggest to Col. Merrill of Massachusetts, who is here supposably as a candidate, the appointment of a non-soldier as a Commissioner of Pensions, and the Colonel was paralyzed at the suggestion. He declared that anything of that kind would precipitate the biggest row the country ever saw. I give him the credit to assume that he intended to except one. But not only must the commissioner be a veteran, but I wouldn't mind risking a small amount that the G. A. R. would not be satisfied unless the new commissioner were a member of that particular society. If the President appointed a soldier, but not a member of that society, there would not be "the biggest row you ever saw," but the members of the Grand Army would receive the news with a degree of chilliness that would give the impression that winter had set in.

Current Literature, commenting upon the theory advanced in Bellamy's socialistic book entitled "Looking Backward," and the formation of Nationalist clubs based upon this work of fiction, says: "There is a decided clamor to march straight back into barbarism—modern barbarism—where these conditions are to exist: No man to be better than his neighbor. All who are able to work are to have suitable work provided for them, and the profits arising from the products of this combined labor are to be so divided that there shall practically be equality of income. All competition is to be abolished; individualism is to be discountenanced and put down, and every man, whatever his talents, his energy, his ambition, his aspirations, is to be reduced to the dead level of the common-place." The book is well named. It looks backward into a condition of affairs which might have answered for the dark ages, but will not suffice for a world and people like ours.—Ex.

"He who floats with the current, who does not guide himself according to higher principle, who has no ideal, no convictions,—such a man is a mere article of the world's furniture—a thing moved, instead of a living and moved being—an echo, not a voice. The man who has no inner life is the slave of his surroundings, as the barometer is the obedient servant of the air at rest, and the weathercock the humble servant of the air in motion."—Exchange.

REV. DANIEL STEELE, D. D., said in a recent address: "I wish I had the power to reach every Methodist on the round earth. I would say, 'Cease living on the heroism of your fathers, quit glorying in numbers, sacrificing to statistics, and burning incense to the General Minutes; down upon your knees, and seek and find for yourself the secret of the power of the fathers, a clean heart and the endowment of power from on high; then arise and unfurl the banner of salvation free and full, and a common-sense theology.'"

NOTICES.

OHIO.

Dear brethren in Christ, together with all who desire the purity of the church and the maintenance of justice and civil equality: Recent developments in Chicago and elsewhere of the inherent nature and tendency of the secret lodge system to promote and conceal crime, to pervert justice and corrupt public morals, and, above all, to subvert and destroy the religion of our Lord Jesus Christ, makes it more than ever important that we renew and press forward our warfare with the "unfruitful works of darkness."

After conferring and corresponding with some of the leading friends of the reform in this State, it has been determined to call our annual meeting at Senecaville, Gurnsey county, Oct. 22, 1889. Our meeting will, D. V., be held in the Wesleyan Methodist church, and be opened Tuesday, Oct. 22, at 7:30 P. M., and continue, if thought best, during the 23rd and 24th. Let there be a full attendance. By request.

H. H. HINMAN,
Agent of N. C. A.

ILLINOIS STATE CONVENTION.

The annual Convention of the Illinois Christian Association will be held in Elgin, November 5th and 6th, opening on the evening of the 5th. The work of this Association in saving men from the secret orders, should command the attention and secure the co-operation of all Christian churches and patriotic citizens. Among the interesting features of this convention will be an oratorical contest by the College students of Northern Illinois, and addresses by Col. George R. Clarke of the Pacific Garden Mission, Chicago; Mrs. L. G. Rounds, president of the Illinois W. C. T. Union; and Miss E. E. Flagg, New England agent of the N. C. A. Other addresses are expected from Mrs. Gleason, one of the most popular of the W. C. T. U. speakers of New England, Rev. L. A. Johnston of Rockford, President C. A. Blanchard, and Prof. J. N. Bedford. The business of the convention will have an important bearing on the work during the year to come, and every sympathizer with the objects of the Association is most cordially invited to be present. The Executive Committee also make a special request of all Christian churches to be represented by a delegation appointed for the purpose.

WM. WISHART, President.

HENRY L. KELLOGG, Secretary.

NEW YORK.

To the friends of the anti-secrecy cause in New York, greeting,

DEAR FRIENDS:—We believe the time has come when we should again assemble in convention to further the interests of our cause in this State. As the lodge has but recently asserted its right to try, condemn and execute its offending members, as evinced in the case of Dr. Cronin, we deem it an opportune time to again rally our forces and join our protest with those proclaimed in thunder tones through the land. You are therefore requested to meet in Houghton, Alleghany county, N. Y., at two o'clock Wednesday, October 23rd, to elect officers for the ensuing year, discuss questions pertaining to the furtherance of the cause, and such business as may properly come before you. All churches in sympathy are requested to send delegates. The convention will continue through the following day and evening, and longer if the interests of the cause demand. Able speakers will be present and address the convention. The editor of the Cynosure, ex-President Blanchard; the General Agent, J. P. Stoddard; and the Washington Agent, W. B. Stoddard, are expected. They are too well known to need comment. Letters have been written Rev. N. Wardner and others inviting them to address the convention. Will not everyone who feels interested make a special effort to be present, and come praying that this may be the grandest convention we have ever held in the State, and greatly further the cause it represents?

TO ILLINOIS FRIENDS.

The approaching meeting of our State Christian Association suggests some important matters for our consideration. Elgin is a very lively, enterprising, but lodge-ridden city, of some fifteen to twenty thousand people. A faithful few are bravely attempting to hold up the standard of truth there. It has good railroad connections, and is the center of a thickly settled and prosperous community. A program has been prepared which promises to be of unusual interest and importance. One of its special features will be an oratorical competition by students selected from the colleges of the State. We may reasonably look for a large attendance of persons who are not usually interested to attend anti-secrecy meetings. In order to avoid "throwing a coldness over the meeting" by being obliged to raise a large sum of money during the sessions, it has been thought advisable to ask for subscriptions, to be sent in beforehand.

We need pledges of two kinds: one for small amounts, payable at or before the date of the State meeting, to meet its necessary expense, including the prize of twenty-five dollars offered for the "contest," and money to pay the expenses of the contestants; the other for larger sums, payable at any time during the ensuing year, to serve as a basis for securing a State agent.

Public sentiment, aroused by the Cronin murder, can now be turned against the whole brood of secret orders very effectively. Let us not neglect this "tide in the affairs of men!" A gentleman, who has had several years of successful experience in the work in a neighboring State, can probably be secured if we want him. He is persevering, cautious, sound, able and full of faith and the Holy Ghost. He is a credit to our cause in any pulpit or any community.

It will be easy to go to Elgin and vote to employ him as State agent, but some good subscriptions, payable only in case a State agent is employed, will be the best kind of ballots.

Brethren, let us know your minds before the fifth of November, and come to Elgin, if possible, to help select a standard bearer. All pledges and contributions should be sent to the Treasurer of the Illinois State Christian Association, W. I. Phillips, 221 West Madison street, Chicago, Ill.

By order of the Ex. Com.,

E. WHIPPLE.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

Hatfield's anniversary—Reunion of old-time Abolitionists—The National Club speaks its mind to the State House—Good words from a W. C. T. U. president—A Masonic mystery unravelled—Masons lay the corner-stone of a Jewish synagogue at Providence—"Help, Lord, for the godly man ceaseth."

Among the ancient towns of Massachusetts which have lately been celebrating their anniversaries, Hatfield deserves special mention. Two hundred and twelve years ago it was a frontier town, marking the extreme limits of civilization, beyond which lay only painted savages and a howling wilderness; and when King Phillip's war broke out it suffered proportionately, three attacks being made on the town, the final one occurring Sept. 19, 1677, under the leadership of Chief Ashphelon, of the tribe of Norwottucks. Rough times were those, when no settler dared stir out, save with his trusty flint-lock by his side, and had to make a fort even of his rude dwelling house, which could have for windows only mere loopholes, so high above the heads of the inmates that no prying Indian, even by raising himself on tip-toe, could look in! Hard and toilsome, beset by strange and deadly perils, was existence in those old days, yet who shall say that there was not as much honest, hearty, human enjoyment as now, vastly different as were the conditions?

The early settlers of Hatfield had remarkably progressive and advanced views on the subject of education, making provision not only for the boys but the girls, and even the few Negro slaves then to be found in the colony. They also planned to establish a college, but though this scheme was abandoned, Ephraim Williams, who founded Williams College, and Sophia Smith, who gave the endowment for Smith College, were both natives of Hatfield. The historical address, which was an able one, and rich in old-time lore, was given by the president of the Tobacco Growers' Association. The time will come, however, even in western Massachusetts, when a representative of this industry, if such it can be called, which is so antagonistic to bodily health, moral principle and financial prosperity, will no more be honored with a prominent place on such an occasion than would the president of a brewers' association.

Another noteworthy meeting has been the reunion of the old-time Abolitionists at the Meinaon. Rev. Joshua Young, of Groton, Mass., who officiated at the funeral of John Brown, opened the exercises with prayer; and altogether it was a memorable anniversary—the more so that the Old Guard is growing smaller every year, and the time will come, even to the generation now living, when these heroic men and women will be only a dim historic memory.

The National Club, of Boston, has issued an address which ought to make the ears of the last Massachusetts legislature to tingle. The men who sit under the gilded dome may not be used to hearing so much truth at once as is contained in this remarkable document—remarkable not only in itself for the signatures of such men as Rev. E. E. Hale, Rev. P. S. Moxon, Rev. E. P. Gifford, and others of the leading clergymen of the city; and to be told to their faces by such eminent authority that "they are the most corrupt and incompetent body that ever sat in the State House;" that "they have rejected measures to suppress corruption and promote general welfare;" that "they have passed measures burdening the community with perpetual charges for the profit of rich and powerful corporations;" and "in all questions requiring a choice have almost invariably favored the demands of private and moneyed interests at the expense of the public," must be a novel, and it is to be hoped a salutary, experience. But while all the chief officials, from the Governor downwards, are Masons, and the whole legislative body is under lodge influence, it is difficult to see how there can be any change in this state of things. Men who are puppets of the lodge have passed through just the right training to make them, to quote again from the above document, "mere puppets in the hands of money kings." And in matters of morals, as a brave W. C. T. U. woman cuttingly told one of the aforesaid legislators, at a hearing on the Age of Consent bill, "men who have taken an oath to respect the virtue of Masonic wives, mothers and sisters only, and that with the proviso, knowing them to be such, cannot be expected to see the necessity of better protection for our defenseless girls."

The heaven is working in the W. C. T. U. The president of one of the most important unions in Massachusetts thus writes me: "The theme (the lodge vs. prohibition) is a vital one, and certainly should receive the attention of all temperance workers. I think if we knew all the secret machinations of the lodge, it would be looked upon as a formidable foe in moral reform, and I may add, of vital piety as well."

One occurrence which helped to open her eyes can be matched by hundreds all over the land. She resides in a town which has always voted no license, and yet from various hotels, drug stores and beer shops liquors were dispensed, and men in a state of intoxication were not an unfrequent sight on the streets. Yet there were no arrests, no prosecutions, although the chief of police was professedly both a Christian and a temperance man. But this seemingly inexplicable mystery was unravelled at last. The chief of police suddenly died. He was a Mason. The proprietor of one of the worst drug stores in the place, likewise a Mason, made great lamentation over him, and declared that he had lost his best friend. When the hour for the funeral arrived the pall bearers were not only all brother Masons, but every one was among the most notorious violaters of the prohibitory law in the place!

This W. C. T. U. president is now warmly interested in our cause, and is ready to circulate anti-secret literature, yet until written to and informed of the movement, she knew nothing of any such association as the N. C. A. It is imperatively needful that the president of every local union in New England, and as many of the rank and file as possible, should be corresponded with and supplied with our tracts. But I scarcely need to add that such a work requires funds.

The corner-stone of a Jewish synagogue was laid at Providence this week, the Grand Lodge of Masons performing the ceremony. It would certainly be embarrassing on such occasions if Masonic prayers were offered in the name of Christ; and the well-known argument of lodge writers that Masonry is a universal religion, and must contain nothing in its ritual "offensive to any class of conscientious brethren," whether Jew, Mohammedan or deist, gains a new force.

I have previously alluded to the death of Rev. J. B. Davis, father of Wm. F. Davis, the Boston evangelist; and from a brief sketch of his life in the Norfolk county Gazette, it is clear where his more famous son learned his martyr courage. He was educated under Pres. Finney, of Oberlin College; was a successful Christian minister, and a radical in every line of reform. He was a close student, with a wonderful memory for historical incidents, and could use wit, irony, humor and anecdote while battling for the truth with equally happy effect. A favorite text with him was, "Be ye holy, even as your Father in heaven is holy;" and an unpublished manuscript which he left behind him gives such a wonderful definition of holiness, and one so appropriate to the Christian reformer, that I must quote it even at the risk of transcending the limits of this already lengthy letter: "Holiness is putting on Christ; Christ living in man and man living in Christ. It is God fitting man for immortality. It is to be pure; to be clean in motive; to have no plan for amusement, pleasure or business except through seeking the glory of God and the good of the world. It is to be broad and free as the ocean, and yet in the straight and narrow way. It is to have the will and strength of the lion, and the peacefulness of the lamb. It is to have the art and wisdom of the serpent, with the innocence of the dove. It is to be soft as the potter's clay; yet firm as a rock. It is to have the lightning's glance against sin, with the most tender pity and pardon for the repentant sinner. It is ever drinking at the fountain, yet thirsting for more; always eating of the living manna, and always hungering for more; ever fighting, yet forever at peace; always loving God with all the heart, and hating sin with all the might; daring always to do right, and only fearing to do wrong. To be on the face in the dust before God; but standing straight up for Christ, defying false laws, judges, kings and prisons, or even death itself; always contented; but never satisfied until the awakening in the full likeness of Christ." ELIZABETH E. FLAGG.

REFORM NEWS.

NEW YORK FORMS IN LINE AGAIN.

DALE, N. Y., Sept. 25, 1889.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Some parts of this State have so long been without real earnest work in our reform, that comparatively few of the once enthusiastic multitude remain, standing like lone rocks against an adverse tide. Remembrance of the terrible abduction and murder of Morgan, for bringing to light the blasphemous practices of the lodge, causes their minds to thrill with new emotion, but they realize they are living in another age than their own. They are passing away one by one. The question comes, shall their places in the reform army be left vacant, or are there younger men who will rally as they fall? The outlook in such regions, to say the least, is not very inspiring to one of little faith. I do not wonder that some hearts grow faint, and many weary in this unpopular struggle. But, thank God, there are young men and women coming to the front. God's truth is going on to victory.

During the week past I have had many encouragements and some seeming discouragements. On visiting Perry I found our "true blue" friends standing firm and supporting our cause as heretofore, though some had fallen by the way. Mrs. H. R. Tinkham and A. H. Sleeper kindly contributed to help it along as they have done before. I was sorry I could not accept the kind invitation extended to speak in the Lester Street Baptist church on the Sabbath. A day was spent at Castile sowing seed with no immediate result. At Portageville, L. A. Tallman, an Anti-mason of the Morgan stamp, subscribed for our paper.

Our grandest work was at Houghton and Fillmore. There I found a people wide awake and anxious to hear the truth. The Wesleyan Seminary at Houghton has commenced its third year under Prof. A. R. Dodd, as principal. Its prosperity is doubtless attributable somewhat to his wise management. There were 136 students in attendance last year, and the outlook for this is promising.

It was my privilege to address the students and a number of citizens on our reform, and to preach "the word" to a full house Sabbath morning. In addition to a good collection, a vote of thanks showed a kind appreciation of my efforts. God was indeed present by his blessed Spirit and showers of grace were ours to enjoy.

I filled an appointment made by Bro. Dodd on Sabbath evening at Fillmore, and so was not present at the grand meeting held at Houghton in which two started in the Master's service. The same God was with us and blessed his truth. In accord with a vote of those present, I returned and spoke again the following evening at Fillmore. A list of seventeen new subscriptions to the Cynosure taken at Houghton and vicinity has just been mailed, and there are more to follow.

For several reasons I think the State Convention should be called at once to meet in Houghton the latter part of October for these reasons:

1. There is a live interest in our work, so the local attendance would be good.
2. The friends there would gladly entertain those coming from out of town, so there need be only the expense of railroad fare.
3. It would give the students an opportunity to know more of our work; and those already enlisted would become more so.
4. It would afford those desiring an opportunity to visit the Seminary and view one of the most picturesque portions of the Genesee valley.
5. It is comparatively easy of access, on the Rochester branch of the Western N. Y. and Penn. Railroad, but seventy-two miles south of Rochester, thirty-five miles south of Mt. Morris, where this road intersects the Lackawanna, and but fourteen miles south of Portage where the main line of the Erie intersects. A number of lines intersect on the south. Passenger trains stopping here leave Rochester at 7:55 A. M. and 3:15 P. M.; Olean 6:25 A. M. and 2:05 P. M.

State President F. W. Capwell will issue the call for this convention at once if he hears favorably from the General Agent and Pres. J. Blanchard as to their attendance the last of October. Will not every friend in the State who feels an interest in the salvation of men from lodge bondage make a special effort to attend, and "come up to the help of the Lord against the mighty?"

W. B. STODDARD.

TAKE HEART, MICHIGAN.

WOODLAND, Barry Co., Mich., Sept. 24, 1889.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I found friends in Woodland. I secured a United Brethren church without difficulty, and the pastor, Rev. Hershisser, entertained me until the night for the first lecture. He and his noble wife are deeply interested in our work, and made everything very pleasant for me.

The lectures were well attended. On the second night the church was almost full, and quite a number of Masons were present from the town near by. They did not appear to relish what they heard, but with an exception or two were gentlemanly. I used my chart on the second night, but both nights were devoted to the consideration of Masonry as a religious system. Several members of the church said they thought God had sent me there at the right time. The people were stirred all through the community. Discussion of secretism is hot. The radical members of the U. B. church are more determined than ever to stand by the "constitution of '41." I have other appointments in U. B. churches, but I go to-morrow night to a Wesleyan Methodist church at State Roads.

CORRESPONDENCE.

A WORD FOR A BROTHER EDITOR.

CINCINNATI, O., Sept. 23, 1889.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—The editor of the Christian Standard has a good word for the Catholics, and designates the New Englanders as "wicked Puritans" who burned witches and persecuted heretics. And so it was fitting that John Boyle O'Reiley, a Roman Catholic, should read a poem at the Plymouth dedication, eulogizing the Pilgrims, who were not Puritans. He should read Father Chiniquy's book, "Fifty Years in the Church of Rome," and learn that during the war of the Rebellion Pope Pius IX. wrote a letter to Jeff Davis, recognizing the Southern Confederacy as a legitimate government; learn the part the Jesuits played in the plot which culminated in the assassination of Abraham Lincoln. Pages 670 to 687 are devoted to testimonies to the effect that Rome is the inveterate foe of civil and religious liberty. Gladstone's warning should be heeded: "The time has not come for England and America to cease fearing the intrigues of the Roman Catholic hierarchy."

I called on a number of our city ministers last week. Rev. Washington Gardener, D.D., for one year the pastor of St. Paul M. E. church, goes to Albion College, Michigan. He has been made vice president. As the president, Dr. Fisk, is away in Europe, the charge of the college will be in Dr. Gardener's hands. He is favorable to National Reform work, and will open the way for a lecture. As a lecturer the doctor is in great demand. "The Battle of Chattanooga" is a talk frequently called for. I expect to give another sermon in St. Paul's church on National Reform in the near future.

Rev. Howard Henderson, D.D., pastor of Trinity M. E. church, was next seen. He is a strong man intellectually. He was brigadier general in the Southern army during the war, and for eight years State Superintendent of Public Instruction in Kentucky. He was ordained in the Southern M. E. church. Some years ago he came North and united with the M. E. church. He held several pastorates in New York and Brooklyn, and now enters upon his second year here. He is sometimes asked, "What did you get out of your change from the Southern Methodist church to the North?"

"I got myself out," is his laconic reply. He has an admirable lecture on "The Swords of Grant and Lee." He frankly admits that he fought on the other side, but he is glad it was settled as it was. He is in great demand as a lyceum lecturer. His lecture tours last year would have netted him $2,200 if his congregation had given him free rein. They give $2,500 salary, and thought his time was their's. St. Paul's give $3,000 and a parsonage, and the perquisites amount to about $600. So there is considerable contrast, but ministers get something better than money for preaching the Gospel. He appointed a day for me to fill his pulpit in his absence.

Sabbath morning I preached in Allen Temple, A. M. E. church. In the evening I spoke in the Central Christian church, Rev. J. Z. Tyler, D.D., pastor. This is a large congregation. The pastor is a Prohibitionist. He was active in the committee of 500 in enforcing the Sabbath closing law.

J. M. FOSTER.

A REMARKABLE LETTER FROM AN INVALID.

MILLVILLE, AYLESFORD,
Kings County, Nova Scotia.

Yours of August 27th came to hand September 5th. I suppose you have forgotten the fact that I have been confined to my house since September, 18th, 1868; that my wife is feeble; that we both suffer continual and severe bodily pain; that we live in a country place, and keep no team; that we have almost arrived at our three score and ten years; and that we are receiving aid from the Ministerial Relief and Aid Fund, etc.—otherwise you would not expect me to act as Cynosure agent. Mrs. Morton and I have both had a severe attack of cholera recently, from which neither of us have quite recovered, and we expect that our earthly career is nearly finished; but we are in the hands of our heavenly Father, and we know that he doeth all things well.

We are thankful that we have had a small share in the good work of the N. C. A., and we pray that God will give great success to every effort put forth for the destruction of the kingdom of anti-Christ, and for the triumph of truth and righteousness over all error and unrighteousness. We shall continue to do what we can, so long as we live and have our reason, to promote and advance the glorious work of reform undertaken by the N. C. Association; but can promise nothing very definite, because of our peculiar circumstances. Brother J. C. Foster of Claremont, Kings county, N. S. (who has himself been delivered from secret lodge bondage), is doing a good work in circulating anti-secret literature and by speaking against the secret lodge both privately and publicly. And some others are beginning to wake up to see and to deplore the evils of the lodge system. To God be all the glory!

Now I rejoice in the assurance that Christ, before he "delivers up the kingdom to God, even the Father," shall "put down all rule and all authority and power" (i. e., that is against or opposed to him), "for he must reign till he hath put all enemies under his feet." See 1 Cor. 15: 24, 25. So be encouraged; the cause and the battle is the Lord's, and the victory is certain. The struggle may be long and hard, but it will be over by and by, and all those who have followed the Captain of salvation, having on the whole armor of God, will receive a glorious reward, even the crown of life and a mansion of glory! If God be for us, the powers of hell cannot prevail against us. Praise the Lord!

I forgot to say that we prize the Cynosure more and more. It is certainly worthy of its title. I wish all our people would take and peruse its pages; but, alas, how are they to be persuaded! I pray God to open the eyes of all Christians, that they may see what God requires of them, in the matter of separation from the unbelieving, ungodly world.

R. S. MORTON.

THE POLE STAR GLEAMS.

WOODLAND, Mich., Sept. 21, 1889.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Your issue of the 19th inst. is just come to hand, and what an issue! Never paper spake as this paper speaks.

I was meditating on the condition of our reform, its progress, obstacles, and the lamentable state of the people morally; and thinking how "the prophets prophesy falsely, and the priests bear rule by their means," and since "my people love to have it so," what hope has our reform,—when your paper came and my mind was brought into contact with the greater mind of our "Grand Old Man," President Blanchard, and was lifted up out of what was likely to be an horrible pit. I can't think of him and fear anything or have any doubts "that somehow good will be the final goal of ill" on some day. And how comforting and sweet was the poem by W. L. Ferris. Two stanzas, at least, will bear repeating.

"The world will be better some time, I know,
Though the chariot of truth may seem to us slow,
But error and wrong shall yet be laid low,
And the world will be better some time, I know.

"Look up, O ye toilers, though the furnace be hot,
The God of the Hebrews hath never forgot,
Your cry and your prayer shall not be denied,
For 'the form of the Fourth' shall walk at your side."

The way is opening in Barry county for work. I have appointments for six nights, and think I will be kept busy in the same line of work for a couple of weeks yet in this county. But of this another time.

REFORM CHURCHES TO THE FRONT.

AVALON, Mo.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—The "Pole Star" makes a handsome appearance in its new dress, and is brimful of reading of intense interest to all true Americans. The plan to reach the ministry is a grand one. Also the call for the Boston meeting means a long stride forward. It is said that some of the largest religious publishing societies in America never issued a tract against slavery; now their literature rings with utterances against that national sin. So it is to-day; the pagan lodge has a shrine in the shadow of every chapel and an altar in every community, and the more powerful church organs and their literature are silent as the grave on these heathen orders. In a short time, and it will not be long either, the secular and political press will arraign these despotic anti-American organizations at the bar of public opinion, and demand their removal from our land, then the popular churches as such will adjust their guns and fire solid shot against these Christ-rejecting, God-defying, man-degrading, soul-destroying fraternities. Let the patriots and individual Christians redouble their efforts to spread the light. Whenever the reform churches begin to vote as they pray on this white lodge slavery, then there will be an uprising that will purify the nation of this giant, all-pervading, over-shadowing evil. The lodge not only rode back into power on the temperance orders, but these same temperance orders are the advance guards and breastworks of the great criminal oath-bound combinations. Let the Cynosure and every anti-secrecy paper in America get up a special number on this very point and see that it reaches the leading temperance and W. C. T. U. workers. The denominational papers of the anti-secrecy churches carry a fearful responsibility in this agitation and discussion, and the recording angel is running up a long debit column against some of these for their inactivity. The voter in this free land who stops at prayer, and ringing resolutions, and forgets all about anti-lodgery when he goes to the caucus or to the polls, will not be guiltless at the last great day. The fact that a man preaches and prays does not lessen, but increases his responsibility to society, the government and his native land. God will hold us just as responsible for fellowshiping directly or indirectly a political evil as a religious one. We carry a tremendous individual responsibility for existing abuses and evils in a popular government. Then away with Christless lodgery with its Overseers, Noble Grands, Most Worshipful Grand Masters, Sublime Princes, Kings and Grand Kings, schools of deception, duplicity and perpetual conspiracy.

M. N. BUTLER.

PITH AND POINT.

AN INVITATION TO BRO. ARNOLD AND HIS ILLUSTRATED LECTURES.

We very much desire to see you, with your apparatus, illustrating the pagan beauties of the old lady, the mother of secret societies, in this town and other places, in Georgia and Tennessee. It is a lodge-ridden region, and needs demonstrations that will break the spell so long resting like a nightmare on the churches. Dalton is thought to number some 4,000 inhabitants, and is enjoying a moderate growth. Please let us hear what are the prospects of a visit to this region. When navigation on the Tennessee river is so improved that you can come by water, Chattanooga will be a nice point for you to strike for an exciting exhibition. Northern capital and enterprise have given it a wonderful boom. I would not like anything better than to accompany you in your exhibitions, but I am tied. May the Lord of Hosts be with you, and make you an instrument, a successful one, in pulling down, what appears to me, as Satan's strongest hold.—A. C. HAND, Dalton, Ga., to I. R. B. Arnold.

HOW MASSACHUSETTS MASONS KEEP THEIR OATHS.

I was a Master Mason, with nothing against me but poverty and sickness. I called on them for help for myself and wife, and four small children besides Fred—a duty they are under the most solemn oaths to perform, to take care and help all needy and suffering brothers and their families. For so doing I was EXPELLED! I find Masonry is of no account until you get into the Royal Arch degree; then you are shielded from harm in all doings. They even control the courts, and many a criminal is found innocent because he is a Mason of this degree.—EDGAR SPAULDING, North Adams, Mass., to Philip Bacon.

NOTE.—The above is an extract from a letter of a humble man in the mountains, where the Hoosack Tunnel opens into Massachusetts. It shows Masonry is everywhere the same. When refused aid Mr. Spaulding threatened to reveal their secrets if they did not help him; and the lodge sent men who threatened to kill him. His son Fred procured a revolver and shot-gun and bid them "come on." The Masons thought better of it. These parties knew nothing of Anti-masonry.

BETTER AND BETTER.

I have taken the Cynosure since its second year of publication, and am free to say it improves with age. I have been the only subscriber herabouts (in this locality) that I know of for six years, and now send this "new subscriber" [W. C. T. U. reading room] at my own expense. Let me further add that I will expect to renew soon, and to extend the subscription of my "new subscriber" ad infinitum, or while the reading room is kept open.—I. N. BROWN, M.D., Ironton, O.

THE LODGE WANTS MEN AND MONEY.

The lodge devil-fish keeps throwing his flippers in every direction. If he can't hit the workers he will hit the money and drag that in. The Lord reigns, though the devil keeps trying to seize the kingdom.—INCREASE LEADBETTER, Auburndale, Mass.

FROM THE SOUTHERN MINISTERS.

I see that my paper, the Cynosure, is out. Will you be so kind as to continue it to my address, if there are any funds on hand for colored ministers. I regard it as one of the best papers for a minister. May the Lord bless you.—W. L. CLARK, Weston, Ky.

I did not read your paper much at first, but the more I read it the more I like it. It has done this country a great deal of good. I had a notion to join the secret society, but after reading your paper that notion is more than a thousand miles away from me.—REV. N. BELL, Pineville, N. C.

I am not entitled, I suppose, to the Cynosure now, as I have removed from the Southern field, and have accepted a call here. Your paper is doing a good work. If you still wish to send it to Grandview (my field), I would say that a pastor is likely soon to be there. With sincere thanks for what I have received so long at your hands, I am sincerely yours.—REV. C. B. RIGGS.

I thank you very much for your kind offer, and shall take great delight in reading the Christian Cynosure. I have for several years loved the paper and its noble work, for the truth's sake. I have read it off and on since 1885, and it has been a school where I have learned many things I would not have known otherwise. I wish that a copy could be placed in the hands of every minister in this country. May God bless you in your work.—W. A. HOLMES, Helena, Ark.

LITERATURE.

THE LAND OF THE MONTEZUMAS. By Cora Hayward Crawford. Pp. 311. Price $1.00. John B. Alden, New York and Chicago.

The entertaining pages of this volume were evidently penned by a lady of intelligence and careful observation, but the epistolary style betrays her inexperience, as the dedication to her maternal traveling companion does her youth. If we were interested in Mexico forty-five years ago, when fighting her to increase the area of slavery, we should be much more so now when numbers of our Christian workers have gone to labor for the evangelization of that country, and many more are seeking pleasure or fortune there. The story of this Mexican visit begins with Denver and Colorado scenery and travel, and conducts the reader by gradual stages over the border. The principal Mexican towns visited are described, with the style of their buildings, habits of the people, etc. More attention is given to the numerous and valuable silver mines, and a description of their operation; and Mexican agriculture claims a chapter. At the end of the journey the traveling party devotes some time to the study of the mythology and history of the country to which the experiences of the journey gave unusual zest. This done the home trip is begun and the whole faithfully recounted as if in a series of daily letters to a confidential friend. This peculiarity of the book gives it a certain attraction which a more formal account of the same facts would not possess, though for many readers it detracts at the same time from its value. The volume is handsomely bound and illustrated from photographs.

The Missionary Review of the World is first of the magazines of the month to appear on the editor's table. Its prompt business habits are an excellent reminder to the churches that to the work of missions should be given their first and best endeavors, their most earnest prayers, their best gifts and noblest sacrifices. The present number opens with an editorial by Dr. Pierson on Lord Shaftesbury, who for so many years was known throughout Christendom for his benevolent, philanthropic and evangelical spirit. Dr. J. M. Ludlow writes of the celebrated missionary, William Carey, and his notable work for the Lord in pagan lands. The old African missionary, Lewis Grout, writes of "The Religious Views and Practices of the Zulus." "The New Era of Colonization and its bearing on Christian Philanthropy" is an interesting paper which discusses some important aspects of the present missionary movements. "The Christianization of Money" and Prof. Pick's second article on the missions among the Jews follow. The departments of the magazine devoted to General Missionary Intelligence, Missionary Correspondence, the Monthly Concert, Organized Missionary Work and statistics, are full and invaluable.

"It is not generally known that a newspaper in classical Latin is published fortnightly in Italy," says the Pall Mall Gazette. "Its place of publication is Aquiladegli Abruzzi, and its title Alaudæ (The Larks). The oddest feature of the Alaudæ, and the most entertaining, is its ingenious rendering of nineteenth-century names into the purest Latin of the classic ages. Thus a railway station appears as 'statio via ferrea,' a postal letter box is 'capsa epistolæ recipiendis.' Its daily Roman contemporary, the Fanfulla, is described as 'charta typis conscriptacotodidie Romæ prodians.' The Alaudæ ought to find sympathetic subscribers in our universities. It is full of anecdotes, jokes and verses in classical dress. The only thing as yet wanting to its perfect consistency is the translation of the advertisements into the tongue of Cicero."

Beginning with the new volume in October, The English Illustrated Magazine will be printed in a new type, and will also be increased in size. During the year there will appear, among other articles, a series of illustrated papers by Her Royal Highness the Princess Christian. Arrangements are also being made for a series of articles giving a descriptive account of the great routes of travel throughout the world; this series will begin with an article on the Canadian Pacific Railway and the new ocean route to Australia.

Rev. J. F. Avery of the Mariners' Temple, Henry street, New York, still continues his excellent illustrated religious monthly, Buds and Blossoms, which we began to notice with pleasure several years ago while he was yet in Halifax. Such a magazine is always a treasure in a household. Old and young alike receive pleasure and profit from its pages.

"Birds and Butterflies," a book for boys and girls by M. G. Musgrave, is among the most beautiful works published this season for children, and is a new departure in the line of juvenile works. It contains over one hundred fine illustrations including a number of colored plates printed in fourteen colors.

LODGE NOTES.

The Illinois Grand Lodge of Masons meets in Chicago next week. It is the fiftieth anniversary, and grand preparations are being made for a parade. The lodge will also lay the "cove stone" of the new Auditorium building.

Four colored soldiers were brought to Tucson, Arizona, Sept. 20, charged with the murder of William Fleming, a colored soldier, a month ago. It is claimed that they belong to a secret organization among colored troops who ordered the death of Fleming.

White Caps were abroad in Norwalk, Conn., Sept. 20. Capt. Pierce, a well-known resident, received a notice to step out of politics or leave town. Big posters were nailed to his front door, which was embellished with skull and crossbones, a coffin, grave-yards, etc.

The report that the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine are arranging for a parade during the Triennial Conclave at Washington, has caused some indignant comment among the Sir Knights, who declare that the "Mystic Shriners" have no business parading on a strictly Knights Templar occasion.

The Improved Order of Red Men of California at their late meeting reported $5,000 spent for relief and $2,600 for burying members, while the current expenses are $18,000. As there are but 2,500 members, and the death-rate cannot be high, these aborigines evidently believe that a big wake is the best part of the lodge performance.

The Iowa consistory of Cerneau Scottish Rite Masons, in session at Cedar Rapids, elected for Commander-in-Chief, Judge Geo. P. Wilson of Creston; orator, Rev. N. A. McAuley of Wilton; treasurer, T. K. Miller of Cedar Rapids. The membership has been doubled in the last year. The fight with the Grand Lodge will be pushed vigorously.

The forty-third annual session of the Council of United American Mechanics was held in Salem, Mass. The report of the national secretary showed that, during the year there had been two State councils instituted—in West Virginia and Ohio. The number of councils is 357; memberships, 29,099; income of councils, $443,161; amount paid for benefits, $109,143.

Dr. P. H. Curran, Senior Guardian of one of the twelve Clan-na-Gael camps of Chicago, says the Albany Journal, deserves mention as being one of the members of that infamous order who is not an assassin. He has resigned because his camp refused to pass resolutions denouncing the general secretary, who is suspected of using the Clan funds in defense of the Cronin suspects.

The annual meeting of the "Supreme Council of the Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite for the Northern Masonic jurisdiction of the United States of America" opened in Scottish Rite Hall, New York, on the 17th. Grand Commander Henry L. Palmer of Milwaukee read his annual address. The Grand Commander announced that he had granted fifteen dispensations during the year. In the evening the council conferred the full degree upon several candidates.

The Supreme Council of Chosen Friends held a convention in Minneapolis. The report of the Supreme Recorder showed that since the order was organized June 30, 1879, to June 30, 1889, the net cash receipts were $3,788,755.46. During that time there has been 1,801 deaths, on which $3,549,903.74 have been paid. During the past two years the total receipts were $64,598.69, the expenditures $61,095, leaving a balance on hand at the close of the present fiscal year of $3,503.44.

Two Chinese highbinders were before the Police Court at Kansas City, Mo., Sept. 20th. They had been arrested nominally for carrying concealed weapons, but in fact because the police had information that they were about to execute a sentence of death passed, it is said, by the local council of the Chee Kong Tung Society. A Chinese messenger called on Chief Speers and notified him that the person by whom he had been sent was being tracked by two highbinders, who had been ordered to kill him because he had given the police certain information concerning a robbery which had been committed by members of the Chee Kong Tung Society. The chief was told where he could see the victim being followed by the highbinders. Two detectives were put on the case, and the messenger's story proved to be true.

An Omaha, Neb., paper says that all labor unions and brotherhoods, comprising the employes of the Union Pacific system have formed themselves into an organization which is to be known as the Brotherhood of Railway Employees. The amalgamation includes the brotherhoods of locomotive engineers, firemen, and brakemen, switchmen's union and Knights of Labor. The action has not yet been indorsed by the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, but the subject will be presented at the annual meeting of the order in Denver, Oct. 16. It is expected that this move will be followed by a consolidation on all roads in the United States.

A man named John G. Wise was shot and killed on vacant grounds in a remote part of Chicago lately. His wife gave this explanation to a reporter: "The only person I can think of who would be likely to be connected with the affair is a man named Johnson. He had some trouble with John about a little difficulty in the lodge to which they both belonged. At the Foresters' picnic Johnson was trying to pick a quarrel with my husband. Johnson had a revolver in his pocket at the time, and when a policeman threatened to arrest him he dared the policeman to take him. I kept John from fighting him, and finally took my husband away. As we went this man Johnson yelled after him that he would get his revenge on him some day." Mr. Wise's books showed the following entry: "Feb. 12, 1888—F. A. Johnson, 136 Edgar street, initiated into 22nd degree."

Dealers who claim that their preparations are "as good as Hood's Sarsaparilla," by so doing admit that Hood's is the standard and possesses peculiar merit which they try in vain to reach.

CATARRH.

Catarrhal Deafness—Hay Fever

A NEW HOME TREATMENT.

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membrane of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact, and the result of this discovery is that a simple remedy has been formulated whereby catarrh, catarrhal deafness, and hay fever are permanently cured in from one to three simple applications made at home by the patient once in two weeks. N.B.—This treatment is not a snuff or an ointment; both have been discarded by reputable physicians as injurious. A pamphlet explaining this new treatment is sent free by A. H. DIXON & SON, 337 and 339 West King Street, Toronto, Canada.—Scientific American.

Sufferers from Catarrhal troubles should carefully read the above.

THE N. C. A. FUNDS.

The General Fund is that from which the running expenses of the Association are paid. From it the agents on the field are supported.

The Foreign Fund is that from which the foreign demand for literature against the lodge is supplied to missionaries.

The Free Tract Fund clearly states by its name the object for which contributions are solicited. Millions of pages have been distributed by means of this fund.

The Cynosure Ministers' Fund. The donations to this fund have enabled the Association to send many copies of the Cynosure to the ministers of the South, especially to pastors of colored churches. The result has been a blessing to them and their churches.

Contributions to any or all these funds are urgently solicited.

J. BLANCHARD, EDITOR.

HENRY L. KELLOGG, ASSOCIATE EDITOR.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, OCTOBER 3, 1889.

THE FAITH-CURE people are in danger of bringing prayer for restoring the sick into discredit that God is the God of MEANS as well as miracles. Christ used both in his healings; and the fig plaster laid on King Hezekiah's abscess, and the oil-anointing of the sick, prayed for by "the elders of the church," were both medical remedies much used then and often now.

REV. DR. KINCAID, who has taken Dr. Barrows's place as head secretary of the old and much-blessed American Home Missionary Society, was a member of the editor's old church in Cincinnati. He was also a member of Prof. Morgan's family in Oberlin, and heard the great discussion of the lodge by Finney and Morgan in the First Church there. This is a marked providence of God.

DR. WALDENSTROM's reply to the editor's open letter corrects the latter, who had said the State Church bishops in Sweden were Masons. Dr. Waldenstrom says he knows but one bishop who is a Freemason, though others may be. In Mr. Montgomery's book, "A Wind from the Holy Spirit," on page 99, Dr. Waldenstrom is quoted as saying: "Can we believe Christ and his Apostles would have been high or low Freemasons and such like, as now the bishops and priests of our church are." So the Cynosure was correct if Dr. Waldenstrom was. If there was an error these words naturally led to it.

THE EDITOR of the Cynosure spoke in the Reformed Presbyterian church, East Cambridge, Mass., on Sabbath, and is to preach there twice next Sabbath. Secretary Stoddard made a short address to the Congregational pastors in the Congregational Building, Boston, Monday morning, Sept 23, giving notice of the proposed Conference of Churches, the day for which is not yet fixed. The signs are very propitious. New pastors are signing the call.

THE NATIONAL CONGREGATIONAL COUNCIL which meets at Worcester, Mass., Oct. 9th, is a very important event occurring in a vastly important time. That Council reaches from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and covers forty-two States. A sharp discussion of Romanism and our American schools is now going on in Boston. Rev. Dr. Lansing of Worcester is lecturing in Tremont Temple on the Romish Hierarchy. Another pastor in Worcester has just dedicated a magnificent church building in that city, just before the National Council meets there. Rev. Mr. Lovering had Dr. Quint preach the dedication sermon. He (Lovering) of the venerable "Old South" church, is a Mason and member of other secret societies. It is said he mentioned the devil's libation of "corn, oil, and wine," as used in the Masonic ceremony, in his dedication prayer, and had a stuffed dove overhead as an emblem of the Holy Ghost who came as a dove on Christ at the Jordan. There is a disgust at the lodge dedication of the Pilgrim monument now throughout New England. We recommend that every Christian church reached by the Cynosure hold a special prayer meeting for this Council, on Sabbath, Oct. 7th. All churches, no matter of what denomination—all!

LEVI BENNETT LATHROP.—This valued brother, who resides in Hollister, California, has devised a plan to counteract the impudent attempt of Freemasonry to give itself a semi-sacred character, by emblazoning itself on tombs and grave-stones in cemeteries of the dead. Mr. Lathrop has erected a costly monument, which he intends shall speak for him against lodgery when his tongue will be speechless. We think the conceit a good one, and hope his example will be followed, at least by engraving texts of Scripture which condemn the lodge, as John 18: 20. The following are the inscriptions on three sides of the monument:

[SOUTH SIDE.]

This lot was bought in 1884, when secret societies were all the rage, in order that the owner might have a place where his family could be buried without endorsing secret orders.

All secretly taught religions are delusive. Christ never taught in secret. John 18: 20; Isa. 45: 19.

There is but one way to Heaven. Christ is that way. His name, the only ladder; he that climbs up any other way is a thief and a robber. John 10: 1, 7, 10.

Heaven is Love organized; secret societies are Selfishness combined.

[WEST SIDE.]

Levi Bennett Lathrop, born N. Y., April 30, 1815. Converted at 17, and, at once, engaged in Christian reform. He never smiled on slavery; never used whisky or tobacco; and never joined a secret order.

Died in

Laura Judd, born in Vermont, March 26, 1819, converted at 18, married to L. B. Lathrop at 20.

Died in

A funeral service ignoring the name of Christ is an insult to His majesty. Col. 3: 17.

[EAST SIDE.]

"Whatsoever maketh manifest is light." Whatsoever conceals is darkness. "Men choose darkness rather than light because their deeds are evil, and they will not come to the light, lest their deeds should be reproved."

True philanthropy seeks light. Selfishness seeks concealment.

Heaven has no dark corners or secret conclaves.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

A MODEL NEW ENGLANDER.

In the depot at Natick, Mass., waiting for a connecting train, a farmer came and sat by me, and this was his story:

His name is Loring Loker. He is above 80 years old; never joined a church because Mrs. Loker was a Baptist, a most worthy and excellent woman, wife, and mother; and he believed close communion was the unpardonable sin. Mr. Loker yet has lived a prayerful life in private and in the family. He went up to Bartlett, N. H., fifteen miles from the crest of Mt. Washington, and built mills, where a railroad was to terminate, six miles of which had been already built. He lived and labored there years, and the railroad did not come. A godly man had preached there for the Lord, and farmed for a living fifty years without salary. He wanted a church built. The neighbors met to build one; quarreled and quit. Visitors to the White Mountains more than filled the school-house. Mr. Loker said: "I will be one of five to build a church." He built one and there it stands now, and the people worship God in it.

As the railroad did not come, Mr. Loker left his mills to rot down, and came down to Chelmsford Center, Mass., and built for himself, children, and grandchildren. He can stand in his door and look down on a field without stones, where he cut forty tons of hay. He has some twenty-five acres of bottom land which this year was overflowed, so the machine-mower could not reach it. As he is but few years above 80, he took his scythe and went in. His boots hurt him and he cut holes in them so the water would run in and out; and by the time that hay was got in, the water had cured his vexatious corns, and his feet are now sound. He was in the war with Grant, where he would see him every day. He has blooded cattle, and in his barn-cellar he has an axletree of an ox-cart on which his grandfather (or father, I forget which,) hauled goods from Boston to Plattsburgh, New York, in time of the war. And, like old Caleb, he feels no diminution of strength at four-score, but can mow a day with the best man he can hire. He has mentem sanum in sano corpore. His mind is as strong as his body.

This man has many peers in New England, and when the fact that the secret lodges are corrupting the ballot-box, jury-box,—nay, the court-house, legislature and nation itself, is as clear to them as it was that slavery was doing the same things, the doom of the lodge is sealed.

—Secretary Stoddard finds that a postponement of the Conference of Churches in Boston will secure a wider co-operation of the New England pastors, and writes that the time will be changed to December. Definite announcement will be made soon. A number of eminent names have been secured on the call, several have promised to attend and take part in the conference, and more are hoped for. President C. A. Blanchard's masterly review of the lodge question in Our Day is reprinted and will be widely circulated in New England. The postponement will accommodate many who would otherwise be prevented from attending by the several State Conventions during October and early November.

HENRY HARRISON.

The National Christian Association has lost few warmer friends than Henry Harrison, who died at his home in April last a few weeks after attending with Mrs. Harrison the Washington convention.

Mr. Harrison was born in Ireland in county Monaghan, Ulster province, whence has come to America some of our noblest blood. American principles have no more honorable and steadfast supporters than our citizens who have come from Scotch-Irish parentage. Even the descendants of the Pilgrim Fathers are sometimes put to shame in their presence. He came to America when a boy of some dozen years, and began life in New York with a sturdy independence of spirit. He had relatives here upon whom he could rely for assistance, but we do not find that this was greatly needed even by a young boy in a strange land. He learned the trade of a hatter, before the secret unions began to interfere with American apprentices. His earnings were a mere pittance, but he never thought of joining a strike on that account; on the contrary he saved from his small earnings something for the purchase of books of a substantial character. No evenings were needed in the saloon or theater with such companions at home, and he felt well satisfied with this solution of the labor question. He was satisfied to thus labor on with industry and economy, and it need hardly be said with success, until the death of relatives called him to be legal guardian and manager of their estates. In this new work his integrity and business experience were an excellent qualification. No suspicion of defalcation or maladministration was ever entertained toward Henry Harrison.

He was always a trusted man in the church as well as in business life. He was chosen a ruling elder in the Associate Presbyterian church, to which he belonged, as early as 1839—fifty years ago—and his associates can testify that the responsibilities of this office were borne with a consistency and fidelity seldom equaled. In the councils of the United Presbyterian denomination, which succeeded the Associate, his advice was often sought and his name frequently appears in the deliberations of the General Assemblies. Few men were better known throughout the denomination than he, and few deserved to be better known. He was not a public speaker, and his disposition was modest and retiring, but his many excellencies of character came to be widely known and uniformly esteemed. He was a large giver also for the work of the Christian church, not only for various missionary enterprises, but for special Christian reform movements. From the first and constantly he has aided the National Christian Association in its work of salvation from the lodge; and was equally ardent in sustaining the National Reform Association of Philadelphia. The Catholic reform work in New York was also deeply indebted to him; and the New York Indian Association adopted resolutions of warm eulogy at his death. He was constantly giving, and according to his means few men were more liberal than he. The worthy poor were never turned away from him empty-handed, and he never seemed more happy than when ministering to the happiness of others.

The hospitality of his home was proverbial, and in the welcome always given to God's messengers Mrs. Harrison joined with a cheerful grace. Of this charming characteristic of the Harrison home Dr. Harper, who had often proved it, says:

"His hospitality was proverbial. His generous impulses in this direction were not checked, but favored, by his partner in life, whose heart was as large as his own. He used in playful mood to speak of his house as his 'hotel,' and never did he seem happier than when under his roof and around his well-spread table congenial guests were gathered. His capacious and commodious house is gratefully remembered in Ireland, Scotland, England, Italy, Egypt and India, as well as in Canada and the United States; for it has afforded shelter and bountiful entertainment to guests from all those countries."

But best of all, Henry Harrison was a man of deep, earnest and practical piety, a man of much prayer, a great lover of the Word, and feeder upon the promises of God. In them he took great delight, and upon them he rested as a child upon a mother's arm. Rev. James O'Connor of the Reformed Catholic work in New York city, relates the following incident that well illustrates the cheerful and pious temper of his mind:

"In my work for the evangelization of the Roman Catholics in New York city during the last ten years I have had the sympathy and aid of many Christian friends of all denominations. Among them Mr. Henry Harrison was one of the best and wisest. His sound judgment, good counsel, and especially his fervent practical Christianity made him a valued friend and helper to me. The sweetness of his Christian faith and his joy in the Lord were characteristics that especially endeared him to all who came within the circle of his acquaintance. On every occasion that I met him—and they were many—he had a joyful word of testimony that it was good and sweet to serve the Lord. He was a frequent visitor at my office in the Bible House and his presence was like a beam of sunshine. The last time he paid us a visit was on the Friday before his death. He said he had no particular business, but as he was calling on his physician in the vicinity he looked in to see how the good work was going on. He was induced to stay a little while, but he prolonged his visit for half an hour; and in all my intercourse with him, I never heard such clear testimony of Christian experience, such hope and joy and trust in the Lord as marked his conversation.

"There were several persons in the office at the time, besides the employes, and I called their attention to what Mr. Harrison was saying. All listened with delight as in simple heartfelt words he spoke of his own reasons for trusting in Christ the Saviour, accepting without question all God's promises and applying them to himself as well as to others. It was a simple, natural discourse for him, but it was supernatural in its effect upon all who heard him that afternoon. For myself I can truly say I shall never forget it."

When God takes such a man from the earth it should be our effort that his example affect other souls and encourage them to a like holy life. Such a life is reflected in the kindly face, in the cheerful intercourse, in the gracious spirit of Henry Harrison. May there be many to emulate his virtues.

THE ODD-FELLOWS REPORT.

This order held its annual meeting at Columbus, Ohio, at which all lodges in whatever part of the world are represented. The reports of the officers contain some suggestive figures: as, the total current expenses of the whole organization amounted last year to $2,699,758.84. During the year the lodges paid out for the relief of members in all degrees, male and female, $2,501,820.28. The total income received during the year was $6,424,429.57. Since 1830 the total relief extended to members has been $48,601,862.09. The total receipts have been $127,803,298.50. This Columbus meeting was a large one. Railroads were taxed to convey the multitudes. Newspapers teemed with the accounts of the order, and Governor Foraker, with due regard to the fact that these men are voters, had honeyed words of greeting for the order.

From the above figures it will be seen that this organization is a great institution, and wields an immense monetary, as well as social, influence. Let us look into the items.

It seems that Odd-fellows have paid out during these fifty-eight years $79,201,436.41 over and above what they have received back in actual benefits. Surely this is an expensive luxury, to say the least. During the past year the amount paid for relief has been $3,912,609.29 less than the amount paid in. In other words, this vast sum represents the amount paid for expenses and parades, but which has done nothing to relieve the distressed.

If we look more carefully into this report we shall see that the current expenses of the year are $197,938.56 more than the amount paid for relief. In other words, so much has been practically thrown away. Now Odd-fellows have at least practical business judgment. Let them ask themselves these questions:

1. Is that a benevolent institution which consumes and absorbs nearly three times as much of its relief funds as it pays out for relief?
2. Is it honest to ask men to join your order with the expectation of being relieved in distress, when the same money invested in a savings bank would yield financial results on the average at least 200 per cent better?
3. Can you, with any propriety, rebuke men for buying lottery tickets when your offers of relief are similar in their nature; and, like lotteries, you never pay out more than a fraction of what is paid in?

4. Was the great gathering at Columbus, with its immense cost in time and means, and its attendant drunkenness, on the whole favorable to good morals and the public welfare?

NOTICE that the Boston Conference is postponed until December.

—As some misunderstand the object of the college contest at the Illinois State Convention, the Executive Committee wish to explain that the subject to be treated must be the evils of secret societies in some of their aspects.

—Some of our old friends who have dropped the Cynosure for years are renewing their acquaintance and restoring their names to our list. There are thousands of them who would find it a profitable investment to renew. Please mention it, dear reader, to any such among your acquaintances.

—The Washington agent will doubtless find some young men of zeal, conviction and courage, to take up the work in New York which the elder men are dropping as they go on to their heavenly reward. A young man himself, he will naturally attract those of his age. Let us hope that he may find a noble army of them.

—Rev. S. F. Porter closed his mission work at Oberon in North Dakota on Sabbath day, when, after administering the sacrament, he received eight persons into the little border church. He goes for the present to Richland county in the southeastern corner of the State. He soon expects to return to Chicago on his way to another visitation of the Southern collegiate institutions during the winter season.

—As a new Congress assembles this winter, those who have petitioned former Congresses, as well as those who have not, should send in their petitions and resolutions "against Sunday work in the mail and military service and in inter-State commerce and in the District of Columbia and the Territories." A new form of petition for endorsement by vote by labor organizations, churches, conventions and mass meetings, as well as by signatures, has been prepared by the American Sabbath Union (23 Park Row, N. Y.), copies of which will be sent to those who apply.

—Some men have to get one degree beyond that of "bishop" to insure perfection. A forcible reminder of this fact we saw lately during the visit of a colored bishop at this office. Though nominally the spiritual head of a body of colored churches, his manners were borrowed from a minstrel troupe and his theology from the lodge. While defending the secret societies, of which he is a member, he seriously denied that the epistles of Paul belonged to the Bible text when their condemnation of the lodge was quoted to him. When asked to put that denial in writing so that it might be sent to his conference with names of the witnesses, he backed down with the falsehood that he was joking. Another brother of the same rank finds his taste so improved by the flavor of California fruit that he writes to his church organ of the melon juice running down his chin. That must be sweet reading for the boys.

—A month ago Rev. John Faville of Appleton, Wis., wrote in the Advance on "Why do not More Men Attend Church?" and two weeks since we reprinted from the same paper a correspondent's note asking what proportion of the members of secret societies attend church. We have reviewed carefully Mr. Faville's article and are most happy to correct a previous judgment of it. He does not ignore the lodge, but mentions it just as he meets it in his interviews with one hundred different men of promiscuous occupations. Many of these men, in explaining why women are the better church-goers, answered "that the church is the social center for women, as lodges, club-rooms and bar-rooms are for men." He found probably two hundred men; raised in Catholic and Lutheran churches and naturally belonging to them, who had fallen into the meshes of lodgery and were practically lost to the church. Many of these non-attendants charge the church with a lack of sociability, and they go to the lodge-room to find it. Though in his summary Mr. Faville does not discuss this question from the standpoint of the lodge, yet he fairly presents it as he found it in his inquiry. We should be pleased to know his views upon the question, What should be the action of the church in view of the fact that the lodges hinder men from religious worship? The committee of Elgin Congregational Association has invited a discussion of this question by assigning to Pres. C. A. Blanchard the topic "Why do not the men attend church?"

PERSONAL NOTES.

—Calvin Fairbanks, the old Abolitionist who suffered so long in Kentucky prisons, and of whom an account was lately given in these columns, will lecture this winter.

—Rev. A. J. Chittenden, of the College Church, Wheaton, was appointed by his association as delegate to the National Council of Congregationalists at Worcester, Mass. He expects to attend. Bro. J. L. Wimby, of New Orleans, an active promoter of our reform in that city, is also expecting to be present as a delegate.

—Rev. R. T. Cross, who went from Hamilton, New York, to Colorado Springs in 1876, and five years later to Denver, has just resigned the pastorate of the West Denver Congregational church, which he organized soon after beginning work in that city. He was greatly assisted in the organization and subsequent prosperity of the church by Mrs. A. E. Kellogg, whose occasional contributions to the Cynosure are always most welcome. The sermon on "Secretism," by Mr. Cross when pastor in New York, is yet one of the most valuable pamphlets sold by the N. C. A.

—The enthusiasm with which Dr. P. Waldenstrom has been greeted by the Swedes in America is a beautiful revelation of Scandinavian character, as well as a magnificent tribute to a leader of great natural endowments and spiritual gifts. The Minnesota correspondent of the Congregationalist writes of his addresses in St. Paul: "A visit from Dr. Waldenstrom of Sweden—the Luther of a Free Mission Reformation there already numbering 565 churches—means much at this crisis of the same movement here. Last Sunday he preached to 7,000 in our University Coliseum, and hundreds went away unable to find standing room. The Free churches in America invite him, pay all his expenses, and make out his itinerary and appointments. His age—fifty-one—his vigorous physique—almost English in a full ruddy face—his sympathy with the work, carry him successfully through a packed program; for example, 2,000 miles in fourteen days and twelve sermons of an hour and more. In Nebraska, teams drove in from points of 114 miles distance. No buildings can hold the people. Even in Denver a half-finished ware-house was fitted with electric lights. Doubtless his fame as a leader at home, a voluminous author, member of parliament, and for twenty years the beloved pastor of a church crowding an audience room seating 3,400, explains, in part, the enthusiasm of his welcome; but when the man is seen and known there is no falling off of interest."

—Miss M. F. Cusack, the "Nun of Kenmare," who is visiting Chicago, was present at a late meeting of the Congregational pastors of the city, whom she addressed. In her remarks, as noticed in the Advance, she said she was brought up a Protestant in England but turned toward Romanism, and for thirty years adhered to that system. Her experience had been one of great trials and full of sorrow, and saddest of all were the painful discoveries of the evil practices and false pretences which prevail in Catholic circles. She had become profoundly convinced that the leaders of Catholicism do not desire the elevation of the people. Her attempts to improve the condition of the lower classes had arrayed against her the opposition of bishops and priests. The great object of the Pope is temporal power. To reach this end everything else is tolerated. Nothing is too oppressive to be endured if it increases Catholic power and promotes Catholic aims. Referring to the attitude of the Catholic church toward the public schools, Miss Cusack said: "They call these schools godless. But their schools are the godless schools. They never put the Bible in the hands of the pupils, and they do not teach godliness, but Catholicism." She also looked upon their boasted University system as but little better than a fraud. For a system which will not allow a student to think cannot educate him. Of the political situation in Ireland, she said that in the present crisis the Catholic masses are simply being sold by the Holy See to the powers that be. It is neither liberty nor the highest welfare of the people the Pope wants in Ireland, but power.

THE HOME.

THE CALL OF THE CHRISTIAN.

Not always as the whirlwind's rush
On Horeb's mount of fear;
Not always as the burning bush
To Midian's shepherd seer;
Nor as the awful voice which came
To Israel's prophet bards;
Nor as the tongues of cloven flame,
Nor gift of fearful words,—

Not always thus, with outward sign
Of fire and voice from heaven,
The message of a truth divine,
The call of God is given!
Awaking in the human heart
Love for the true and right,—
Zeal for the Christian's better part,
Strength for the Christian's fight.

Oh, then, if gleams of truth and light
Flash o'er thy waiting mind,
Unfolding to thy mental sight
The wants of human kind;
If, brooding over human grief,
The earnest wish is known
To soothe and gladden with relief
An anguish not thine own;

Though heralded with naught of fear,
Or outward sign or show;
Though only to the inward ear
It whispers soft and low;
Though dropping, as the manna fell,
Unseen, yet from above,
Noiseless as dew-fall, heed it well—
Thy Father's call of love!

—John Greenleaf Whittier.

THE THINGS THAT GOD USES.

I believe there are a great many Christian people all over Christendom who are crying out for work; they say they want to be used of God. I do not think I ever seen such blessed times as during the past six months. Everywhere I have found that there is a longing to engage in Christian work. Yet there are few people who seem really willing to launch out into the deep; they think they have not got the requisite ability. Now I am quite sure we are looking at this matter in a wrong light. We forget that God uses the weak, the foolish, the base and the despised things. I had a little tract given to me a few months ago that made a deep impression on me. It was entitled, "What is That in Thine Hand?"

These words were spoken by God to Moses when he called him to go down and bring the children of Israel out of Egypt. Moses was trying to excuse himself—pleading that he was so weak, and all that; he wanted God to send some one else. "What is that in thine hand?" said God. It was only a stick—he could probably have gone among the bramble bushes and cut a hundred sticks better than it. Little did he know what God was going to do with the rod—that he meant by means of it to deliver his people from their cruel bondage. If one of our modern infidels had met Moses and asked what he was going to do with that rod, and had received the reply that he was going to rescue 3,000,000 slaves from the bonds of the greatest living monarch, the skeptic would have thought Moses had gone clean mad. Yet, how famous that rod became! Through it Moses turned the river into blood. He had but to stretch it out, and the plagues came upon the land of Egypt. See how he used the rod in the desert; he struck the rock with it, and the water came gushing out. God linked his mighty power with that feeble instrument, and what wonderful results followed. If God could use that rod, cannot he use you and me? You say you have not got talents: use what you have.

I could run along the pages of Scripture and show you many other examples of the way in which God uses things that were weak and contemptible in the sight of the world—the blowing of the rams' horns at Jericho, Gideon's little band with their empty pitchers, Samson with the jaw-bone of an ass, Shamgar with the ox goad.

But some of you say this is such a peculiar place; everything must be done "decently and in order." As some one has said of your city: "There is such dignity and death about it." Never mind the dignity, if you can only get one poor soul drawn out of the darkness of eternal death. I would rather hear, at the last, the "Well done!" of my Master than have all the honors the world can bestow. I verily believe we are not going to see a great work of revival in this land until the church of God wakes up, and each individual member of it improves the talent God has given him. Moses was nothing; Joshua or Gideon was nothing. God did the work; they were but the instrument. People say they have no strength, but the trouble is they have too much. It is when we become as nothing, and are emptied of our own strength, that God can take us up and make use of us. He will do the work, and he shall have the glory.—D. L. Moody, in the Watchman.

A PARROT IN A DEACONS MEETING.

Once upon a time, it does not matter when or where, the deacons of a certain church met together to consider the state of affairs in their little Zion. Things were going wrong. There were few conversions, many empty pews, and grumblers enough to stock a dozen churches. Even the collection plate was getting black in the face; and when that is the case it is time to pass an Ecclesiastical Reform Bill.

So the deacons met in solemn assembly in the house of one of the brethren, to investigate the cause of their troubles, and to find a remedy. Great was the talk—lengthened was the conversation—and, alas! they fell upon the poor minister as the root of all the evil. One said that he preached too long, and frightened the people away. Another that he did not visit enough. And another still that he lacked unction, fire and force. Well, sinners must have a scapegoat, and who so fit for one as the minister? They resolved, therefore, to approach him and tell him their minds. This was a sad business, for had they not prayed before his settlement that God would send them the right man to the right place, and had they not thanked him for guiding them so wisely in the choice of a pastor? Now it seemed that their present purpose showed clearly that the Lord had made a mistake, and that they were the men to rectify it.

At last one of them moved this resolution: "Whereas, the state of affairs in the church is so lamentable we feel bound, in the interests of the cause, to suggest to our pastor the advisability of watching the leadings of Providence, and to accept whatever call the Lord may be pleased to send."

They passed this resolution with a hearty unanimity, and went on talking.

Now, in the corner of the room there hung a parrot cage, and on the perch within stood a fine green parrot. Lately arrived in the country, it knew no other language than that which it had learned at sea. It was evidently puzzled by the talk of the brethren, and held its head on one side as if it wished to master the subject under consideration. One thing was certain, it meant to have its say in the matter as soon as an opportunity offered. The chance came. A lugubrious brother, in a long and mournful speech, was still wailing their unfortunate circumstances, and coming to the close said: "Well, brethren, I am sorry things are as they are; our minister may be a good man, yet, think of it as I will, I see no remedy but—"

"Work, you lubbers, work. Work, you lubbers, work."

So said the parrot, and abruptly finished the lugubrious brother's speech, and started the whole diaconate into a state of abnormal activity. Horrified at the untimely timeliness of the parrot's remark, the good brother who owned the parrot sprang up in anger—he was but a man—and made a dash at the cage with a fell intent of teaching the poor creature the dumb alphabet by twisting his neck.

"Stop, brother, stop," cried one of the brethren. "You may wring the parrot's neck, but you cannot wring the neck of truth. The bird is right and we are wrong. Work is the remedy after all."

Down they all sat again, with the cry of the parrot ringing in their ears and consciences. Dear, good men, like most of us they had sought the easiest way out of the difficulty, and had made a mistake. The minister's failings had so fully occupied their attention that they could not think of their own. The parrot had put them face to face with themselves and their own souls, and they were obliged to see that, if the pastor had not done his best, neither had they. This was the conclusion they had reached: and, like honest men, they tore up their first resolution, and were wise enough to make another. They then went home, and in a few weeks the church began to flourish. "Every man had a mind to work." Some went out to the highways and hedges and compelled the wanderers to come in. Some took the task of visiting, and others helped in any way they could. Even the collection plate lost its gloomy looks; it looked brighter, and as for the pastor, he plucked up heart and went ahead, for all the world knows that the leading horse must put on speed when the horses behind are pulling with a will.

As for the parrot, it lived to a green old age, and, like the youth in "Excelsior," repeated its motto to the end. With a convulsive croak, and a merry twinkle of the eye, it left it as a legacy to the world—

"Work, you lubbers, work. Work, you lubbers, work."—Selected.

PRACTICAL CHRISTIANITY.

The St. Louis Globe-Democrat has this paragraph, which contains a suggestive moral: "There," said a neighbor, pointing to a village carpenter, "there is a man who has done more good, I really believe, in this community than any other person who ever lived in it. He cannot talk very much in public, and he does not try. He is not worth $2,000, and it is very little he can put down on subscription papers. But a new family never moves into the village that he does not find out and give them a neighborly welcome, and offer them some service. He is on the lookout to give strangers a seat in his pew at church. He is always ready to watch with a sick neighbor and look after his affairs for him. I believe he and his wife keep house-plants in winter mainly that they may be able to send little bouquets to friends and invalids. He finds time for a pleasant word to every child he meets, and you'll always see them climbing into his one-horse wagon when he has no other load. He has a genius for helping folks, and it does me good to meet him in the streets."

WHAT CAN I DO TO-DAY?

What can I do to-day?

Not praise to win or glory to attain;
Not gold, or ease, or power, or love to gain,
Or pleasure gay;
But to impart
Joy to some stricken heart;
To send a heaven-born ray
Of hope, some sad, despairing
Soul to cheer;
To lift some weighing doubt;
Make truth more clear;
Dispel some dwarfing fear;
To lull some pain;
Bring to the fold again
Some lamb astray;
To brighten life for some one,
Now and here;
This let me do to-day.

WHAT A LITTLE GIRL DID.

A good many years ago a little girl of 12 years was passing an old brick prison in the city of Chicago, on her way to school, when she saw a hand beckoning to her from behind a cell window, and heard a weary voice asking her to please bring him something to read.

For many weeks after that she went to the prison every Sunday, carrying the poor prisoner a book to read from her father's library. At last one day she was called to his death-bed.

"Little girl," said he, "you have saved my soul. Promise me that you will do all your life for the poor people in prison what you have done for me."

The little girl promised; and she has kept her promise. Linda Gilbert has been all her life the steadfast friend of the prisoner. She has established good libraries in many prisons, and visited and helped hundreds of prisoners; and from the great number of whom she has helped, six hundred are now, to certain knowledge, leading honest lives. Prisoners from all parts of the country know and love her name; and surely the God of prisoners must look upon her work with interest.

And all this because a little girl heard and heeded the call to help a suffering soul.—The Home.

HARD THINGS GOOD FOR FOLKS.

There comes a time in every boy's and girl's life when the duties required of them seem irksome, unnecessary and even cruel. They get out of all sympathy with their lives at home, and feel themselves ill-used or unappreciated. This feeling comes generally when marbles, top and velocipede, dolls and child's books and amusements have lost all attractions. The father and mother feel that it is quite time that at least a limited amount of work and responsibility take the place and time of the outgrown toys. Here and there we find a boy or girl who cheerfully accepts the change, who puts on the new duties and responsibilities as they would the long dress in place of the short one, or the long trousers in place of the knickerbockers; but the majority of boys and girls feel themselves martyrs if they are compelled to do certain things that minister to the family life and comfort. They go to school every day willingly, and perform their duties there more or less faithfully. If they were asked "Why?" they would be surprised at the question. "Education was necessary. A man or woman could not amount to anything if they did not have an education of some sort. Of course they would go to school, to prepare for being men and women in the world!"

The education out of school is sometimes far more valuable for living than any acquired in. It is so hard for us to learn that every day is just a preparation for the day to follow, that we cannot separate our lives into pigeon-holes, numbered from one to three hundred and sixty-five, or into groups of twelve, or separate years from each other. Life is like a building having several parts, but all under one roof, and to be symmetrical, sound, beautiful, every part must bear its right relation to every other part.

Sometimes the things that seem hardest for us to bear will prove our greatest help when we become men or women. The writer, when 12 years old, wanted a dress of a certain kind. The woman who acted the part of mother to her told her she could have it if she would make it. Such a proposition staggered her, and all thought of the dress was given up. During the week she was sitting under a tree making a polonaise for her doll; she thought: "If I can make clothes for my doll that fit and look pretty, why should I not make clothes for myself?" She ran into the house at once and announced that she would make the dress if she could have the materials. They were bought and carried to her room, and there was fought a tremendous battle. The skirt of the dress was sewed on and ripped off thirteen times before it was pronounced right. During the week the little girl cried oceans of tears, it seemed to her, and she felt that all kindness and goodness had gone out of life. Years after, when she was a woman, it became necessary for her to earn money, and the first money she earned was for making a dress for a rich, kind woman. If she had not learned to work for herself, depend on herself, she would have been helpless when necessity came.

Men testify again and again that it is the learning to do things that seemed hard and necessary that fitted them to be men in the business world. Doing drudgery is the best way to master any business, any profession. A. T. Stewart knew how to sell goods over a counter before he built up a business that supported hundreds. The founder of one of the largest publishing houses in this country learned to set type. There is an apprenticeship that must be lived and studied before there is a mastery that commands respect. Not the boy or girl who scorns the period becomes master, but the one who sees in it the stepping-stone to higher things. How you would laugh at the little child who, crying, protesting, or scorning refused to learn how to add because he wanted to work problems in algebra!

There are first steps out of school as well as in school.

Ability to work algebra depends on the quickness and accuracy in addition.—Christian Union.

Let fate do her worst: there are moments of joy,
Bright dreams of the past, which she can not destroy;
Which come in the night-time of sorrow and care,
And bring back the features that joy used to wear.

Heaven is not gained at a single bound;
But we build the ladder by which we rise
From the lowly earth to the vaulted skies,
And we mount to its summit round by round.

TEMPERANCE.

SUNDAY SALOON LAWLESSNESS IN CINCINNATI.

It will be twenty years next November since the Cincinnati School Board, through a coalition of Roman Catholics, rationalists, and atheists, voted the use of the Bible out of the public schools of this city. Soon after, the liquor saloons began to open on Sunday, and for nearly nineteen years they have been practically unmolested. Over a year ago the legislature of the State passed a statute specifically closing them on that day. With a great show of virtue Mr. Amor Smith, then mayor, ordered all arrested who were found violating the law. The Saloon-Keeper's Association decreed that all should keep open, and that all expenses of prosecution should be paid out of their common treasury. In each case a jury was demanded. The Police Court Jury Law provides that each of the sixty councilmen shall select fifty names to be put into a wheel, and that from it the venire of jurors shall be drawn. Half a dozen of the cleanest men in council did not furnish their quotas of names, but every saloon-keeper and his helper has supplied his, consequently as high as forty-eight per cent of the names on those lists have been found to be saloon-keepers or bar-room dependents! The remainder are generally those whom it is certain will not convict. Consequently it is next to impossible to secure a conviction. Once last year, when the evidence for the State was as clear as the noon, and the defense offered none, the jury returned a verdict of "Not Guilty" without leaving their seats! When the mayor had piled up nearly two thousand cases in the police court he announced that he would make no further attempt to enforce the law, as he was "satisfied the people did not want it enforced."

The city was under the heel of the saloon. The worst of all was that a veritable pusillanimousness had taken possession of that part of the people that really wanted the law enforced. They would assure you in a hopeless way that they fully agreed the saloons should be closed up, "but you cannot do anything, and what is the use of trying? you will only either show your weakness or make the rumsellers mad. You had better let things alone." This was so nearly universal as to threaten paralysis of any effort to throw off the yoke.

Last October the Evangelical Ministers' Meeting took up this question under the form, "What is the most important line of work in which the churches of this city can engage at the present time?" They appointed a committee to bring in a plan of operations, and in a few weeks had succeeded in creating the organization technically known as the "Committee of Five Hundred." About twenty-five hundred persons signed their names to the agreement under which the association was organized, pledging themselves to labor for the nomination and election of men who were pledged to enforce the Sunday laws and of such men only. A resolution of the committee in its first mass-meeting especially emphasized the closing of the saloons. That was the platform. It did not purpose putting up a separate ticket, but to select from the nominations of the political parties those who would meet the requirements.

In the Republican convention a member in sympathy with the "Five Hundred" sprung a resolution pledging the party to enforce the law closing saloons on Sunday, and it almost precipitated a riot. It was ignominiously howled down, while the impertinent delegate was in imminent danger of violence. This resolution was only presented, according to arrangement, after the convention had nominated a bumper's ticket, and especially after they had agreed to the brewers' candidates for police judge and prosecutor. The purpose was to compel a record that could not be gainsaid. The plan succeeded. The record was made. The Democratic nomination for mayor was not much if any better than that of the Republicans. The "Five Hundred" were compelled to name a new man for mayor, and for the remainder of their ticket selected from the Democratic-Republican, and Prohibition nominations. Their nominee for mayor received 7,300 votes, notwithstanding a most unscrupulous opposition. The Republican nominee won by a small scratch, receiving fewer votes than any one of the defeated candidates save his opponent. The only men elected that day, save the mayor, were those indorsed by the "Five Hundred." They made their real fight on the police judge and prosecutor, indorsing the Democratic nominations. They were triumphantly elected, and have honored their oath of office by a faithful performance of their duty up to the present.

The mayor has been true to his masters—the saloon-keepers and the brewers. At first he would not touch the law. Afterward the police might note violators and arrest on a warrant on Monday. Then, as the tide of public sentiment rose, the police commissioners ordered the police officers to arrest on sight all violators. This was done, and the police court did its duty. A few weeks ago members of a society of saloon-keepers called on the mayor to enforce the Sunday "common labor" law, "in order to make these muckers take their own medicine." He promptly issued his proclamation ordering all confectioneries, cigar and tobacco stores, drug stores except for medicine, barber-shops, groceries, meat stores, etc., etc., closed. This fearful stroke of retaliation has proved to be in the main exceedingly popular. The barbers are delighted, the drug stores ditto, and nearly all the others well pleased. For two weeks the city had real Sabbaths, showing above everything else that what nearly all pronounced impossible, can be done, viz., the law can be enforced.

In the meantime the liquor fraternity is correspondingly stirred. The charm of their undisputed rule is broken. At first they indulged only in threats. Several anonymous threatening letters were received by persons prominent in promoting the reform. Sunday, July 20, liquor dealers reached the period of bloodshed. A member of the Law and Order League was set upon and brutally beaten—rescued only at the muzzle of a policeman's revolver, while that policeman himself was stunned with a blow from a loaded cane. At another time in the same beer hall a quiet citizen, because he called for lemonade, was seized and beaten on suspicion that he was a "Law and Order spy." He, too, was only rescued by an armed policeman. Later in the evening, in the same den, after its proprietor had been arrested and released on a $10,000 bond, another policeman going to arrest a bar-tender was also brutally assaulted, while the most villainous outcries rent the air.

A meeting of saloon-keepers was held in Turner Hall, in this city, on Thursday afternoon, July 25, attended by five or six hundred, the object of which was to take the preliminary steps, and organize open resistance of the law closing saloons on Sunday. A paper was circulated for the signatures of those who were ready to make the open fight, which reads as follows:

We, the undersigned saloon-keepers of the — Ward, pledge ourselves in our own handwriting, and by our word of honor, which is equivalent to an oath, to keep open our front doors on next Sunday and on all following Sundays, and conduct our business in the same way as on week-days.

This open defiance of law aroused so much indignation that the city government displayed unwonted courage.

No doubt that courage was greatly stimulated by the following letter from Governor Foraker, which, he says in a letter to the writer, under date of July 27, inclosing the copy herewith used, he wrote, "Yesterday morning immediately after reading the account given in the newspapers of the Turner Hall meeting." This copy was then furnished for private information, but has since been published by authority, and reads as follows:

OFFICE OF THE GOVERNOR.
COLUMBUS, Ohio, July 27, 1889.

Hon. John B. Mosby, Mayor, Cincinnati, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Do not tolerate any defiance of law. No man is worthy to enjoy the free institutions of America who rebels against a duly enacted statute, and defies the authorities charged with its enforcement. Smite every manifestation of such a spirit with a swift and heavy hand.

I do not make these suggestions from fear you need them, but only that you may have any assurance they may afford you in the discharge of the duty to which you are called by the action of the Turner Hall meeting of yesterday, the proceedings of which I have just read in the morning papers. Very truly yours, etc.

(Signed) J. B. FORAKER.

On Sunday, July 28, some 150 saloon-keepers are known to have defied the authorities, and 135 were arrested, some of them as often as five times. The names of the culprits were nearly all foreign.

The police has stood nobly by the law. When on the late occasion of the Turnfest the chief of police issued, by command of the mayor, an order not to arrest violators of the law, the police commissioners, on complaint of a Law and Order man, tried the chief for malfeasance and malfeasance in office and found him guilty. Last week they revoked the appointment of the private policemen in the notorious beer garden alluded to above, and ordered the most determined prosecution of the assailants of the officers. To-day [Aug. 20] the saloon-keepers, through their attorney, made an unconditional surrender in the police court, promising to faithfully obey the law! But ingrained lawbreakers will need watching. However, it is true that a significant battle has been fought and won. Others hasten apace. The fight is on. The spirit of the people is aroused. The infamous Police Court Jury Law for the manufacture of perjurers will be changed, and there will be no more cessation of the war on the Sunday saloon, no matter what the political result may be. It is again being burned into the convictions of the people that good laws stand but a poor show for execution at the hands of bad men.

STUDIES IN THE OLD TESTAMENT.

LESSON II.—Fourth Quarter.—Oct. 13.

SUBJECT.—The ark brought to Zion.—2 Sam. 6: 1-12.

GOLDEN TEXT.—The Lord loveth the gates of Zion more than all the dwellings of Jacob.—Ps. 87: 2.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

COMMENTS ON THE S. S. LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The bringing back of the ark, vs. 1-5. During the absence of the ark Israel was without any common religious gathering-place, or any visible symbol of Jehovah's presence. Twice the Philistines had tried to overthrow the new monarchy, and their final defeat had left David to rule in peace over a free and united people. To bring back the ark, and have once more a religious center round which all the tribes could rally, where the humblest Israelite could come and worship, and be on a level with the richest, was not only an act of piety on David's part, but one of sound policy. The nation needed such a conservator of patriotism, and a bulwark against revolution and civil strife. So, in our higher civilization, and under a more spiritual dispensation, there is just the same need of religion as a national bond of union. The Bible is in many respects to us what the Bible was to the ancient Israelites. It is our medium of communication with God, through which we learn his will, and by which every enemy of truth and righteousness can be put to flight. We need as a nation to bring back the Bible to its old place of honor, to reinstate it in our common schools, make it our legislative text book, shrine it in our homes and our hearts, for it is our true source of wisdom and power as a nation.

2. The death of Uzzah, vs. 6-9. The supreme importance of using right methods in Christian work is not sufficiently appreciated. God cannot consistently bless even right things done in wrong ways. He must support and uphold his own laws or cease to be God. A blunder was first made by David himself in having the ark placed on a cart and drawn by oxen, when it was God's express command that it should be transported from one place to another by human agency alone. Raising money for Christian work by fairs, entertainments and other worldly and questionable modes, has in it the elements of a similar error. It proceeds from a lack of consecration and the spirit of self-denial. Too many church members do not like to put their shoulder to the wheel and draw the ark themselves. Such a method often involves those who get them up in other sins—in rivalries and heart-burnings, to say nothing of physical fatigue and wasted time. All systems of natural religion which seek God by another way than Christ make a similar mistake. It is drawing the ark of God by oxen after the manner of the Philistines. But they were heathen and knew no better; and as we are told in another place, "the times of this ignorance God winked at." But he cannot excuse men in a Christian country who have had every opportunity to know his will. We have already likened the Bible to the ark of God. Look at this Holy Book carried in a Masonic procession by the hands, perhaps, of a rumseller, a profane swearer, a deist, an offender against the laws of social purity! Is not this a harnessing of bestial forces to the ark of God? The command was that it should be carried on the shoulders of Levites, men especially consecrated to the work. The impure and the profane, who in the language of the Apostle are "like natural brute beasts made to be taken and destroyed," have no business with holy things. A curse is pronounced against them who "handle the Word of God deceitfully." And it is the honest members of the lodge who have most reason to beware lest, like good Uzzah, their honesty and their good intentions avail them not against the fatal consequences of their mistake.

3. Obed-edom blest, vs. 10-12. The chief point here is that God blesses the man, the family, the nation which cherishes his Word. True Bible religion is contagious. When men see that it is attended by genuine happiness and prosperity they want it themselves. Shrine the Bible in the homes of our land, and we shrine it in the heart of the nation itself.

HELPFUL THOUGHTS FROM PELOUBET'S QUARTERLY.

THE ARK OF GOD IN THE HOUSE.—True religion in the home, cherished and kept alive by family religious services, is always a great blessing both for this life and for that which is to come. (1) It binds the family together in unity of spirit. (2) It cultivates a loving, happy, unselfish spirit, which brings joy to the home. (3) It sanctifies and makes pure all home labors and joys, transfiguring them with the spirit of heaven. (4) It destroys all those bad passions and actions which mar the happiness of home. (5) It brings God's blessings upon all we do. (6) Religion brings outward and temporal prosperity. It cherishes those qualities which lead to worldly prosperity, and is opposed to those which destroy it.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

FREE METHODIST CONFERENCES TESTIFY.

The West Iowa Conference adopted the following:

"Every year events are developing in the history of secrecy which intensifies our opinion that it is a great and growing evil. Its very nature being such that the administration of justice is taken from God-ordained government and placed in the hands of men who can hide their devilry behind tyled doors, and sworn secrecy of their brotherhood, has resulted in the murder of its Morgans and Cronins. The religious nature of most secret societies causes its devotees often to say, that the man-made religion of the lodge is as good or even better than the God-given religion of the church—thus deceiving men to their eternal undoing; and in excluding all idea of forgiveness and mercy, those cardinal points in the character of Jesus Christ, it naturally shuts out the only hope of salvation—'For there is none other name given under heaven, or among men, whereby we must be saved,' only in the name of Jesus. Therefore we report our increasing hostility to secrecy in any and every form, and pledge ourselves to do all in our power to enlighten the public mind to these evils, and, that under God, our labors in this direction shall not cease till these parasites of church and state have become a thing of the past."

From North Michigan comes this report:

"Our opposition to secret, oath-bound societies is not the result of a mere partisan spirit, or because of any personal affront or injury, but a conviction begotten of careful and unbiased investigation of underlying principles, and unprejudiced observation of practical workings. We find them founded in selfishness, both in church and state. We find that in our civil courts it is almost impossible for men who do not belong to these secret orders to get justice. We also find that secrecy, especially Freemasonry, obliterates the only true lines of distinction in society, conferring honors and distinctions regardless of merit, selfish in its principles, and raising a dangerous standard of morality in the world.

"Experience teaches us as a people that we must not, and we will not, remove the ancient landmarks which our fathers have set, and we will continue as in the past, to exclude members of secret societies from our church and the Lord's table; whereas, if we should do otherwise, we would be bidding them Godspeed. But, contrariwise, let us as a conference raise our voices against all secret societies, doing our duties as men and women of God, and clearing ourselves from the blood of souls in the coming judgment."

—Dr. Pentecost has arranged to give another year to Gospel work in Scotland. He hopes to commence the autumn campaign at Newport-on-Tay about the 20th inst., and his engagements extend to the close of May next.

—E. W. Bliss has been conducting Gospel meetings in the tents sustained by the Chicago Evangelization Society, until the 20th of September. After the Christian Conference he, with Prof. Towner, starts on his evangelistic work for the winter, beginning probably in Kansas.

—Robert Shemeld and his wife, the devoted missionaries of Estcourt, South Africa, write to the Free Methodist of several late baptisms of believing natives, and adds: "How glad we are that we obeyed our conscience and came to Natal! How thankful for the mercies God has showered upon us, entrusting us with the care of these people, and leading us as he has done! Three years ago there was no building here, and only a few women and children who would come to hear us read, sing and pray. Not one would either read, sing or pray. They said, "How can we pray? We were never taught." Today scores can sing their Zulu hymns and pray with intelligent fervor. A few have learned to read their Bibles. God has wrought this, and we believe it is but the beginning of good things for Bethany Zulu Mission."

—Mr. George Muller, of the Bristol orphanage, is still in India, where he has been preaching and addressing a large number of meetings, calling upon the unconverted to turn unto the Lord, and inciting Christians to increased love and good works.

—A few years ago the offerings at the temple at Monghyr, India, amounted to $50,000, during the two days of the annual festival; now they are only $20,000. The priests say to the missionaries, "You are the reason. Your preaching and your books have taken the fear of us and of our gods from the hearts of the people."

—Twelve hundred converts have been baptized in the Baptist Mission in Russia the past two years. The mission is principally among the German colonists in South Russia. There is also a successful mission in Roumania and Bulgaria.

—The Indian Industrial School recently established in Tucson, is one of the most promising institutions in Arizona, and although it has been organized only about one year it has 70 Indian boys and girls, all of whom appear to be making remarkable progress in conforming to the habits of civilized life.

—An English officer of distinction said: "The American missions alone are doing more for the satisfactory settlement of the Eastern question than all our governments. By their contact with peoples of all nations they are teaching them mutual interest, respect and confidence, and so doing more than any other force to make the whole world one."

—The report of the Pacific Garden Mission in Chicago shows what a monument its founders, Col. and Mrs. Geo. R. Clarke, are rearing for themselves in the affections of multitudes of men converted to God and redeemed from lives of poverty and vice by their labors. The twelfth year of the mission has just closed, and shows the total number of meetings to have been 577, and the total attendance 101,428, of whom 5,055 professed conversion. Large numbers of Bibles and tracts have been distributed and over 100 visits made to the county jail. The total expenses of the mission were $5,677.69, of which Col. Clarke paid himself $2,388, various individuals and churches contributing the rest. Many of the attendants and workers are much devoted to the mission. One of them has lately put the mission room in fine repair by his own voluntary act. The regular workers number over fifty persons. Col. and Mrs. Clarke, with Harry Monroe, the missionary and leader of the choir, are present six nights of each week and usually every Sabbath the year round, and several of the other workers are present many nights each week. Twelve years of nightly meetings with scarcely an omission have been held, in which time over seven hundred thousand has been the aggregate attendance, and some thirty-five thousand persons have professed to seek a better life in the Lord. No one, not even the founders of the mission, will know the extent of the influence of this work until eternity shall reveal it in the kingdom of God.

—The Examiner says, respecting Rev. Grattan Guinness, head of the great London Institute for the training of missionaries, who has been traveling for months through Mexico and the Southern States: "From Mexico he went through Texas, Louisiana, Virginia, Kentucky, North Carolina and others of the States. His purpose was to visit the colleges for colored students. In a single month he addressed 3,000 colored students, receiving offers of service for the Congo mission from thirty of them. Dr. Guinness finds that a new movement is begun among the million colored Baptists—as he puts it: 'Africa in America is beginning to move towards Africa beyond the seas.' After seeing the colored people, Mr. Guinness went among the white churches, taking with him his bright Congo boy, N'koiyo. N'koiyo used to be at Harley House under Mr. Guinness, but is now studying in one of our Southern institutions. Mr. Guinness's plea was that individual churches should support each a missionary on the Congo in connection with our Missionary Union, but in addition to what they at present are doing for missions. Nine Baptist churches in Philadelphia promised to support ten fresh missionaries on the Congo. The American Colonization Society has promised to transport all these missionaries free, and Mr. Guinness has secured a suitable house in Monrovia, Liberia, where the missionaries can wait until they can be sent to the Congo. He will be busy in September seeing to the start of these new missionaries, and in October is to be at the opening of the new missionary college in Boston. Mr. Guinness shows how great pleasure he takes in thus forwarding the work of our missions on the Congo in all his letters. His is a crusade for missions wisely and economically conducted, and carried on without any flourish of trumpets, or appeals for help for his personal expenses."

IN BRIEF.

A Miss Chauncey of Columbus, Ohio, has had a fright which will doubtless teach her a lesson. She used for her complexion a mixture of arsenic and nitrate of silver. Then she went to the White Sulphur Springs and took the baths. The sulphur decomposed the silver salts in her skin and turned her so black that she has gone into retirement, and will not be seen again for a year.

A curious discovery connected with the recent disastrous fire at Spokane, Wyoming Territory, is reported by a local paper. A safe becoming cracked by the intense heat, the books inside were charred and baked to a blackened crisp though they remained intact. Not a figure could be read. One of the book-keepers, while turning over the leaves, noticed that where his finger, which was wet, touched the page the figures became legible. He procured a paint brush, dipped it in water and dampened the whole page, and was gratified to see all the figures dimly outlined. Two book-keepers then went to work, and by wetting the pages and carefully turning the leaves succeeded in a few days in transferring all the accounts to a new set of books.

THE EYES OF GREAT MEN.

An oculist who has made the human eye a study for thirty years, and who has examined many famous men's eyes, declared the other day, says the Philadelphia Press, that the "thoroughbred American" eye was steel blue in color. He would not say that black-eyed and brown-eyed men are deficient in intellect. But, undeniably, among the people of higher civilization eyes grow lighter in hue, and there are to-day far more blue-eyed persons than there were a century ago. If you will be at pains to inquire the color of the eyes of Bismarck, Gladstone, Huxley, Virchow, Buchner, Renan, in fact, of any of the living great, as well as of the great army of the dead, who in life distinguished themselves, you will learn that most of them have, or had, eyes of blue or grey. It has seemed to me that the pigment is in the way; that it obscures the objects presented to the visual organ, and that the aspiring mind, seeking the greatest light, casts it off.

The darkness, however, is fast dispersing, and the most prominent illuminator is the Congo Free State, established on the most absolutely cosmopolitan basis under the nominal sovereignty of the philanthropic king of the Belgians. In this light its establishment marks a new and most significant departure in the organization of new communities. Already steamers of all the principal nations have navigated the waters of the great river for some time, but perhaps the most efficient stimulus and aid to the general civilizing purposes of the State will be the railroad, the preliminaries of which will be begun at once. The commerce of the region which will be traversed by the line will be of the utmost importance. There are thousands of trees, says an experienced explorer writing a few months ago in Blackwood, whose beautifully grained timber has only to be brought to Europe to find a ready sale. Teak, kingwood, camwood, lignumvitæ, and African black oak are only a few out of the valuable woods which now fall in their season, and lie rotting in the forests, while there is a creeper which winds itself round the trunks of trees like a huge serpent, and having climbed to the branches and spread over them, drops down numberless ropes, which seem to take root in the ground. If you cut one of these stems with a knife a white milky sap exudes between the bark and the woody centre, which is caoutchouc or india rubber. Besides these there are quantities of ivory and many other productions of value in the Congo country, the settlement of which has been begun in the most practical manner, and is evidently destined to a very rapid advance.

History of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. As prepared by seven committees or citizens, appointed to ascertain the fate of Morgan. This book contains indisputable, legal evidence that Freemasons abducted and murdered Wm. Morgan, for no other offense than the revelation of Masonry. It contains the sworn testimony of over twenty persons, including Morgan's wife and no candid person, after reading this book, can doubt that many of the most respectable Freemasons in the Empire State were concerned in this crime. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.50.

Ex-President John Quincy Adams. Letters on the Nature of Masonic Oaths, Obligations and Penalties. Thirty most interesting, able and convincing letters on the above general subject, written by this renowned statesman to different public men of the United States during the years 1831 to 1833. With Mr. Adams' address to the people of Massachusetts upon political aspects of lodge-ry; an Appendix giving obligations of Masonry, and an able introduction. This is one of the most telling anti-secrecy works extant, aside from the Expositions. Price, cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper, 50 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

Hon. Thurlow Weed on the Morgan Abduction. This is the legally attested statement of this eminent Christian journalist and statesman concerning the unlawful seizure and confinement of Capt. Morgan in Canandaigua Jail, his removal to Fort Niagara and subsequent drowning in Lake Ontario, the discovery of the body at Oak Orchard Creek and the two inquests thereon. Mr. Weed testifies from his own personal knowledge of these thrilling events. This pamphlet also contains an engraving of the monument and statue erected to the memory of the martyred Morgan at Batavia, N. Y., in September, 1882, for which occasion Mr. Weed's statement was originally prepared. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

The Broken Seal; or Personal Reminiscences of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. By Samuel D. Greene. One of the most interesting books ever published. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper covers, 40 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

The Mystic Tie, or Freemasonry a League with the Devil. This is an account of the church trial of Peter Cook and wife, of Elkhart, Indiana, for refusing to support a reverend Freemason; and their very able defense presented by Mrs. Lucia C. Cook, in which she clearly shows that Freemasonry is antagonistic to the Christian religion. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.75.

Freemasonry Self-Condemed. By Rev. J. W. Bain. A careful and logical statement of reasons why secret orders should not be fellowshiped by the Christian Church, and by the United Presbyterian church in particular. Paper covers; price, 20 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Finney on Masonry. The character, aims and practical workings of Freemasonry. By Pres. Charles C. Finney, of Oberlin College. President Finney was a "bright Mason," but left the lodge when he became a Christian. This book has opened the eyes of multitudes. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper cover, 25 cents; per dozen, $2.50.

Oaths and Penalties of the 33 Degrees of Freemasonry. To get these thirty-three degrees of Masonic bondage, the candidate takes a million horrible oaths. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.50.

Masonic Oaths Null and Void; or, Freemasonry Self-Convicted. This is a book for the times. The design of the author is to refute the arguments of those who claim that the oaths of Freemasonry are binding upon those who take them. His arguments are conclusive, and the forcible manner in which they are put, being drawn from Scripture, make them convincing. The minister or lecturer will find in this work a rich fund of arguments. 207 pages. Postpaid, 40 cents each.

Oaths and Penalties of Freemasonry, as proved in court in the New Berlin Trials. The New Berlin trials began in the attempt of Freemasons to prevent public institutions by seceding Masons. These trials were held at New Berlin, Chenango Co., N. Y., April 13 and 14, 1881, and General Augustus C. Welsh, sheriff of the county, and other adhering Freemasons, swore to the truthful revelation of the oaths and penalties. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Masonry a Work of Darkness, adverse to Christianity, and inimical to republican government. By Rev. Lebbeus Armstrong (Presbyterian), a seceding Mason of 21 degrees. This is a very telling work and no honest man who reads it will think of joining the lodge. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.75.

Judge Whitney's Defense before the Grand Lodge of Illinois. Judge Daniel H. Whitney was Master of the lodge when S. L. Keith, a member of his lodge, murdered Ellen Slade. Judge Whitney, by attempting to bring Keith to justice, brought on himself the vengeance of the lodge but he boldly repudiated the charges against him and afterwards renounced Masonry. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.75.

Masonic Salvation as taught by its standard authors. This pamphlet is a compilation from standard Masonic works, in proof of the following proposition: Freemasonry claims to be a religion that saves men from all sin, and purifies them for heaven. 111 pages, price, postpaid, 30 cents.

Freemasonry at a Glance illustrates every sign, grip and ceremony of the first three degrees. Paper cover, 32 pages. Single copy, six cents.

HOME AND HEALTH.

COOKING FOOD BY ELECTRICITY.

The Hotel Bernina, at Samaden, has for some time been lighted with electricity, power being supplied by a waterfall. As during the day this power is not required for lighting, and is therefore running to waste, the proprietor of the hotel has hit upon the idea of utilizing the current for cooking when it is not required for lighting, and an experimental cooking apparatus has been constructed. This contains German silver resistance coils, which are brought to a red heat by the current, and it has been found possible to perform all the ordinary cooking operations in a range fitted with a series of such coils.—Electrician.

HOW TO SEW ON BUTTONS.

Nothing is more vexatious (to either sex) than to have buttons continually coming off, and the following hints from the Youth's Companion regarding the best way to sew them on are well worth "passing along."

"When I get a bright idea I always want to pass it along," said a lady, as she sat watching a young girl sewing. "Do your buttons ever come off, Lena?"

"Ever? They're always doing it. They are ironed off, washed off and pulled off, until I despair. I seem to shed buttons at every step."

"Make use of these two hints when you are sewing them on, then, and see if they make any difference: When you begin, before you lay the button on the cloth, put the thread through so that the knot will be on the right side; that leaves it under the button, and prevents it being worn or ironed away, and thus beginning the loosening process. Then, before you begin sewing, lay a large pin across your button, so that all your threads will go over the pin. After you have finished filling the holes with thread, draw out the pin and wind your thread round and round beneath the button. That makes a compact stem to sustain the possible pulling and wear of the button-hole. It is no exaggeration to say that my buttons never come off, and I'm sure yours won't if you use my method of sewing."

BE CAREFUL OF YOUR TEETH.—Mrs. George H. Dunsford, wife of a leading citizen of Reading, Pa., died the other day after being thrown into spasms while laughing heartily at a theatrical performance which she recently attended. Her artificial teeth were missing, and a post-mortem examination developed the fact that she had swallowed them. They were found lodged in her stomach.

FIRE EXTINGUISHER.

A Georgia physician writes to the Constitution of Atlanta that the solution used in the hand grenades now offered so extensively for sale is easily and cheaply made by taking twenty pounds of common salt, ten pounds of sal ammoniac (muriate of ammonia, to be had of any druggist), and dissolving in seven gallons of water. When dissolved it can be bottled and kept in each room in the house. In case of a fire one or two bottles should be thrown with force into the burning place, hard enough to break them, and the fire will certainly be extinguished.

THINGS I HAVE LEARNED.—That to wash smoothing irons in dish-water after washing skillets, will make them smooth and prevent rusting.

That if you fold your clothes as you take them from the line they would iron much easier.

That your copper wash boiler, if well rubbed with a cloth dipped in coal oil, will be clean and bright.

That you can sweep a rag carpet much cleaner sweeping crosswise of the width.

That if you want to keep your house free of moths, never put down your carpets till the floor is thoroughly dry.

That to keep your bedding pure and wholesome, open your beds to the air the first thing in the morning.

That in making up unbleached muslin, allow one inch to the yard for shrinkage.

That one part suet to two parts lard rendered together, is much better for frying purposes, than all lard.

Wonderful and Startling! HAVE YOU READ IT?

It will create a sensation and "open" the eyes of every true American to see the "Danger Ahead," and expose the secret of Rome's attack upon our Public Schools. This wonderful book is none other than

THE SECRET INSTRUCTIONS OF THE JESUITS.

Published by an ex-Romanist.

This work is a translation from the Latin of the "Secret Instructions of the Jesuit Society." Its revelations are startling, showing to what depths of deceit the Jesuit priest and all connected with this Order of "Spies" and "Traitors" will descend to accomplish their unholy aims. It is printed in the original Latin with the English translation parallel, thus doing away with the anticipated charge of forgery by those who set a premium on murder and treason.

A history of the Order of Jesuits and their expulsion from every Catholic country is given; also, the reason why the Public Schools must go.

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MOR
GAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Ontario jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemason to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his name to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS SIGNATURE TO IT.

In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies."

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association. Single copy, 5 cents.]

FARM NOTES.

It is estimated that over $2,500,000.-000 is invested in the dairy business in this country: that 15,000,000 cows supply the raw material; that to feed these cows 60,000,000 acres of land is under cultivation; that 750,000 men are employed in the business, and over 1,000,000 horses. The cows and horses each year eat 30,000,000 tons of hay, 90,000,000 of corn meal, about as much oat meal, 275,000,000 bushels of oats, 2,000,000 bushels of bran, and 30,000,000 bushels of corn. It costs $450,000,000 a year to feed these animals and $180,000,000 to pay the hired help.

LIGHTS IN THE BARN.

It is estimated that nine-tenths of all fires are caused by carelessness. Now is the season when the lantern is frequently used in the barn, and we give a word of caution. Never light a lamp or lantern of any kind in the barn. Smokers may include their pipes and cigars in the above. The lantern should be lighted in the house or some outbuilding where no combustibles are stored. A lantern which does not burn well should never be put in order in the hay mow. There is a great temptation to strike a match and re-light an extinguished lantern, wherever it may be. It is best to even feel one's way out to a safe place, than to run any risks. If the light is not kept in the hand, it should be hung up. Provide hooks in the various rooms where the lights are used. A wire running the whole length of the horse stable, at the rear of the stalls, and furnished with a sliding hook, is very convenient for night work with the horses. Some farmers are so careless as to keep the lamp oil in the barn, and fill the lantern there while the wick is burning. Such risks are too great, even if the buildings are insured.—American Agriculturist.

FRESH TOMATOES IN WINTER.

When frost threatened, many of the vines were full of tomatoes of all sizes. I took them up with as much dirt as I could keep, but that was not very much as the soil was sandy, and took them to the cellar and hung them near a window where the sun shone in, and gave them plenty of air day and night; until after Thanksgiving day we had more than our small family could eat. After the first of December the larger and more forward were pretty nearly done, but they kept on ripening, although the vine seemed thoroughly dry. They became paler and less palatable. Those at Christmas were pretty good, sound and ripe, rather pale red. I supposed that would be the last; I went to take the vines out and found two or three tomatoes that were eatable. I ate them, and found them very much better than I expected.—Vick's Magazine.

SEED CORN.

The Maryland Farmer is an advocate of pedigree in seed corn as well as live stock, and gives this advice as to securing results, such as the farmers of Ohio have scarcely dreamed of as yet:

Go to the field, seek out the thrifty and early stalks that have two or more ears on them; mark these, in order that they may be readily found when ripe, and may not be disturbed before; let them stand till perfectly ripe, then gather the largest, best filled of these; pick them with a long stem and all the husks on; wreath them up in bunches of threes, and hang them up for seed; then plant only the butt end half of the ear, which is heaviest and earliest.

Do this each year, and an early prolific variety will be produced—a variety that will uniformly give three to five ears on the stalk, and ripen earlier than the usual crop—and the grain or benefit will far more than compensate for the cost and trouble. On the hill is the place to secure seed corn, not in the crib, if reliable improved seed is wanted.

It is a fact, that Hood's Sarsaparilla does cure scrofula, salt rheum, and other diseases or affections arising from impure state or low condition of the blood, overcomes that tired feeling, creates a good appetite, and gives strength to every part of the system. Try it.

Sufferers

FROM Stomach and Liver derangements—Dyspepsia, Biliousness, Sick-Headache, and Constipation—find a safe and certain relief in Ayer's Pills. In all cases where a cathartic is needed, these Pills are recommended by leading physicians.

Dr. T. E. Hastings, of Baltimore, says: "Ayer's Pills are the best cathartic and aperient within the reach of my profession."

Dr. John W. Brown, of Oceana, W. Va., writes: "I have prescribed Ayer's Pills in my practice, and find them excellent. I urge their general use in families."

"For a number of years I was afflicted with biliousness which almost destroyed my health. I tried various remedies, but nothing afforded me any relief until I began to take Ayer's Pills."—G. S. Wanderlich, Scranton, Pa.

"I have used Ayer's Pills for the past thirty years, and am satisfied I should not be alive to-day if it had not been for them. They cured me of dyspepsia when all other remedies failed, and their occasional use has kept me in a healthy condition ever since."—T. P. Brown, Chester, Pa.

"Having been subject, for years, to constipation, without being able to find much relief, I at last tried Ayer's Pills, and deem it both a duty and a pleasure to testify that I have derived great benefit from their use. For over two years past I have taken one of these Pills every night before retiring. I would not willingly be without them."—G. W. Bowman, 26 East Main st., Carlisle, Pa.

"Ayer's Pills have been used in my family upwards of twenty years, and have completely verified all that is claimed for them. In attacks of piles, from which I suffered many years, they afforded me greater relief than any medicine I ever tried."—Thomas F. Adams, Holly Springs, Texas.

PAGAN COUNTERFEITS

IN THE

Christian Church.

A pamphlet of 52 pages, by Chas. A. S. Temple.

The following from Rev. H. H. Hinman shows his estimate of its contents:

"I have read with great interest 'Pagan Counterfeits in the Christian Church' by Chas. A. S. Temple. I regard the subject discussed as important, and its presentation both able and timely. There is a most manifest drift in all our Protestant denominations towards unauthorised ritualism and the substitution of human inventions in place of the simplicity of the Gospel, as given by Christ and his apostles. In calling attention to this tidal wave of formalism, the author has conferred a lasting benefit on the church of Protestantism."

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

The Congress of American Nations, to meet in Washington this week, is regarded by those best acquainted with South American affairs as the most important international event on this continent of recent years. It is Secretary Blaine's project, and he has given long and earnest attention to it.

The chief of the Bureau of Statistics reports that the total number of immigrants arrived at the ports of the United States from the principal countries (except from the Dominion of Canada and Mexico) during the eight months ended Aug. 31, 1889, was 300,564, against 392,942 during the same period last year.

Work has been commenced on the much-talked of Lake Street Elevated Railroad. The first pick was stuck into the pavement just west of Clinton street. The first work on the new road is the digging of the holes for the foundation for the pillars which are to support the iron-work.

Judge Horton's charge to the grand jury against gambling and the smoke nuisance last week created a sensation in our smoky city. An organized effort is being made by a number of ladies to carry into effect Judge Horton's suggestion regarding gambling. Mrs. Mary Van Osdel caused the arrest of John R. Morris, and charged him with violating the State law. A general raid upon all the gamblers is contemplated, and that the prosecution will be conducted under the statutes instead of the municipal ordinances. A great many persons have expressed themselves as willing to appear as witnesses.

Near Bucattuna, Miss., early Wednesday morning, a Mobile and Ohio mail and passenger train was stopped by three bandits, who robbed the express and mail cars, getting about $3,000 in money and a number of registered packages. The robbers overlooked $70,000 of government funds en route for Florida.

Monday evening a tornado swept over Pablo Beach, Fla., wrecking Murray Hall, a big hotel, and other structures. A horse and wagon were carried 200 feet, and a freight car was blown sixty feet. Pieces of wood were driven through the two-inch flooring of the railroad station, and a 13-year old boy was killed. Reports from various localities in Florida indicate that the storm was a disastrous one to property, although no further loss of life is reported. At West Jacksonville three or four houses were blown down and two churches wrenched from their foundations. Fallen trees were encountered everywhere, many of the monster moss-hung oaks which have withstood the storms of a hundred years being prostrated.

The express which left Albany at ten o'clock Friday night, met with a bad accident near Palatine Bridge, N. Y. The train was in two sections. The first section broke down and stopped for repairs. The rear brakeman was sent back to signal the second section, but for some reason failed to perform his duty and the second section crashed into the rear car. The first section was made up of baggage, mail, express, three passenger cars packed with people, a Wagner sleeper and several private cars. The crash was terrific. Five persons were killed and many injured. Several prominent railway officials were among those who barely escaped.

THE BOSTON MEETING will be held in Tremont Temple, Dec. 11 and 12; so says a dispatch from Secretary Stoddard.

Dr. Lorimer proclaims Masonry the great friend of the working man. Why, then, did not this celebrated divine admonish the Knight Templar members of his church, and especially the flatulent Gassette, "Commandant of the lines" in 1880, and not let them chase off to Washington on the Sabbath day, thus keeping hundreds of workmen at their tasks all through the day of rest? We fear the Grand Orator's Masonry is only good to talk about.

The Conference at the Moody church in this city, introducing the Bible Institute of the Chicago Evangelization Society, closed on the Sabbath, and the regular work of the year began Monday. This has been on the whole a remarkable series of meetings. A vast audience gathered evening after evening, crowding the great auditorium to the doors, and at times filling the chapel below for an overflow meeting. Among the more remarkable of the addresses were those of Rev. Dr. Gibson, of London, and of Dr. A. T. Pierson, of the Missionary Review. The latter will continue to lecture morning and evening during five days of every week during the present month. He will be succeeded by some other lecturer.

Tuesday of last week was a historical day for our great Northwest. The voters of North and South Dakota, Montana and Washington decided that day to accept their several State constitutions, and elected State officers and Congressional representatives. Party questions were of little moment beside the settlement of the liquor question in the two Dakotas. In the South State prohibition was guaranteed by the action of the farmers' organizations and the Republican convention, and was adopted by some 10,000 majority. The devil raised a side issue on the location of the capital, over which he made more noise than all others combined. In the North State the saloon and high license parties hoped for a triumph. Reports were conflicting until Friday morning, when news came that prohibition was adopted by a safe majority. The result was a great surprise to the saloon party. The day when both these new States came into the Union under the white banner of Prohibition was a glorious one for the nation.

Saturday following the Grand Lodge performances, the Knight Templar Masons had their turn in Chicago. As they started for their conclave in Washington they made as much ado as if they were going to a foreign war. There are few manufactured articles so well made up as your genuine Knight Templar in full feather. He is as full of oaths as a rag doll is of sawdust. His accoutrements are of the best quality of patent leather, broadcloth, glass brilliants, feathers and pewter run into a scabbard. But the principal thing about him is his devotion to the Christian religion,—that is, if we accept Mr. Lorimer and other doctors of the lodge, this is the very essence of Knight Templarism. But do people believe them? Queer, is it not? But for a fact they don't. See them putting off to travel all day on the Sabbath. Was there a soul in Chicago who thought it out of character? Not one. That was all right for Knight Templar and other Freemasons (et id omne genus). Is any one surprised at the press reports of their turning Washington into a Vanity Fair, a harlequin show? Not at all. All expect it of them. The Sabbath was not made for that sort in the same sense it was for the rest of mankind. But let Dr. Goodwin's church plan a Sunday picnic, or Moody's church start an excursion on that day—Ah! Some of the Christian Endeavor people of Nebraska planned to start on a Sabbath afternoon for their national meeting. Were not the Omaha papers horrified at the desecration?

Many good men in Chicago were astounded and indignant last Wednesday at Mayor Cregier for reopening the saloons he closed a few days before. They do not understand "his honor;" they are ignorant of the school in which his moral nature has taken shape. They should have seen him when waiting upon the Grand Lodge, and marked how eager his step, how cordial his tone, how enuine his enthusiasm. Now so long as Masonic morality supplies the principles of his action, our excellent non-Masonic citizens are asking an inconsistency of Mr. Cregier. The relations of the saloon and the lodge do not allow any real antagonism. They are in a sense necessary to each other. The mayor will never of his own will interfere with the saloons. No matter what he has sworn to do about the enforcement of the laws. He swore hundreds of times before that in the lodge, and the majority of these all-sorts of oaths he has taken is on the side of the saloon. The Cronin trial is instructing some of our slow-discerning people that lodge oaths, illegal and false and blasphemous as they are, count for something when once fixed in the obscured convictions of the lodge member. What is more, the real owners of the saloons are the big brewers, and they are generally Freemasons, while their bar-keepers are studious attendants upon the ministrations of the priest.

Adjutant General Vance was sent by Gov. Fifer of Illinois to the Spring Valley coal mines to examine carefully into the reports of great destitution and starvation circulated by politicians of the Frank Lawler class, and presented to the Governor himself in a memorial signed by many citizens of the district. The report of Mr. Vance states that after a careful examination the statements of the destitute condition of the people are greatly exaggerated. The memorial was signed by many who confessed their knowledge of this fact, but for fear of a lodge boycott their names went on. He does not believe there are more than 250 idle miners in the place; and mentions these important facts respecting the saloon influence: "There is a growing sentiment there that men who will live upon the charity of a generous public rather than to work even at wages they deem inadequate for their own support are unworthy of the sympathy bestowed upon them. From the best information I can obtain and from personal observation I do not believe the population of Spring Valley will exceed 2,500 persons at this time. There is a general paralyzation of all business interests and trades, except those dealing in luxuries. Nineteen licensed saloons are doing business at this time, and are apparently well patronized, notwithstanding the depression in business generally." This is sufficient explanation of the difficulties experienced by miners. They cannot support saloons, lodges and families also. These wives and children must not suffer, but it is not a wise charity that sustains these men in vicious idleness.

THE TEMPERANCE BANNER.

BY VICTORIA ALEXANDRIA BUCK.

Unfurl the Temperance banner!
With red-embazoned cross;
The warriors who that flag uprear
Shall never suffer loss.
What matter though the way be dark
And stained with tears and blood?
Press on, and keep thy flag in view,
The oriflamme of God!

Unfurl, unfurl thy banner!
Behold, the skies are bright,
The hand of God swings with the gate
Where dawns the morning's light;
The stars grow pale, and the red'ning sky
Arches the coming day,
The long-roll beats, and the night is gone
Like a dream that's passed away.

Go up, go up with Jesus!
Our Captain leads the way;
Follow your Leader, and be led
To certain victory.
Our blood-red flag is brighter now,
Green is the springing sod,
And bright the crowns upon our brow
On the upland plains of God.

ASIA'S CALL.

BY REV. W. J. GLADWIN.

Here is a little "sum" that ought to startle God's people into prayer and work. See the great fields open before the faith and zeal of Christians:

Population of Europe.....	301,600,000
" Africa.....	208,300,000
" America.....	84,542,000
" Australia, etc.....	4,338,000
Total.....	598,780,000
Population of Asia.....	798,220,000

Asia's excess over all the rest of the world... 204,440,000

These figures may not be the latest, but the proportion remains the same. Think of it,—put all the rest of the world together as fields for Christian work, and Asia is greater by 200 million souls! Yet what have we in all Asia of evangelical Christian work? A few hundred mission aries in India, ditto in China, ditto in Japan, etc.

Think of India alone,—four times the population of the United States, on one-fourth the land space, and I suppose not one-fiftieth the number of ministers!

"Dry figures," do you say? Well brother, sister, if you were as near to Gethsemane Jesus as he longs to have you, you would wet those figures with your tear.

Now take some calculations nearer home. About the time I went to India, eighteen years ago, Bishop Simpson of the M. E. church stated that the annual conferences of his church turned away in one year two thousand candidates for the ministry, not having appointments for them. What is the matter? Have those men mistaken their calling, or has the church mistaken hers? Suppose half of those candidates have been mistaken and are not called to the ministry. The thousand are called, but neither they nor their church hear God's call aright. "All the world . . . to every creature," they do not hear.

And the other churches are equally deaf to God's great call to save the world.

One thousand missionaries ought to go from Christian America every year to foreign lands. "But ye would not!"

Now something still nearer home. I have written several letters to this paper urging India's claims. What has been the effect upon the thousands of orthodox readers? Some three or four have written me in reply. Thank God for the prospect of getting one or two workers from your ranks, but I pity you who are neglecting your duty in this matter. "Ye are not your own." "The silver and the gold are the Lord's." "Ye have robbed me, even this whole nation."

Bless the Lord, I saw a young woman in Illinois who says that the cries of the heathen of Africa are ringing in her heart, and she is devoting her life to their salvation.

Any one who has ears to hear the cry of Asia's millions and God's call to go or give, may be free to write me, unless you have better plans.

By all means obey God. Do something. Go work to-day.

VACATION JOTTINGS.

BY J. F. AVERY, PASTOR MARINERS' TEMPLE, N. Y.

Early in the month of August we started via Boston and Yarmouth for a season of rest in the quietude and cool of the old homestead in Halifax, Nova Scotia. The rest and change has been a mental, physical and spiritual benefit. We hope very shortly the freshness will be manifest in our endeavors. We plan to attempt great things for God, nevertheless dare not have confidence in the flesh, knowing that the source of true strength and success lies beyond the human. It can only be obtained and used by the faith and virtue which comes from personal touch with "I Am that I Am."

The past month has been one of restful and varied experiences. It was sweet and refreshing to be met with so many loving salutations, and to note many evidences that the labor of the past was not forgotten, but bringing forth fruit.

But time works changes, in plans, prospects and places. The garden at "Mizpah Cottage" seemed to look at us reproachfully. The weeds were rank and many, and in the struggle for the mastery had the decided supremacy. Many a cherished tree and plant through winters cold and other causes was either sick or in a decline.

We could but muse as we looked around and sometimes grappled with the intruders. How much does depend upon spiritual endeavor, in the life and prosperity of God's garden, the church. We not only want to sow good seed, but also to watch, lest while we sleep the enemy sows tares. Strange, the same soil, sunshine and rain can be vitalized for good or evil fruit! Stranger that men should stand idle when the Lord's vineyard and its fruitage is so reasonably to let, and the results and harvest are so certain and eternally enriching to those who go to work; especially so since the King's Son has promised to all who go, "Lo, I am with you always;" "my grace is sufficient for you," "for all power in heaven and in earth is given unto me." Evidently the woman with the alabaster box did not deserve criticism. The waste of time and endeavor is not Christward. Love so amazing, so divine, as manifested by Jesus, demands all of the fullest and longest Christian life. But too oft the multitude feed to the full; and did not Jesus have special care, lest even the fragments would not be gathered to give the giver. Men are prodigal. Time runs waste, unmeasured for the world and pleasure. But it is dealt out with a niggard hand in the service of Him who alone hath power to lengthen and give continuance, and who alone can say, The hour is fully come; cut it down; opportunity is past; probation ends.

On what a brittle thread hangs everlasting things! Heaven forever is the place and reward of faithful toilers, who, not self-measured, have been good servants in the little things and endeavors of Christ's vineyard. But the sluggard, the do-nothings, shall dwell with the everlasting burnings, and their only music in the place of lost opportunities will be the crackling of the thorns and briars which grew through their indolence and neglect.

REMINISCENCES OF ABOLITION DAYS.

[DEAR EDITOR:—I think the following well written article will be read with interest by your readers, especially by the old Abolition veterans who still survive, and particularly in New York and New England, where Judge Pratt, Frederick Douglass, and the "Quaker," Joseph C. Hathaway, were so well known and still remembered. Yours truly,

GEO. W. CLARK.]

In the early settlement of Steuben county, N. Y., there came a Colonel (or Judge) Pratt, and located a whole township; with a double purpose, no doubt, of increasing the bulk of his own exchequer and promoting the cause of religion and education as well. This man was a Presbyterian, and it may not be a great stretch of the imagination to assume that he was what has been called, either facetiously or in derision, a "blue light." Whatever his motive, or idiosyncrasy, he inaugurated a good work. He would sell his land only to actual settlers of his own creed, compelling the purchasers to sign an ironclad contract to contribute in proportion to the extent of their possessions to the support of schools and a church. There were zealous religionists in those days, and enough of them to rapidly bring together a straightlaced, orderly community of no mean proportions.

In pursuance of the intent of the settlement a church was forthwith established, a pastor installed, and the machinery of religion, which was distinctively Puritan, set in motion. Among some of the earlier incumbents of the pastorate was Rev. Beriah Hotchkiss, who watched at the gate of that sanctuary for many years, until age and ministrations to a large and exacting membership were no longer consistent with each other. Younger blood was brought into requisition, but the once Reverend, who had by that time earned the title of "Father Hotchkiss," did not leave the place. . . . The church and academy, which had been established early in the settlement of the town, was a nucleus that grew into a hamlet that was a model of intelligence and morality. Very naturally the village was called Prattsburg, after its founder, and the spirit of Puritanism that animated the projector of the colony pervaded the people for many years. "Father Hotchkiss" stood as a faithful sentinel to bring innovators to a halt. Orthodoxy in religion and conservatism in politics he felt to be especially in his keeping. Rigid interpretations of Calvinism were being toned down, and naughty anti-slavery agitators got in upon his domain. There was no rest for the sole of his foot. Scarcely had he wiped the perspiration from his brow that some "brawling Abolitionist" had worried him into, when Fred Douglass was announced to speak in the Baptist church. Into this church he would hardly have carried his hoary locks, only the duty of quelling Douglass impelled him.

The audience was an appreciative one and large. Fred had got nicely warmed up and was laying about him right and left, as only a man of his talent and experience in slavery could do, when the old man arose in his place and contradicted in a speech of full fifteen minutes, and perhaps much more. The while Douglass kept his feet, smiling benignantly upon his aged opposer. When he was permitted again to speak, he good naturedly took up one by one the objections that had been urged, and so completely demolished the old man's superstructure that his own identity seemed to totter with it. Then most remarkable to observe, Douglass took up his discourse exactly where he was broken off and proceeded with it as though there had been no interruption.

You would suppose such an experience would do a man for a lifetime, but not so. In the course of events subsequently that noble man, J. C. Hathaway, was advertised to speak in the same church. This time Father Hotchkiss hit upon new tactics. He appeared in the audience as before, but before "Friend" Hathaway commenced his speech he gave warning to the officials of the church of the danger of allowing a heretic to occupy the platform of a place so sacred, and fortified his position in a speech of considerable length. He assumed that well-known exemplary "Friend" was a member of the heretical wing of the Quaker family. In that attitude he manifested "malice aforethought," or unpardonable ignorance,—but never mind, he got his pay right "then and there." There was no levity about Joseph C. Hathaway, nor did he betray acidity in the defense of the "meeting" to which he belonged. In rotation he took in hand some of the cardinal doctrines of the Presbyterian church, and without detracting in the least their austerities or virtue, he made them appear tame in contrast with the Scripture interpretations and exemplifications of the orthodox Quakers. It was a masterly effort, and must of necessity have been impromptu, as was that of Fred Douglass as well. The old man's annihilation was complete, and the audience seemed to bestow little or no pity. For myself, I knew his punishment was just, yet I could not help commiserating his forlorn condition.

In spite of his shortcomings on the question of slavery, I loved Father Hotchkiss. We were good friends,—I might say very good; for on the subject of temperance "a fellow feeling made us wondrous kind." I remember very well many years before a gray hair dare peep from under my hat, his ample locks and flowing beard were white as drifted snow. It was then that he, a very old man, and I little more than a youth, were associated as president and vice-president of a local temperance organization to prosecute liquor sellers in our town. Our counsel, we had reason to fear, would purposely prove inadequate. My reverend partner understood the law of the case as well or better than our "legal luminary," and it was amusing to see him at the trial prompt the lawyer and hold him to his work. Could I help but love him! I say no, notwithstanding his delinquency on a matter that to me appeared almost vital.

CHARLES WHEELER.

TESTIMONY OF THE NEW ENGLAND FATHERS.

The Boston Evening Traveler of Monday, Sept. 30th, reports the brief but interesting speech of our editor before the ministers that day in these words:

At the meeting of the Congregational ministers this forenoon, Rev. Dr. Blanchard, ex-president of Wheaton College, Ill., and editor of the Christian Cynosure, Chicago, spoke as follows:

RESPECTED BRETHREN IN CHRIST.—Three brethren had been appointed to speak to you this morning, but the chairman of your committee has kindly given me five minutes, and I have put a brief statement of facts and principles in writing. Twenty-two years ago the Andover faculty, with the exception of one who was absent, signed a request to Israel P. Warren, the secretary of the Boston Tract Society, asking for the issue of a tract dissuading church members from joining secret societies. Dr. Park, then professor of theology, in signing the paper, said: "Secret societies are reviving and spreading everywhere and damaging everything good." As Prof. Phelps signed the paper he reached out his hand, and, with a warm grasp, said: "Doctor, I thank God that you have taken up this subject." Thirty years before this Dr. Woods, Prof. Stuart and Dr. Skinner, then of the Andover faculty, had petitioned the Legislature to withdraw their charters and suppress Masonic lodges in Massachusetts.

I took that Andover paper to the ministers' meeting here in the lecture room of the Old South Church; and the ministers present, with one or two exceptions, voted their approbation of the paper. Dr. Nehemiah Adams of Essex Street Church, and Dr. G. W. Blagden, senior pastor of the Old South, spoke warmly in favor of the object of the paper, which was to divorce Congregational churches from secret societies. Dr. Blagden said: "Unless we do something to save our churches from the invasion of these secret lodges, they will creep in, and by and by split our churches open like mackerels, on the back."

These facts, which occurred twenty-two years ago, "were not done in a corner," but here in Boston, and at Andover. And the secret lodges of the United States marked them.

The lodge rulers have distrusted, dreaded and hated Congregational churches ever since; for Drs. Storrs of Braintree, Emmons and his son-in-law, the beloved Dr. Ide of Medway, the gentle and loving Dr. Tarbox, and, indeed, the sound clergy of New England generally, condemned the lodge as anti-Christ. And while churches in and around Boston excluded adhering Masons from fellowship, the Legislature of Massachusetts in 1834 enacted a law prohibiting and punishing the administration or taking of Masonic oaths. And Daniel Webster, in a public letter, said of that statute: "I heartily approve of the law, lately enacted by the State of which I am a citizen, abolishing all such oaths and obligations." And Edward Everett, Josiah Quincy, John Quincy Adams, and every considerable Northern statesman at that time, held and uttered similar views of the Masonic lodge.

Nor were these views the result of Anti-masonic political excitement in 1828-32.

Dr. Richard Storrs of Braintree, when over eighty years old, said to me: "My Grandfather Williston of East Haven used to say, 'A Freemason is hand-in-hand with the devil.' And that sentiment was common with the New England clergy in my grandfather's day." Dr. Hopkins of Newport uttered similar views, which are since published. And Charles Francis Adams, in his preface to his father's volume, seventeen years after Anti-masonry had gone out of politics, wrote of the lodge, "A more perfect agent for devising and executing conspiracies against church and state could scarcely have been conceived." For these and a host of like reasons, the lodge-leaders have given their profound attention to the Congregational churches, and it is time we were "not ignorant of their devices."

The object of this brief paper is to advertise and induce every Congregational pastor to attend the conference of Churches and Christians, to meet in Boston in December next, for the full and thorough discussion of the relation of the secret lodge system to the cause of Christ and of civil government.

And so, thanking you and your committee for your courtesy, I only add, that if you can, another week, allow me about the time occupied by Dr. Pierson's earnest and able address, to explain the mutual relations of Freemasonry and Romanism, I will come down from the Worcester Congregational Council and fill the appointment.

ROMAN CATHOLIC CONSISTENCY.

The world has in the last few months been told of the remarkable anti-slavery zeal of a distinguished Roman Catholic ecclesiastic of Africa. The European nations have been appealed to for help by this zealot. The Pope has given him permission to raise a body of troops to assist in the suppression of the horrible African slave trade. We wonder if the old man in Rome dreams that the world has forgotten his church's history. This little African tamasha is sham from top to bottom. There is not now nor has there ever been a drop of sympathy for poor oppressed slaves in any land in Romanism.

Roman Catholicism did its utmost to uphold slavery in the United States, and was the worst foe Abraham Lincoln, the great emancipator of American slaves, had. Romanism hoped for gains in the existence of slavery, and the Pope was the only European potentate who dared to be brazen-faced enough to recognize Jeff Davis, and bless him. The American Negro has not forgotten the kindness of Rome, and comparatively few of them have been won to Catholicism. Only the other day the first American Negro priest was consecrated.

This pretentious interest in the poor African slave is mere pretence, a sham, a Jesuitical and political scheme for a share of the spoils in Africa.

The worst foes missionaries of all the English societies have in Africa, are the lying priests, who go far and near, and incite the people against them, telling them the missionaries were simply come to destroy the slave trade, which is the dearly prized trade of many native princes.

Again, who has not heard of the unswerving antipathy of Roman Catholicism to secret societies.

The last few years has clearly shown that the great bulk of the membership of Irish and European secret societies are Roman Catholics.

There is a string of more than a score of secret societies that curse America, England and Germany, who are almost solidly Catholic. Who does not know priests abound in all these societies?

A Dr. Cronin, of Chicago, has lately been murdered by the members of the Clan-na-Gael of which he was a member, as boldly as Morgan was killed by the Freemasons fifty years ago.

Investigations more and more identify these secret societies, with their murderous extra-judicial, illegitimate and devilish oaths, with the Roman Catholic church, under the lead of Catholic priests, whose names abound in all these societies. The Roman Catholic church opposes only those secret societies it cannot control. Her opposition to Masonry is all hypocrisy. We know influential Catholics in India who are "high Masons."

Rome opposes intemperance, and supplies nine-tenths of all the disreputable liquor-sellers in the world.

Rome condemns adultery and supplies the bulk of prostitutes in Europe, America, and India, and regularly absolves the lot of them for a share in the profits. Rome prohibits illegitimate marriages, but for money will give a dispensation for anything.

Rome! the baptized enemy of all righteousness. —India Watchman.

ROMANISM IN AMERICA.

Miss M. F. Cusack, better known as the "Nun of Kenmare," has recently given voice to some strong utterances on the subject of Romanism in America. Our Day published a full report of a recent parlor meeting in Boston, at which Miss Cusack spoke. She said:

"I have been connected with the Catholic schools of Ireland for thirty years. The schools are parochial schools. No one need go much beyond New York, certainly not far beyond Boston, to obtain evidence as to what parochial schools are. The Irish Catholic church is not an educating church. The Roman Catholic church educates only where she cannot help educating. I took great pains to ascertain the state of education in France under the Catholic church, and found it deplorable. In Ireland the misfortune is, and it will be the misfortune in this country, that the money raised for parochial schools all goes into the priests' hands. It amounts to an enormous annual sum. You may imagine what power that gives them. The teachers are paid by the priests."

She also expressed herself as of the belief that if Parnell succeeded in his campaign Ireland would be a Protestant nation in ten years' time. A great deal of Irish Catholicism is due to the intense national hatred of England. About eighty-five per cent of the schools of Ireland are parochial schools, and consequently in the hands of priests. In the north of Ireland a few are controlled by the Presbyterians. The inspectors of the national schools are completely under the control of the priests, who, by their influence, can ensure an inspector's dismissal or promotion. The teachers simply teach the children the words of the catechism with very little explanation. The consequence is that they have very little religion except of a mechanical sort.

"Let the clerical party cease to talk of godless Protestant public schools; it is their schools that are godless. I could give you a history of Irish Roman Catholic schools and colleges which would surprise you. The children are not allowed to be taught the Bible or even historical religion. The sisters must either practice gross deceit and teach all the children the Roman Catholic religion, or teach them nothing. I met a physician in Baltimore, one of the best; he said he had been to the Jesuit Fathers' College, and that he never heard a word of religion or prayer. They went to mass occasionally, but might as well have been in any heathen country for all the religion they got. It is the same with the girls. Protestant ladies are very fond of sending their daughters to the Sacred Heart Convent. I think if they knew some of the miserable results of that education, they never would do it. . . . If you look into New York society, you will find how many young and lovely girls have gone to ruin, and how many of them were educated in the Convent of the Sacred Heart. I met one wrecked soul who wore the scapular, and had her beads, and her face was veiled. Of course no system is perfect; but I say that a system which makes such profession, and which brings forth such deplorable results, should not be tolerated for one moment. It was only a few days ago that the New York World had the report of a priest who represented the children who came to him as destitute, depraved, degraded, vicious, half-savage; and whose children were they? The children of Roman Catholic parents. The Romish church has had the education of New York, Ireland, France and Italy, practically, for twenty years; but of the police cases reported in the New York World every other name is Irish; and the majority of them must be Roman Catholics."

At one time Miss Cusack found herself compelled to give up a school of which she had charge, as she discovered that her superiors expected her to sanction, at least by her silence, matters which she knew to be wrong. This was one of the principal causes of her leaving the church. The Irish law expressly forbids any images in the national schools, yet one of the Virgin Mary is almost universally to be found in them. Whenever the inspectors made their semi-occasional visits, the sisters generally were apprised, and the images were safely locked up out of sight.

As to the charmed pictures and sacred relics sold by the priests, the magic is supposed to be in the spiritual blessing. In form, it is forbidden by the Catholic church to sell them, because the Protestants will pick up such matters, as in the case of indulgences. Indulgences are sold to-day. The Duke of Aosta obtained an indulgence giving him leave to commit a certain sin for two hundred thousand dollars. She is collecting Roman Catholic papers on all these points, so that Protestants may not have her word for it only, but that of Roman Catholics.

The scapular is taught daily as much as the catechism. The Roman Catholic teaching on the devotion of the scapular was supposed to have been revealed in the thirteenth century to St. Simon Stock. The revelation was that whoever wore in honor of the Blessed Virgin a small square piece of cloth, having two strings attached to it and passing around the neck, would go to heaven. The Blessed Virgin would pass into purgatory, and take to heaven, the Saturday after they died, all wearers of the scapular. Pope after pope has given his sanction to that teaching. And yet masses are said for the souls of these wearers of the scapular. Pigott, that unfortunate suicide, was found with a scapular on when he died. If the Pope is infallible, this suicide is now rejoicing in heaven.

"If one looks at the crucifixes and crosses and paintings, it might be said that the Catholic church intends to keep the death of Christ before the people in one way, but not in another. It may be a temptation of the evil one that the Blessed Virgin is put in such prominence everywhere. I have here the statement of Cardinal Gibbons as to the doctrine of salvation in the Roman Catholic church. One question is, 'Can any one be saved out of the Roman Catholic church?' Out of the Roman Catholic church no one can be saved; because Jesus Christ never gave, nor will he ever give, any other religion for the salvation of all men."

America is undoubtedly the country where the Roman Catholic church is strongest to-day. In England it is kept down; in Ireland it is tottering; in France it is weakening; in Italy it is in ruins. Yet the Pope still wields a vast amount of temporal power. If he were on an island in the sea alone, he would be considered sovereign of the world by his adherents just as much as he is now.

"The Jesuits are hated by a considerable majority of the bishops. An Episcopal clergyman in Utica told me that the Jesuits are behind the ritualistic movement, as was publicly stated in England in connection with the putting up of the reredos in St. Paul's. I have no personal knowledge of anything of that kind, and for myself do not think it is the fact. Protestants generally have a rather wrong idea of Jesuits. They educate youth at their colleges. The fathers exert themselves to curry favor with their pupils and do not care much to make them Roman Catholics; they can use them better as they are."

Miss Cusack considers the proposed Catholic University at Washington as a menace to the future peace of America. The building will make a great impression on the public mind, and will be counted as an evidence of the learning and prosperity of the papists. The American people are too honest to contend successfully with the Catholic church policy. It is impossible for an honest man to meet a rogue and be on fair terms. The amount of money the priests have is enormous. In New York they are getting two dollars for every child they educate. Then there is a fear in the heart of every Roman Catholic that there is just a chance that the church's assertion of infallibility is true. Therefore even educated men will still support the church. "A doctor who had attended one of my institutions had some trouble with a priest, and was asked what he should do. He said, 'What can we do? We must toady to the priests.' And I never forgot the words." —N. Y. Witness.

THEY MADE THE MOST OF IT.

THE GRAND LODGE OF ILLINOIS MASONS PASSES ITS FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARY.

The Chicago Times opens its report of this Masonic event with:

"Say, Cull, look were de fat bloke's shirt is," shouted a little street arab to his companion yesterday morning.

"They were in the doorway of Central Music Hall. Coming down-stairs was a portly member of the Grand Lodge who had forgotten to divest himself of a prominent part or his regalia when he left the hall. He got no farther than the street when he noticed the attraction."

The proceedings of the lodge meeting, after the lean men had twisted and the fat men had squeezed through the narrow opening by the Grand Tyler, are only given to the public by the appointed agents of the lodge itself. Nothing is known which they wish concealed.

Mayor Cregier was ready with a congratulatory speech which was two-thirds self-congratulatory, for he welcomed them as "mayor," and on his way to be governor or Senator: for no one who knows the man can suppose that he is satisfied with less than the utmost that politics and lodgery can give him.

J. C. Smith, the Grand Master, has just completed the second term of his office. He is also a leading spirit among the Odd-fellows. These lodges have lifted him into some prominence in politics which it is impossible to see how he could have otherwise attained. He has been State treasurer, with a large defalcation, said to have been stolen; and also Lieutenant-Governor. He coveted the highest office, but his lack of ability to carry on a canvass outside of lodge influences was too conspicuous. Mr. Smith read his annual report, showing an increase of 705 members in the order, which numbers 41,479 in the State. The number of initiations is not printed, so that it can be known how many have left the lodge during the year; but it is acknowledged that the number of lodges is 681, ten less than at last report. In 1884 there were 44,007 Masons reported in Illinois, with 2,233 initiated into the third degree. If there were 2,000 persons made Master Masons the past year, then the members who have seceded number some 1,000, making due allowance for deaths and expulsions. John M. Pearson of Godfrey, Ill., was chosen Grand Master, he standing next in succession.

To appropriately commemorate their semi-centennial the lodge this year attempted a street parade, which has been for many years left out of their program. The Knight Templars tramped in 1880, but the Grand Lodge has not since the farce over the corner-stone of the Chicago post-office, several years before. To give further publicity to their white aprons a stone-laying was also hunted up. There was no public building with a corner-stone for a prey; but the Auditorium building, which is one of the finest in the city, had never been blessed by any lodge, little or big. President Cleveland was invited to lay the corner-stone during his visit in 1887, but the labor lodges threatened all manner of political revenge if he should. For the magnificent structure has gone up from foundation to turret, hundreds of feet above the street, without the aid of any secret labor union. Messrs. Adler and Sullivan, the architects, have demonstrated grandly the fact that American independence of the foreign lodge system yet exists. At several times during the construction of the building the secret societies have broken out in impotent rage at their defeat. Mr. Peck, who conceived the plan of so noble and costly a structure and has carried it out with a liberal hand, is president of the stock company to which it belongs. He is a young Chicagoan, but not a Freemason. The exterior of the building is complete, and the great hall and hotel are being rapidly finished. President Harrison was nominated in the hall last year and the west wing is already occupied by business firms.

To leave its mark upon such a building was a distinction we cannot blame any society for coveting; and Mr. Smith need not have been so extremely careful to repudiate any idea that the honor was sought for by Masons. The history and character of the order is against him. If Masons were not anxious to crown their anniversary with the cope-stone performance, who would be, pray tell? And if the proprietors of the building had desired the ceremony, there were plenty of Masons living when the building was finished, last May, to do it.

The description of the parade, given in serio-comic vein in the Daily News, we take the liberty to repeat:

The members all had on their Sunday clothes, black coat, vest and trousers, white-gauntleted gloves, and black hats with tumultuous cascades of white ostrich feathers shooting down behind.

Each and every one had a long shiny sword, which, as he stood at parade rest, he shifted around until he got it so it would flash the sunlight into the eyes of the gaping spectators across the street. They stood in a lonesome manner along the south side of Washington street, backed up by a beautiful display of pig-weed and rusty tin cans in Dearborn square behind them. Presently along came other commanderies, each with its black and white banner, and every man carrying the same kind of a shiny sword. What kind of metal those ferocious-looking weapons were made of was left to be inferred from the sequel of a little contretemps which soon occurred. A man with a miscellaneous assortment of hardware on his back was trying to ride horseback, and was doing pretty well at it until a column of knights came along. Then the animal shied, and the first thing anybody knew over it went kerwhallop, and the rider fell with his sword under him. Luckily he wasn't hurt a bit, but his sword was as crooked as a ram's horn. He took it and bent it into shape again as easily as if it had been one of those leads that the girls use in curling their hair.

There was more than a little riding around on the part of gentlemen whose long side-whiskers floated in the wind, and whose white aprons suggested a carelessness in dressing. They would pull up their horses with a "Whoa! Dolly!" and then fall to talking about the weather. Men with blue silk aprons, and embroidered velvet collars about their necks, would jam down a cigarette hat on their heads, grip their teeth on a cold cigar, which had burned out like a sugar scoop, and take on as if they thought they'd miss the train if they didn't hurry, and when they'd get where they wanted to go, instead of doing something important—as a spectator had a right to think they would—they'd grab a man by the hand and say, "Hello, Dick! when ja get in?" and send tobacco juice flying over the man's shoulder in the most fraternal manner possible.

Along about 11:30 o'clock, however, these gentlemen quit all that foolishness, for the drum-major shifted his cud of tobacco, and said, "Well, boys, let her go," and they did. The drums went "terry bang tat-tat, terry bang tat-tat, rattle-tat, rattle-tat, bang tat-tat," and every time the bass-drummer gave his drum a thump it opened the pores of a man's skin and made his heart stop.

The observed of all was the man who carried something on a tray by a string around his neck. [A Bible.] "Collabuttons-fi-cent a doz," said the small boy, and the gentleman grinned and wiggled his hands on each side of his head as if he knew something.

Down at the Auditorium a crowd of people had gathered to be ordered around and pushed back by policemen, waiting, while the procession walked around town, alongside the car tracks, while the bands played all the pretty tunes that circuses delight in. On the south side of the building was a stand draped with the American flag and bearing a desk and a pine box, on which was a very finely-dressed stone about as big as a raisin box. This was the ritual stone. The real cope-stone was laid last May.

Congress street was packed full of people before the ceremonies began. Grand Marshal Fitz-Simons commanded silence in the name of the Most Worshipful Grand Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons. Just before he did that John O'Neil had poured oil, wine and wheat into silver vessels and tossed the bottles out into the crowd. Then the quartette started up with the wrong ode. It was to have been an anthem, but the singers got off on the final ode, which was all about the stone. The congregated Masons started in on the second verse, but had to be called to order by "Steady there! Don't sing." Then the band rendered one of the most befrilled versions of the tune of "America" ever heard. Then Grand Master Gen. Smith read the address prescribed in the ritual.

The Grand Master gave Deputy Grand Master John M. Pearson a small square and he tried the stone and said it was square. Then Senior Grand Warden Crawford said it was level, and the Junior Grand Warden declared that it was plumb. They all said the workmen had performed their duty. Then the Grand Master told the architect that the work was accepted. Being presented with the element of corn, he poured some wheat on the stone. Some of the kernels fell down on the reporters and flew behind their collars. Then the Grand Master turned up a silver goblet of wine and emptied about a spoonful of the liquid upon the stone. After that oil was poured on and the Grand Master said: "May corn, wine and oil and all the necessities of life abound among all men throughout the world. May the blessing of Almighty God be upon this building, and may the structure here erected long remain."

The ceremony over the stone included the reading of a prayer by the notorious Dr. Thomas, one or two speeches by Grand Master Smith, another by Mayor Cregier, and the usual heathen libation of corn, wine and oil.

"Masonry seeks for no public honors," said Mr. Smith. "It makes no request to be engaged in any important event, no matter how great the undertaking, but modestly reserving itself, waiting as it were, or ready to comply with any reasonable request relative to public buildings."

This we understand to be spoken Masonically; for it is notorious that the lodge has an eye on every opportunity of the kind. "Masonry" may be very meek and modest, but Freemasons, as such, are never at a loss to advertise the lodge.

Later in the day about a thousand Masons with a score of ladies and some outsiders met in one of the armories to hear the lodge pet, Dr. G. C. Lorimer, "Sir Knight and Grand Orator." Preparations were made to receive the public by thousands, but the public preferred to stay at home. The speech was after the speaker's well-known style, the style of a man "devoured of a personal ambition," who owes most of his reputation to lodge eulogy. He began with a fulsome laudation of Stephen A. Douglas, the first "Grand Orator," whom he called a "paragon of genius," and classed him with Webster, Blaine and Clay. Our best histories of his time will hardly sustain Mr. Lorimer's eulogium. Much less will they justify his notice of General Shields, who tried to fight a duel with Abraham Lincoln. As we expected him to do, the orator paid his respects to the opponents of Masonry, and his confession of the unity of secret societies, and fruitless effort to turn aside the odium of the Clan-na-Gael from Masonry, we quote:

"I shall not attempt to defend Masonry from the assaults of its enemies. It is surely enough to say that the worthy men I have named were members of the order, and with them multitudes of others, living and dead, their equals in merit, and that they assuredly would never have given their support to an institution whose aims or methods were base and dishonorable. Yet I may be permitted to observe, and it is only fair that I should state, that the recent efforts made in some quarters to prejudice the public mind against Masonry by more than insinuating a resemblance between it and certain societies, whose reputed measures have excited wide-spread disapproval, are unwarranted, ungenerous and unjust. If this organization schemed to control politics, to loosen domestic ties, to imperil the friendship of friendly government, to take undue advantage of capital, to coerce labor, or to dethrone religion, I would not stand here. Were it a blackmailing, ostracising, murdering association, its temples would be abandoned by those who tread its pavements and would be left to the bats and owls, to those who love secret plots and midnight assassinations.

"To condemn us as evil-disposed individuals on the negative testimony of our persecutors, would be for the public to imitate the noble judge who freed a prisoner though several persons witnessed his stealing the pig, because a greater number declared that they had not seen him steal the creature. But amid the storms of vituperation we must possess our souls in patience and try to console ourselves with the reflection that no excellent thing has escaped the abuse of malignant mischief-makers. Good Templars and other noteworthy temperance bodies, and our esteemed brethren of the Odd-fellows fraternity have been as soundly scolded and traduced as we have been. Let us submit as gracefully as possible, remembering the New Jersey lover who found great satisfaction as he sat wooing a fair maiden in the open air in the thought that the blood of his sweet-heart and his own mingled in the same mosquito."

A banquet followed in the evening, at which 800 guests were expected, but only three-fourths of that number were hungry enough to stay. For once no wine was provided for a lodge feast. The business of the lodge closed next day, when Rev. F. M. Springer of Springfield was appointed Grand Chaplain, and Rev. A. T. Wolfe of Alton Grand Orator.

—Rev. M. E. Brown has changed his address from Friendship, New York, to Elton in the same State.

—Mr. Powderly, representing his Knights of Labor lodge, spoke for the closing of the Sunday saloons in a great meeting in Central Music Hall in this city last Sabbath afternoon. If Mr. Powderly wishes men to believe him sincere in his professions of respect for the day, let him order his lodge meetings on that day to cease.

—The late German Catholic Convention in Cleveland was attended by 700 delegates. In a discussion on the school question a priest held that the child belongs to the parents and not to the state, and it was for the parents to say how it should be educated. If the priests would agree to this and allow the parents to decide, the school question would be speedily settled. Parochial schools would soon be empty.—Independent.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

A strong speech by Rev. J. W. Hamilton. — Some "prominent" clergymen who favor the saloon. — The efforts of the lodge to capture anti-Romanists.

The Narragansett Times says: "It looks as if Rhode Island might have an over-production of dram-shops notwithstanding the victory of common sense." The demand for licenses is large, and the outlook for a wave of sobriety sweeping over the State is anything but encouraging."

In this connection a speech by Rev. J. W. Hamilton, D.D., whose name is signed to the Call for a Congress of Churches in Boston to discuss the secret lodge system, delivered at the late National Convention of the Societies of Christian Endeavor in Philadelphia, contains some truths which are equally adapted to refresh the souls of discouraged anti-secretists. He states that shortly after the Rhode Island decision turned back the shadows on the dial plate of reform, he received the following letter from a Massachusetts distiller, who is sending ship-loads of "liquid death" up the Congo annually:

"DEAR BRO. HAMILTON:—Don't it sometimes seem to you that the ministers are rather on the side of Baal than the true God? Their prayers are not answered like Elijah's, especially so far as prohibition is concerned. How is it? Is there a devil greater than God?"

This malignant taunt of the adversary would hardly be possible if all Christian ministers were possessed of Elijah's faith or lion-hearted courage. And if any good anti-secret brother or sister is inclined to be disheartened that our meetings are small, and our cause seems to make so little impression on the world at large, Dr. Hamilton's comments on this distiller's letter may prove a wholesome tonic:

"I have come to put so little confidence in the kind of numbers which so unworthily constitute majorities, and in the boasted wealth and position of persons who support the cause which I know to be wrong, that I simply stand and wait for them to vanish away....I have been most impatient with men from whom I could have expected better things. When the voice of numbers in this conflict was uttered against them, they turned aside and have fallen away. They have said: 'What is the good? The country is against you; the elections have gone; they have left behind them such majorities as generations may not overcome.' Faint-hearted men! How they do err, not knowing the Scriptures nor the power of God!"

Regarding the prominent preachers whose names were paraded by the saloon interest in Boston as against the Amendment, Dr. Hamilton states some facts rather damaging to the moral status of these saloon advocates. "One of the most 'prominent' of those who were thus associated with the saloon-keepers in Massachusetts was noticed in the daily papers a few days later as one of the best whist players in Boston. Another has long been discredited with good men because he is reputed to excel (?) in the vein of vulgar or indecent story-telling. Still another, a moderate drinker, had a brother gathered from the streets of Boston and cared for by friends when he was found in a state of helpless intoxication. I do not recall the name of a single person in all the list of clergymen which was printed to help the saloons that has been prominently associated with the names of the men and women to whom we are indebted most for the promotion of the temperance reform."

It is mortifying to our intelligence as American citizens that evil can palm off its bare-faced falsehoods upon us with such comparative impunity.

I have before now called attention to the evident purpose of the lodge to make the anti-Romanist movement subservient to its secret ends. A letter from Washington to the American Citizen urges the holding of a meeting of the Executive Committee of the American party to formulate plans for future work. Our namesake however, will fall into evil hands if his counsel prevails. There is much truth strongly uttered in what he writes regarding the designs of Rome and the necessity of prompt and earnest action on the part of American citizens to thwart those designs, but there is a fly in the pot of ointment. "Our secret American orders," he writes, "must be promoted, and the secret foe of the country throttled in secret." This plan of setting Satan to cast out Satan will work untold mischief in a fight with so subtle a foe as Rome.

The writer is now enjoying a visit from the senior editor of the Cynosure, whose work among the hills and valleys of his native New England is itself a testimony to the Lord's faithfulness in keeping his promise, "they shall bring forth fruit even in old age." God grant that the friends of the anti-secret cause may rally with new enthusiasm and courage around the banner of our reform, carried by so venerable and beloved a leader!

ELIZABETH E. FLAGG.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Oct. 4, 1889.

The headquarters of the Three America's Congress was opened this week in the pleasant, roomy old mansion that has been turned over for that purpose. A number of our delegates were on hand to receive the guests, when it was discovered that not one in the party could speak Spanish, and only one or two could speak French. A colored messenger was called who could speak a little Spanish; so for a long time before Mr. Romero, the Mexican minister, arrived, the colored messenger was the sole means of communication between the delegates.

The election of Mr. Blaine to the presidency of the Congress is warmly endorsed by President Harrison, and the selection appears to please the foreign visitors, for if there is one man in the United States with whose career they are familiar that man is James G. Blaine. There was a carefully laid plan to secure the position for William Henry Trescott of South Carolina, though why any clique should ask the selection of a man of whose existence the great majority of his fellow-countrymen are blissfully ignorant, is beyond conception. And yet this is always so. No sooner is a famous man named for an honor than all his enemies in his own party combine on some new Moses. The new Moses may have peacefully slept out a particularly long life, keeping the flies off of himself in county courts, but still his selection is insisted upon and his astonishing ability sworn to by a thousand good liars. Thus Mr. Trescott of Bald Knob, S. C., was insisted upon as a candidate against James G. Blaine.

After organization the Congress adjourned till November 18th, and prepared for a forty-two-day trip through the Northern States, visiting factories, universities and many points of interest. The junket will extend to the Missouri river. The train bearing this party, which to-day left the Sixth street Station in this city, is unique in the history of railroading. The excursion is one of the most important that has ever been made. The impression upon the visitors cannot be overestimated. They will see fertile fields, wide stretches of the finest grazing lands in the world, smiling villages, and the most tremendous manufacturing centres that the world has ever known. They will see wealth and prosperity under a form of government that many of them has been taught to distrust. They will learn the paramount commercial importance of this country. Such a party, met together for mutual benefit in peaceful congress, is a triumph of modern civilization.

Hon. Henry G. Davis, who is one of the United States representatives in the Congress, says that he believes some valuable work will be accomplished. The majority of the visitors express an earnest disposition to promote better commercial relations with the United States. Many say that a large proportion of their trade that now goes to Europe should go to the United States. A few of the delegates on the other hand, while cordial and friendly, are reticent as to the commercial opportunities. Mr. Davis adds that he is confident that United States interests will be substantially benefited. All of the United States delegates will not make the excursion to the various industrial centers, but it is proposed to have at least four or five of our representatives always with the party.

—The New York Evangelist states that the Rev. Dr. Arthur T. Pierson expects to sail about September 20, in order to spend some months in Scotland advocating the cause of missions.

—The Advance has collated the opinions of a large number of Congregational ministers on the important topic that should be discussed at the National Council at Worcester. A majority ask for the consideration of the Color Line issue. Questions of Socialism and Labor Reform have second place, Prohibition fourth. The Sabbath and Romanism in the Public Schools are half way down the list. Near the bottom stands the Work of the Holy Spirit, Mormonism and the Pilgrim Fathers; and the very last are Tobacco and the Lodge. All the rest, nearly, are purely topics related to the sect. The review is surely not hopeful in respect to the reform convictions of Congregational ministers. There ought to be too much conscience in these churches to tolerate such conservatism.

CORRESPONDENCE.

FROM A LECTURER'S NOTE BOOK.

SUPERIOR, Neb., Sept. 30, 1889.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I lectured again at Humboldt, Neb., Sept. 20. The ladies of the W. C. T. U. arranged my meeting and sent the M. E. pastor to meet me at the train. I addressed a fair audience in the Christian Church. Father Bissell was present. He is still the main pillar in the Peoples' Church. The congregation is much reduced, but they are still in hopes that the Lord will send them a minister who will build them up on the anti-secret and non-sectarian line. Mrs. Enoch has gone to her rest. It was at her hotel that Elder Rufus Smith and Secretary Stoddard were entertained at a convention here four years ago, and Sister Enoch was with them and stood by them when they were egged by Masonic sympathizers. The Peoples' Church had requested Elder Smith and myself to hold a National Reform convention at Humboldt. We went up from the State N. C. A. Convention at Willis, Kansas, taking Secretary Stoddard with us. The first evening our audience was small, and for the second evening we concluded to put up a card that would draw; so we billed the town for Bro. Stoddard to open his heaviest guns on the lodges. The people turned out and filled the large church, and it was all the secret society portion of the audience could do to keep quiet under the keen, incisive logic of Bro. Stoddard. The third evening Elder Smith was forbidden to speak on the street, and he and Bro. Stoddard were egged as they returned from the church. The Elder preached in the Peoples' Church on Sabbath, showing his coat still stained with eggs. He told the congregation that he was fond of eggs, and believed they were more stimulating when taken externally than internally.

The strongest opposition we ever had at a National Reform convention was at Hiawatha, Kansas, about five years ago. I had visited the town several weeks before and arranged a systematic program, securing the promise of each of the pastors and several others to discuss some phase of the National Reform issue. When I returned on the day the convention was to open, I found all of the pastors had backed out, and not only refused to discuss these topics, but came out determined to fight us to the bitter end. I had as helpers Elder R. Smith, and A. W. McClurkin, now pastor at New Alexandria, Pa.; and Bro. J. S. T. Milligan, who stopped off the train which bore the body of his brother, Dr. A. M. Milligan, to its last resting place in Allegheny, Pa. Nothing could have revealed Bro. Milligan's devotion to the cause better than his stopping off under these circumstances. He was attacked the first evening after his address by the Presbyterian pastor, who was so worsted in the argument that he left the church in a pout and would not return. The second evening Prof. Hill, principal of the schools and a popular lecturer of the place, came out with a heavy speech, holding us up as ignorant fanatics. But Bro. Milligan, who strikes his hardest blows when aroused on debate, showed up his sophistry so clearly that the Professor finally took a back seat and was completely wound up. It is more than probable that this opposition was largely inspired by Masonry; and I found afterwards that a leading man in one of the churches had taken special pains to misrepresent the cause to the ministers, claiming that the movement was sectarian, and that we were aiming to unite church and state.

The most complete lock-out I ever experienced was several years ago at David City, Neb. I had secured a promise from several of the pastors to assist in a convention under National Reform auspices. The Congregational pastor, Thomas

H. Sayers, was especially interested in the work, and offered his church. The programs were printed and sent on. I got Dr. H. P. McClurkin of Wahoo to come to assist, but when he and I came to David City to hold the convention, the Congregationalists refused their church; nor was there a building in the city that we could get. A fierce March wind was blowing, or we would have held our meetings on the street. I cannot forget the prayer that Dr. McClurkin put up that evening as we repaired to our hotel. I could only account for this severe boycott by the fact that I had given a prominent place on the program to a holiness minister of the place named Brown, who was publishing a holiness paper, and was known as a strong Anti-mason. Bro. Ayers was high in Masonry, and so were some of his members. A social scandal drove him from his pulpit and from the town some time after, so that even his whereabouts was not known. Such convention experiences as these have led me in late years to go slower on conventions, especially in Masonic strongholds. M. A. GAULT.

MANY HAVE BEEN SAVED.

BIRMINGHAM, Iowa.

DEAR BRO:—All the little that I am capable of doing for the circulation of the Cynosure will more than cheerfully be done; because I regard that fearless, outspoken publication as a si ne qua non in the great struggle of right against the multiform evils which threaten the peace and the purity of the church, stay the arm of justice, and debauch society generally—evils that like a withering blight and mildew corrupt and dwarf everything upon which their baleful shadows are cast. More especially is this true of Freemasonry and the accursed liquor traffic.

Had it not been for the Cynosure thousands who now see the light would have gone stumbling along under the blinding influence of the hood-wink, nursing the delusion that they were free men, not even suspecting that they were in the toils of an odious, relentless, self-constituted and secret oligarchy; bound with its unseen "green withes" and made to grind under its iron heel in fancied security, like Samson in the lap of his Delila, to awake to the realization of the helplessness of their condition. No man is fully prepared to enjoy the boon of liberty till he is fully aware of his slavery. May God bless the Cynosure and multiply the present number of its readers by the thousands. Sincerely, J. N. NORRIS.

WAR IN AN OREGON VALLEY.

BROWNSVILLE, Oregon, Sept. 21, 1889.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Receiving a copy of the grand old Cynosure, it has stirred me up to do what I have long thought to do, i.e., write up the secrecy devil of the beautiful Willamette valley of Oregon. The Methodists hold the fort at Salem, the capital of the State. Their University is there, and they have the largest church in the city. They practically run that town religiously and much of this grand valley. Most of their leading preachers are of the "lamb-skin" persuasion, and have as much spiritual life as old, soggy punkwood. As a consequence the devil has too much his way in this country.

This is a most fertile, attractive valley of large extent, and the people are mostly rural and naturally kind-hearted, but the churchism that they have been fed upon has reduced them spiritually to the state of guant wolves with very little of sheep's clothing about them.

We are now holding a meeting in the above place. It is a little place with a small factory, mills and stores, with perhaps one thousand inhabitants. There are four church buildings and societies, and another about to form. Odd-fellows and Freemason badges are as thick as blackberrys in a swamp. Whisky is said not to be sold in the corporation, but whisky bottles and drunks are common. We have had good success as usual in stirring up the devil. One preacher, because we would not let him fill the pulpit, got mad, went out on the streets and denounced us. The rowdies only wanted this match to set them on fire of hell. He got a man who had run his mill all Lord's day to come at night and demand the pulpit for him while we were carrying on the meeting. This was refused. When they went outside the hoodlums were howling, and he harangued some of them, while others of the gang were engaged in cutting down the tent. When he ceased, and the respectable part of the people had gone, his rowdies, who had raised five dollars for him on the street, returned filled with two kegs of beer and whisky to match, and egged and stoned us. When they had gone, I went to another tent to change my clothing, and coming near this preacher I denounced him and told him the curse of God would be upon him for bringing a mob to egg and stone us. Whereupon he rushed after the town marshal and had me illegally arrested and put in the calaboose over night, where a wretched drunken fellow had wrecked the place, tearing down the stove, etc. Here I slept in perfect peace. I was incarcerated without a warrant, and the judge has told Keniston he has no cause against me. So I have a first-class case of false imprisonment upon them. We have moved into town, have perfect order, and now the work of God begins to move, all hell is shaken and defeated at every point. Hallelujah!

The devil, not satisfied with hood-winking and cable-towing the poor people of this valley, has Freemason burying-grounds, with arches over the entrance covered with Baal-worship emblems. This is a fine country, and as fine a people as was ever butchered by the devil. We believe it is the best country in the United States for you to send a lecturer to. There are many good, true men here and coming in. Pray for us that this valley may be redeemed to God.

We wish to get a large sixteen-ounce tent, with floor 88 by 68 feet, that will cost $600.00; our present tabernacle to go inside. This tent will hold 1,200 people and be good for from five to eight years, and can be fitted up with stove and be perfectly comfortable anywhere on this coast, independent of groves. This tent will be open to prohibition and anti-secrecy speakers, free at all times. Those things never hurt our revivals. Will not the readers of the Cynosure help us to some money with which to get the tent? We got this idea from our work in Los Angeles, Cal., where we had our present tabernacle for eight months in one spot. We lodged about forty houseless ones per night, gave away some ten thousand meals of victuals, and clothed many ragged ones, and got employment for many. Some seven hundred were seeking Christ at our altars.

Brethren, a few hundred dollars right away will put us on a footing to plant God's uncompromising batteries down in the very center of hell's kingdom and take it by storm. Yours in Jesus for battle, W. T. ELLIS.

PAUL'S SPIRITUALITY.

Paul possessed a strong devotional spirit. A lofty spirituality marked his whole Christian life. A deep sense of his own weakness made him depend much on the Spirit. He felt that without him he could do nothing. This made him strong. Dead to self and dead to the world, Paul was all alive with the things of the Spirit. Filled with the Holy Ghost, Paul was pre-eminently a pious, spiritually-minded man. The commingling of his tenderness, boldness and earnestness, all helped to bring him nearer to the cross. In fact, Paul was so much led by the Spirit that he seemed to live right at the feet of Jesus. Here he got his strength, pathos and power. Indited by the Spirit, his sermons and letters all read as though they were written with the very blood of Jesus. See how they glow with love and flash with life and power. Filled and fired with the Holy Ghost, Paul was a flame of love and a flame of fire. He warmed everything he touched. Life, love, joy and peace flew all around him. His letters exhibit a height and depth of spirituality to be found nowhere else. What a lofty soaring among the things of the Spirit Paul experienced when he wrote the 8th chapter of Romans, and triumphantly exclaimed, "Who shall separate us from the love of Christ?" O what joy, what victory, what a lofty spirituality these wonderful words exhibit! And when we look at the eternity, the greatness and the infinity of Christ's love, they lift Paul much higher. Going on in these things, we soon find him caught up to the third heaven, where he was so filled with the Spirit he could not tell whether he was in the body or out of it. There bathed in the love of Jesus, and basking in the light of God's throne, he seemed to walk among the very Christians of glory.

COM,

LITERATURE.

SONGS OF PRAISE AND PRAYER for the Sunday-school and Social Meeting. Compiled and edited by Charles H. Richards, D.D. Taintor Bros. & Co., New York and Chicago.

If books of sacred music multiply it is, barring the possible mercenary element in it, a most helpful sign in the religious life of a nation. There are such books that have little to recommend them but the money they can make for the compiler or publisher. But books with a purpose and plan for the true development of sacred song can scarcely fail to be valuable. Dr. Richards evidently had a clearly-defined purpose in this handsomely-printed compilation, and has worked it out with an enthusiasm which will be infectious. In the 368 hymns and about 360 tunes that comprise the book he has provided for every ordinary topic that could claim the attention of a Sabbath-school or prayer meeting, and even for some that should not, as Christmas and Easter. But with about three exceptions we would not exclude even these from our hymns. One special charm of the book is the retaining among the old tunes so many that have a historical as well as musical value. Every intelligent singer greets them joyfully. The new work in the volume is of unusually good character as a whole. The standard of words and music throughout is high, and there are but few pieces with the worn-out "hipity-hop" chorus of rapid reflections—or "vain repetitions," as Christ said it. Small churches would find this an excellent book for all purposes; and those that retain the 1,500-hymn editions for church service will find much relief to take up this clear, plain type and fresh music for the prayer meeting.

ALDEN'S MANIFOLD CYCLOPEDIA of Knowledge and Language, Vol. 15. John B. Alden, New York.

Volume XV. includes the titles from Fluctuate to Galvanism. Following the same general lines as its predecessors it is, in some respects, a marked advance upon them in solid worth. We notice with pleasure the large number of practical topics which are treated, and the thoroughness and accuracy with which they have been handled. The merchant, mechanic, farmer, gardener, and laborer, as well as the student and the college graduate, can here find a vast amount of valuable information. Among the thousands of topics treated in this volume we notice that Food and Drink have 9 pages; Force, 12 pages; Forest Laws, 2 pages; Forms of Address, 4 pages; Fruit, 13 pages; Fuel, 6 pages; Fungi, 5 pages; Galvanism, 35 pages. There are also biographies of Rear Admiral Foote; Archibald Forbes; Benjamin Franklin; General John C. Fremont; James A. Froude; Robert Fulton; Galen; Galileo; and many other eminent men.

Scribner's Magazine for October contains an exciting exploration article, in which Joseph Thompson, sent out by the Royal Geographical Society, describes his remarkable and famous journey through equatorial Africa to the Victoria Nyanza. Emin Bey's province (to which this route leads, and to which Stanley has just made a terrible journey) will be fully described in the November number by Col. H. G. Prout, an American, who succeeded Gordon as Governor of the province, and was his trusted friend. Emin was then attached to Col. Prout's staff. Another interesting descriptive article, finely illustrated like the first, is "Summer in Iceland," by Charles Sprague Smith, of Columbia College, who gives the present condition and social customs of the people, and describes a journey into the interior. Prof. N. S. Shaler, from wide observation and experience, has formulated certain very practical suggestions as to the improvement of the "Common Roads" of the United States, which are in a deplorable condition. The author believes that, including all indirect losses, "the sum of the road-tax in this country is greater than that of our ordinary taxation." This article should attract the widest attention and lead in effective legislation. In the electric series Lieutenant W. S. Hughes, U. S. N., writes of the recent applications of electricity to naval warfare—Lieut. John Mills, U. S. A., describes its applications to land warfare.

Macmillan & Co. publish early in October "Pen Drawing and Pen Draughtmanship," by Joseph Pennell. The work will contain numerous Photogravures and other illustrations, including examples after Sir Frederick Leighton (president Royal Academy), E. J. Poynter, Frederick Walker, Randolph Caldecott, George Du Maurier, and numerous other well-known artists.

The Evangelical Repository opens with a wise paper on "Wit, Humor and Sarcasm" in the pulpit, by Rev. I. N. Chester. Dr. J. G. Carson writes of the "Law of Overture," Dr. Wm. Johnston, of Iowa, on "God's Forgiveness," and Dr. J. T. McClure on the "Trial of Christ." The Sabbath-school lessons are elaborately presented by different writers.

LODGE NOTES.

Grand Secretary Lyon, of Scotland, is positive that Burns was never elected Poet Laureate of Lodge Cannongate, Killwinning. This knocks out another Masonic myth.

The Republican, of St. Louis, says it is stated on good authority that the gathering of anti-Powderly knights in that city on the occasion of the visit of Mr. Powderly will accept that opportunity to make a demonstration against Powderly, and it is more than probable some lively rows will result. Barry, who is Mr. Powderly's old foe, and Detweiler, the editor of the Knights of Labor (the Chicago organ of the K. of L.), it is said, will be ready to tell what they know about Powderly. Senator Burk, of Chicago, another enemy of Powderly, will be present, and it is said that even Martin Irons will be brought in to tell how he believes Powderly fell into J. Gould's hands and lost the Southwest strike for the knights.

In France, where the plan was at first originated, "Adoptive" Masonry was, for a time, much in vogue. The Empress Josephine, in 1805 presided over the "Lodge Imperiale d'adoption des Freres Chevaliers," at Strasburg; and the assemblies of the Brethren and Sisters at Paris are said to have been equally elegant, splendid and agreeable. Of their agreeability I entertain no manner of doubt. But I have my own opinion of passwords whispered by rosy lips, and grasps interchanged with soft hands—and indeed we are credibly informed the mystical part of the business was a mere pretence, and the rites always ended in—a ball and supper—as might be reasonably expected.—John Townsend, Deputy Grand Master of Ireland.

A correspondent of the London Freemason points out that in many lodges in England liquors are not placed on the banqueting tables, and says, so far as he can ascertain, the earliest known lodge in England conducted on temperance principles, so far as refreshments are concerned, was Temperance Lodge, No. 739, Birmingham, warranted in March, 1858, the by-law thereon providing that "In no case whatever shall intoxicating beverages of any description be introduced at the festival and social gatherings of the lodge." The correspondent closes his letter thus: "Whilst anxious that all possible and legitimate freedom be granted the members, I consider that the Grand Lodge should prohibit the consumption of intoxicating liquors in open lodge—that is, during the period of work, whether in a Board of Installed Masters or otherwise."

Justice H. Rathbone, founder of the order of Knights of Pythias, delivered a lecture in the Madison Street Theater, Chicago, last week, upon "True Pythianism." A moderately-sized audience assembled in the theater, but for an hour and more they waited before Mr. Rathbone put in an appearance. He finally did come, however, much to the relief of the impatient people, and after some further delay he was introduced. He prefaced his remarks by a brief statement of the facts attendant upon the founding of the order. It grew in his own mind, he said, out of a first reading of the old story of Damon and Pythias. He prepared the ritual of the order, which in February, 1864, was submitted to and approved by a few of his personal friends in Washington. The order has since grown phenomenally, until there are now over 3,000 lodges, with a total membership of 265,000. Since the establishment of the endowment or insurance rank no less than $5,000,000 has been paid out for benefits.

During the great strike on the Missouri Pacific railroad system, in the spring of 1886, a freight train was wrecked near Wyandotte, Kas., and two of its crew killed. A number of Knights of Labor strikers were arrested, charged with the act. One of the arrested men, George Hamilton, was tried and acquitted, and the other cases were nolle prossed. Subsequently Mike Leary and Robert Geers, two of the arrested knights, brought suit against the Missouri Pacific company for damages for malicious prosecution, and last week depositions were taken at St. Louis in this case by B. P. Waggoner, of Atchison, Kas., attorney for the Missouri Pacific. The depositions, it is said, show that the order of the Knights of Labor took the train-wreckers under its protection and spent about $30,000 of its general fund in their defence; also that in a spirit of revenge over the failure of the strike the Missouri car works at St. Charles, Mo., and the Vandalia freight depot in East St. Louis were destroyed by fire, and that a plan was devised to blow up the bridge by floating a dynamite-laden barge against it, but this was not carried out. The names of the actors in these events were given, and it was said that men much higher in the ranks of the knights knew much about these things. In view of these statements it is said that Master Workman Powderly and Secretary Hayes will be put through the affidavit mill at St. Louis, and other members of the executive board will be compelled to tell what they know. The testimony of other local knights will also be taken. Some members of the order claim that the whole business is a bluff.

Professor Gauthier, of Paris, states that certain vital processes of the body develop putrefying substances in the tissues, which, if not speedily eliminated, produce disease. Ayer's Sarsaparilla effects the removal of these substances, and thereby preserves the health.

The General Fund is that from which the running expenses of the Association are paid. From it the agents on the field are supported.

The Foreign Fund is that from which the foreign demand for literature against the lodge is supplied to missionaries.

The Free Tract Fund clearly states by its name the object for which contributions are solicited. Millions of pages have been distributed by means of this fund.

The Cynosure Ministers' Fund. The donations to this fund have enabled the Association to send many copies of the Cynosure to the ministers of the South, especially to pastors of colored churches. The result has been a blessing to them and their churches.

Contributions to any or all these funds are urgently solicited.

The Christian Cynosure.

J. BLANCHARD, EDITOR.

HENRY L. KELLOGG, ASSOCIATE EDITOR.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, OCTOBER 10, 1889.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

Boston, Sept. 30, 1889.

I have just made some brief remarks to the Congregational ministers, which are to appear in the Boston Traveler this afternoon. Mr. Richardson, of the Congregationalist, has promised to insert Dr. Waldenstrom's testimony against Freemasonry. Secretary Stoddard's unwearied toils are being rewarded by success beyond my hope or expectation. But the lodge has as many eyes as Argus; and as many hands as Briareus; and, like Satan, its god, never gives up. But there is a stronger than "the strong man armed;" and the key of the bottomless pit will yet be turned on him. Mr. Stoddard has had a thousand copies of the Pilgrim Monument dedication protest printed for the use of the great Council at Worcester, and the type is left standing. I am more and more profoundly convinced that the substratum of New England population is opposed, fundamentally, to the secret orders.

But of all classes of men in the United States, Congregational pastors in New England are most to be pitied. There are enough Masons in their churches, as a rule, to remove every one of them; and the removal of a pastor affects him as the loss of a battle affects the standing of a general. Their denominational papers, too, have kept them and their members in the most deplorable ignorance of the nature and effects of the lodges which are disintegrating their churches. But when New Englanders once see and know that the lodges do literally and truly worship demons, and their head, Christ's rival and antagonist, they will take their stand and die in their tracks before they will turn back. See 1 Cor. 10: 20. All worship which leaves out Christ is Gentile worship.

The lodge question here is just where the slavery question was when I was in Andover. Dr. Stow and a few of his Baptist brethren, and Dr. Channing, Unitarian, polished, popular and benevolent, stood out as Abolitionists. So did a few of the orthodox Congregationalists, as Hawes, of Hartford, Ide, of Medway, etc., but "God was marching on," and he is marching now. I hope, before coming West, to get an hour to explain the oneness of Romanism and Masonry in the Congregational House. But we must "continue instant in prayer."

KNOW-NOTHINGISM REVIVED.

A correspondent writes thus from Washington, D. C., to the Boston American Citizen, Sept. 17th ult.: "It has been thought advisable to hold a meeting of the executive committee of the American party to formulate plans for future work, local, State, and National, and to prepare an address for the American people, etc." And the same article farther on says, "Our secret American orders must be promoted, and the secret foe of the country throttled in secret [the italics are theirs] to let the whole world know that we mean to reserve 'America for Americans.'"

This is the old Know-Nothing party new-named. It was called, and correctly, "the Native American party." But its secrecy, and the absurdity of excluding all foreign-born Americans from office, killed the party in a short time. Nor do we think its resurrection would have been attempted, but to steal the name of the American party organized in Oberlin and named in Syracuse. That name was adopted because it excludes those secret orders which are hostile to every American principle by their secrecy, aristocracy, titles, regalia, despotism, and demon-worship.

A few days since we met Rev. Mr. Lyons, a Presbyterian clergyman from County Neury in North Ireland, an able and intelligent gentleman. He said that he believed the Orange lodges had done more to weaken and damage Protestantism than any one cause whatever, and incidentally occasioned more mobs and bloodshed.

The Prince of Orange came to the English throne in 1688. Two years later (1690) he fought the battle of the Boyne. Rev. Mr. Lyons had been at the Boyne where Prince William rode into the river saying "God must be our King this day.

And I'll be general under."

The paltroon papist, James II., had come over from France, and, on horseback, sat on the hill Dunmore to see the fight. As soon as he saw his party defeated he fled back to France, where, pensioned by the king of France and the Pope, he filled France with "Stuart Masonry," manufactured by Jesuits; lived ten years and died. Secret lodges, as usual, run both sides. In Ireland the Mason lodges changed their names and color of their badges and became Orange lodges; and promised, like this bastard American party, to "throttle" popery "in secret." Well, two hundred years have elapsed, less one year, and they have celebrated "the Battle of the Boyne" ever since. Leaving Ireland, where they claimed only to antagonize the "Green" or Romish faction, they have spread, like all such pests, over Europe and America, selling initiations and degrees slightly changed from the same in Masonry; collecting dues; swindling the masses; fooling women and children; and strutting into churches like Knight Templars on the Sabbath with fluttering ribbons and toggery, in the name of Christianity and Christ! And they have, in two hundred years, converted as many Romanists as secret Union Leagues converted rebels.

And now, after the blank failure of Know-Nothingism, which was Orangeism revamped, we are to have a new edition of this foul stuff to help Boston resist Romish priests; restore the Bible to the schools and protect popular education; and thus, literally, serve God with tools invented by the devil!

"Oh, what authority and show of truth
Can cunning sin cover itself withal."

What secrecy is needed to educate American children and drive out from the Confessional priests sworn to secrecy? What initiations, what trumpery in sworn degrees of blasphemy followed by dancing orgies like those practiced over the graves at Plymouth by the Grand Lodge Masons, when their infernal oblations were done? Nevertheless, let us stand by the name and thing American, and the principles and prayers of the pious dead will save the Republic which their toils planted and their valor protected.

AMERICAN PARTY POLITICS.

WHAT SHALL WE DO?

"God requireth the past," so we shall only allude to it to gain wisdom for the present. At the suggestion of the now sainted Philo Carpenter, we nominated at Oberlin Charles Francis Adams, who assured us that his principle was neither to accept or refuse a nomination by American voters. We afterward nominated Hon. James B. Walker and Donald Kirkpatrick, who accepted our nomination. We nominated Senator Phelps and ex-Senator Pomeroy. But we had no press to sustain our nominees but our own young papers. The press did not widely recognize, or even publish, our ticket. But we gained voters as we slowly gained converts to our cause. We then nominated ex-Senator Pomeroy and Mr. Conant. Mr. Pomeroy notified us that ex-Governor St. John "stood on every plank of our platform," and he "should ask leave to withdraw in his (St. John's) favor." We had no time to call a new national nominating convention, and our friends in Monmouth, Ill., and in Washington, Iowa, nominated, and the Americans with few exceptions voted for, St. John. Thus far the Cynosure seconded and sustained all who proposed and sought to procure action which should treat Freemasons, owing supreme allegiance to their lodge, as aliens, unfit to be voted for by Americans.

When the canvass of 1888 approached, General Fisk assured the Cynosure editor that he "was in entire accord with him," even in disapproving of the temperance secret lodges. The Cynosure had seconded all the efforts of the Washington American to organize a national American party; and some hundreds of dollars were raised and expended for that purpose. But the election drew near: nothing effectual had been done. The Prohibition issue absorbed the mass of reformers, and we were Prohibitionists. The election came on. General Fisk, the Prohibition candidate, was a good man, immensely popular, and "in entire accord with us" in opposition to secret societies. No other candidate for us appeared above the political horizon, and the Cynosure voted for General Fisk. Being human we are liable to err; but we have steadily sought wisdom from God; have had no personal views or private interests to seek. We have given the wisest and best advice we could, and have not condemned or abused the advice of others. As to results: We have gained a host of friends in the Prohibition party and W. C. T. U. The knowledge of our platform has been spread over the United States. Two or three new attempts at parties have sought to steal or seize our name of "American" party. We have started the American League, and question candidates of other parties as to their secret-oath relations; and we have neither deserted our principles nor lowered our flag.

The question is, what shall we do now to prepare for 1892. And the Cynosure, as ever, is open to temperate discussion. We have written Gen. Fisk to know if the Prohibition party could give us any assurance that its candidates in 1892 would be anti-secret. The General writes us a kind and loving letter, but says no word of secrecy or anti-secrecy. The Prohibition party organ, The Voice, answers one of its correspondents that—

"The Prohibition party has nothing to do, one way or another, with the question of secret societies." This we understand to be, in so far, a surrender to the lodge. The more especially as Dr. Funk once personally assured us that he agreed with us in opposition to secret societies, and promised to say so in The Voice, which we regret he has failed to do. Unless, therefore, we get new light, the Cynosure editor will not, if alive, vote with the Prohibition party in 1892.

As to what is to be done, we seek advice from those who are with us, convinced that an adhering Freemason is unfit to hold an American office because his allegiance is sworn to his secret government; or, as Pres. C. A. Blanchard put it to the Pittsburgh Prohibition Convention, "Men who are under sworn secret obligations to a part of the people, are not fit to govern the whole."

The time for decided political action was never so propitious as the present, for the following reasons:

1. Never till now has the Prohibition party definitely refused to give up its secrecy, as we have all along hoped they would; as their organ now declares that their Mason-Prohibitionists are not to be disturbed, but silently hugged to their bosom. That is to say, the Prohibition party is to be governed by Freemasons.

2. The Freemasons have again and again betrayed the temperance cause at elections; and, as they are sworn to do, have stood by saloon Masons.

3. In Illinois the Good Templars have this year lost, by their late report at Streator, 55 lodges and 2,715 members, nearly one-fourth of their whole number! That one-fourth are sure to become Americans.

4. A multitude dislike the name Prohibition for a national party.

5. Dr. Waldenstrom's declaration that he sees not how adhering Masons can be Christians has reached by this time the Scandinavian voters in the United States, and their able press is now open to American party arguments.

6. Dr. Cronin is an Irish Morgan, and Clan-na-Gael a Masonic lodge, with an Irish name, covered with Cronin's blood. "And when thou hearest the sound of a going in the tops of the mulberry trees, then thou shalt bestir thyself." Now is that time!

THE CRONIN TRIAL.

Judge McConnell's court is busy day after day, but only four jurors are yet sworn. The number of men examined does not yet equal the Anarchist case, but will pass it this week. Forrest, one of the attorneys for the defense, who has been managing for them, has several times complained of unfair dealing in summoning the venire. There were too few working men and men of low intelligence to suit his temper. Therefore, to please his humor, a special deputy was appointed by the court to secure jurymen, who was a Freemason, and acceptable to Mr. Forrest. But the men he summoned were less suited to Forrest than ever. The more intelligent they became, the stronger their belief that the Clan-na-Gael secret oath would interfere with the oath of law. Monday the deputy gave up the business in disgust. That day nearly one half the talesmen confessed to this opinion, and the opposition to secret societies was very prominent. The same has been as marked on other days. Gentlemen with such convictions are finding themselves in good company and plenty of it. Indeed, there is a question if they are not in a majority, even in our lodge-ridden city. It is painful, however, to note that occasionally a member of some Lutheran church confesses to his connection with the lodge.

Last Tuesday Mr. Forrest attempted to probe into the secrets of the American League, and asked a juror about the oath of that order, to prove to the court that its members were already so sworn as to prevent them from acting as unprejudiced members of the jury. Judge McConnell would not allow the question.

During another examination by Mr. Forrest of a gentleman opposed to secret societies, he was proceeding to question him further upon his objection to the lodge, when State's Attorney Longenecker interfered. "Why, your Honor," said he, "there may be Masons or Odd-fellows called here as witnesses. The idea! To have a juror in advance, and before he is sworn, say whether he is going to give credit to a man in this trial without corroboration, is a matter he is not called upon to do." Continuing he said, "The minute a juror answers that he is prejudiced against that class, then they should stop and not go into details. Now they might, with the same propriety, ask him whether he is going to be prejudiced against a Mason, saying that they are going to call a Mason, and so on."

We note this case because during the long argument the Masonic and Odd-fellow obligations were referred to as equally prejudicial with the Clan-na-Gael in the forming of a correct opinion of the value of testimony.

Outside the court room occasional developments prove that the Clan-na-Gael triangle is quietly at work. A plot to show that Cronin was murdered as a spy in England, by leaving his bloody clothes to be discovered, was laid bare. The clothes are believed to have been sealed in a tin box and shipped across the ocean. Another scheme to throw the officers off the track was by forged letters, purporting to be from Miss Parnell to a bogus lover in this city. It seems there was an actual lover here, and the plot fell through. A witness who has been closely watched by the police escaped from surveillance the other day, and the hand of Sullivan is thought to be upon him.

The jury must soon be secured, unless the prosecuting lawyers are planning a delay. Four of the defendants have exhausted their peremptory challenges, and Beggs, the fifth, has but about a dozen left. These being gone, jurymen satisfactory to the court will soon be found. The rejection of so many men by Judge McConnell, because they are unwilling to believe members of the Clan-na-Gael, during last week, indicates a leniency toward the accused that will not aid the cause of justice; and if ever a jury is found that will entirely ignore the oaths of that lodge, the cartoons of the press, calling for a jury of baboons or idiots, will have a serious application.

NOTICE that the petition to Congress against all such societies as Washington mentioned in the warning of his Farewell Address, is being circulated. Let every reader send for a dozen copies and put them in circulation.

—All will read Secretary Stoddard's letter with kindling zeal and growing faith to ask of the Lord his blessing on all the efforts to secure this meeting.

—The "Decline of the G. A. R." is the last tract issued by the publishing department of the N. C. A. It is a telling one and handsomely printed. Send for a dime's worth to hand to your old soldier friends.

—We have ready a reply to Grand Orator Sir Knight Lorimer, the humble pastor of Imanuel Baptist church in this city. The pressure on our columns by articles coming in late on Monday postpones it for a week.

—We give much space to the Grand Lodge affair in this city last week. This was their half-century occasion. Our readers will read the long account with congratulations that before another fifty years we may hope for something better than lodgery of the survivors of this day.

—John Brown of Elsinore, California, is a gentleman with whom we have had much correspondence. He is a man of enterprise and excellent character, and a Christian reformer. We advise all who are looking to California for investment to write him by all means. See his advertisement on the 7th page.

—Bro. William Fenton of St. Paul writes to learn the address of some one who can work the Masonic degrees. Bro. Thomas Lowe is living in Wisconsin, but we have not his address. Will not some reader of this note who may know forward it to Bro. Fenton at 74 S. Robert street, St. Paul?

—Secretary Stoddard wrote from Worcester on Thursday that Rev. I. J. Lansing, D. D., of that city had agreed to speak at the Boston conference in December. Dr. Lansing is the eloquent speaker whose addresses on Romanism in Music Hall, Boston, have rung through New England. He is also the author of "Romanism and the Republic," a fine and popular volume published by William Kelloway, and for sale at this office. The date to the conference is postponed and is not yet announced. Bro. Stoddard returned to Boston Friday last.

—Bro. I. R. B. Arnold is in earnest about the colored people. His family is with him in Wheeling, the girls attending school and teaching in needy Sabbath-schools. He has had good success in the vicinity, but the tent purchased two years ago is worn out, and he wants a cheap mission chapel built on his flatboat. He is anxious to get $1,000 or more for this purpose, and the Wheeling churches among which he is successfully laboring will give several hundred more, and he will float his hall from point to point, preaching for Christ to ear and eye.

—Rev. C. L. Harris, pastor of the Congregational church of Jackson, Miss., called on the Cynosure Friday on his way to the National Council of that denomination in Worcester, Mass., next week. Bro. Harris left the lodge some years ago and succeeded in clearing his church also. He says the late race troubles in that part of Mississippi are due to the Farmers' Alliance, a secret organization among the colored men. In Texas and other parts of the South this society is secret in its methods, like the Agricultural Wheel. In Dakota, however, and other parts of the West and Northwest, it is an open organization, as all farmers' societies should be.

—The Illinois Executive Committee, after securing Mrs. L. S. Rounds for the State Convention at Elgin, Nov. 5th, regret exceedingly the necessity of a change in the program. Mrs. Rounds, president of the State W. C. T. U., will have much responsibility connected with the entertainment of the National body, which meets in this city on the 8th. It will be impossible for her to leave home during that week, and she reluctantly asks to be excused. Mrs. Gleason, of Massachusetts, who has been praised in our columns for her eloquence as well as for true devotion to the cause of Christian reform, has promised to be present and give an address.

REFORM NEWS.

THE BOSTON CONFERENCE.

FROM THE GENERAL AGENT.

WORCESTER, Mass., Oct. 2, 1889.

Friends will be anxious to know how matters are progressing towards the proposed conference of Churches or Christians in Boston. For various reasons, which our New England friends deem weighty, it seemed best to postpone the meeting until December next. To meet and confer with brethren whose influence is material to the largest success, and to give opportunity for these brethren to confer together requires much time. At this writing I am authorized to announce the following gentlemen as agreeing to take part: Rev. Drs. A. J. Gordon, James M. Gray, A. A. Miner, O. P. Gifford, and I. J. Lansing; also H. L. Hastings and Pres. J. Blanchard. Dr. David McAllister of Pittsburgh, and Dr. P. S. Henson of Chicago, with others, have been invited to speak, but have not replied as yet. Those who have agreed to participate in the conference are a sufficient guarantee that it will be conducted on the highest plane of candid Christian inquiry, and must result in great good. Indeed, it would be difficult to arrange a stronger program, with speakers more widely known and highly esteemed for their work's sake, as well as for what they are by the grace of God. The hall for the meeting has not been fully determined, but it will be Tremont Temple, Music Hall, or some central and commodious place as the Lord directs.

There are a few things that the friends should do with direct reference to this meeting.

FIRST AND ABOVE ALL, prayer unceasing should be made to God for a Pentecostal baptism on the entire meeting, and that the adversary may be foiled in all his efforts to withstand and defeat the purpose for which we meet, namely, to glorify God in the deliverance of home, state and church from the thralldom of secret and sworn foes.

SECOND, Suitable and God-fearing men or women should be appointed to represent those who send them; and in cases where such representatives are not able to pay their own expenses, provision should be made for paying them at the rate of $1.50 to $2.00 per day while in Boston, beside railway fare.

THIRD, The rent of a suitable hall, advertising, and expenses of speakers must be paid from a general fund, and those who have the Lord's money in trust should contribute for this purpose.

I am hopeful that I shall be able to furnish a full program for next Cynosure, and that the senior editor, whose recent as well as earlier acquaintance with this New England field is extensive, will give our readers his views and impressions of this meeting. J. P. STODDARD.

STARTLING NEWS FOR UNITED PRESBYTERIANS.

THEIR MISSION MONEY ASKED FOR FREEMASONS.

DALE, N. Y., Oct. 4, 1889.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—October 22d, the day announced for our State Convention, will soon be here. Till then I trust every Cynosure reader in the State will be planning to attend and get as many as possible to accompany him. Letters from ex-President Blanchard and the General Agent bring assurance of their intention to be with us. An interesting program will be arranged. Read the call elsewhere in the Cynosure.

During the past week I have delivered five addresses and secured sixteen new subscriptions to the paper. Sabbath morning and evening I addressed audiences in the U. P. church at York. It is estimated there were not less than 450 present in the morning, and probably 300 in the evening, the evening audience being largely young people. Together with a contribution kindly given by our old friend Wm. Tisdell, the collection amounted to $10.51. I shall not be able, as I had hoped, to accept the invitation kindly extended by the pastor, Rev. A. K. Duff, to return and lecture again on next Monday evening.

A goodly number gathered to hear me in the Covington U. P. church. Rev. Gilfillan, their much-esteemed pastor, has served them twenty-two years. In several instances I learned that the seed I had sown when last this way, some five years ago, had not been void. Some had become strong anti-secretists from reading the books I sold.

On Tuesday I attended a meeting of the Caledonia U. P. presbytery, and was honored with a seat as a consultative member. A wish was expressed that I address the presbytery on my theme. It was suggested, as many were not prepared for their part of the evening conference, I be invited to give a brief address. This met with opposition. The question for the evening discussion was in regard to how much ought Christians to give for the Lord's work? The pastor of the church in which the presbytery met (Rev. Russell) wished this question thoroughly discussed for his people's benefit. Revs. Russbridge and Dodd, of the two Buffalo churches, had the same wish. However, a vote to invite your agent to speak after 8:30 in the evening was carried. Had I not found Rev. Russbridge to be a Mason, and Rev. Dodd's church full of secret society men, their zeal for the money question might have appeared different. Rev. Dodd said he was as much opposed to secret societies as I was; but that the first two men he buried after becoming pastor of

THE HOME.

FAITH.

Since the Father's arm sustains thee,
Peaceful be.
When a chastening hand restrains thee,
It is He.
Know His love in full completeness
Fills the measure of thy weakness;
If He wound thy spirit sore,
Trust Him more.

Without measure, uncomplaining,
In His hand,
Lay whatever things thou canst not Understand;
Though the world thy folly spurneth,
From thy faith in pity turneth,
Peace thy inmost soul shall fill,
Lying still,

Like an infant. If thou thinkest
Thou canst stand,
Childlike, proudly pushing back
The proffered hand,
Courage soon is changed to fear,
Strength does feebleness appear;
In His love if thou abide,
He will guide.

Fearest sometimes that thy Father
Hath forgot?
When the clouds around thee gather,
Doubt Him not.
Always hath the daylight broken,
Always hath He comfort spoken,
Better hath He been for years
Than thy fears.

Therefore, whatso'er betideth
Night or day,
Know—His love for thee provideth
Good alway.
Crown of sorrow gladly take,
Grateful wear it for His sake,
Sweetly bending to His will,
Lying still.

To His own thy Saviour giveth
Daily strength;
To each troubled soul that liveth,
Peace at length;
Weakest lambs have largest share
Of this tender Shepherd's care;
Ask him not then "When?" or "How?"
Only bow!

GOD'S PROVIDENCE.

To all who doubt that God cares for those who trust in him, we commend the following extract from a work of Miss Anna Warner, entitled "Incidents in the Life of Rev. Geo. Ainslie."

Soon after the firing upon Fort Sumter, in 1861, vigilance committees were formed throughout Texas, and summons were served upon most Northern men living in Indian Territory—notably the missionaries to the Choctaw Indians—to leave that part of the country at once, or suffer death. Two only were excepted: the fact of their exception showing plainly that they were doomed to die without warning. One escaped, by a quarter of an hour, the party that came to hang him. The other, Rev. Geo. Ainslie, was about making ready to go, when a Christian Indian, who had been across the Red River, into Texas, came in the gathering twilight, and asked to see Mr. Ainslie alone. He told how a party of "Vigilants" were to come early in the morning to hang the missionary at the gate of the mission-house, because he had preached to colored people as well as to Indians; and begged him to flee that instant to the mountains.

Mr. Ainslie's first impulse was to go at once, but, the next minute, he said, "No, William, there are four defenceless lady teachers here; I will not go till I can take them with me." Twice William returned and implored him to leave the mission that night. At last, throwing his arms about Mr. Ainslie's neck, with bitter weeping, crying out, "I have warned you; I know English; I heard them say to hang you. Oh, do flee!"

And William was not alone. Other Christian Choctaws gathered about the mission, offering, if need were, to defend the missionary with their own lives. "You are our only friend," said Battiste. "If you leave us there will be none to care for us. Stay with us, and we will fight for you and the mission, till they go over our dead bodies to reach you...."

The Indians pleaded, but Mr. Ainslie stood firm. The mission family must go, though they could not go at once; and Battiste turned away towards his own home, lifting up his voice in loud wailing, like the Jews of old, until he had passed far on into the forest.

Between the mission and the nearest steamboat landing on the Arkansas River lay a weary journey of three hundred miles. It must be made in slow-moving ox-wagons, through the deep forest, in the burning heat of a Southern summer. Provisions for the journey must be prepared, for there were no hotels along the forest-paths; bedding, for camping, must be packed, teams and drivers secured. With one eye on the work, the other on the leafy forest surrounding the mission-house, each moment looking to see an armed company ride up with ropes coiled at their saddle-bow—so Mr. Ainslie made ready for flight.

But, indeed, that was only the outward and visible seeming. Deep in the missionary's heart there was another outlook and another thought. "We have no might against this great company that is come against us, neither know we any more what to do; but, our eyes are upon Thee."

Twice the sun went down upon the weary toilers—twice he arose again, and found them unmolested. Was, then, the Indian's warning a false alarm? By no means. Twice the "Vigilants" had gone down to the Red River, intending to cross it and execute their threat, and twice they found that the "June rise," caused by the melting ice upon the mountains, had, without a drop of rain, filled the stream past fording. No horse could cross the rapid current. Twice they were compelled to return home. And there God held the flood until the mission family had left Goodwater, and were many miles on their way. When the waters fell, the Texans crossed over and went to the mission, but only to find it deserted, and their ropes a useless burden.

But the journey was full of perils, both by day and by night. The missionaries knew that, on a certain afternoon, a small steamer would touch at a certain landing on the Arkansas River. If they could reach that steamer! But, could they? How they prayed, as they journeyed on, that God would bring them in time to the landing! Yet, there was nothing that looked like an answer to their prayer; the way did not grow smoother, nor the sun's heat gentler, and little delays and hindrances seemed rather to increase. The panting oxen could scarcely draw the heavy wagon, and then came Saturday night.

Those with whom the word "necessity" has drifted from its deep-water moorings, to the shallows where it can be made fast anywhere—the men who can do without God, but must have the world, and who, scrupulously keeping their own appointments, do yet greatly ignore and slight the day of special meeting with the Lord, which he himself hath set—they will give my missionaries hard names. Nevertheless, as the Saturday's sun went down, the little band of fugitives drew up beside a forest stream, got out their camping gear, "outspanned" the oxen, "and rested the seventh day, according to the commandment."

It is said, in the Bible, that "Jacob went on his way, and the angels of God met him." There was no such vision, I suppose, to the weary party in the forest. And yet, as the darkness fell, and eyes closed and hearts were quiet under the promise, "The Lord is thy Keeper," who shall doubt that angels were there? Who cannot almost see the shining patrol that went up and down among the trees? as bright, as wakeful, as the noiseless procession of stars overhead. Jacob named his ground "Two camps," and so might Mr. Ainslie.

All Sunday there was rest—"cessation," as the old word is—and Sunday night brought no alarms, and Monday morning saw them once more on the way. All quiet, all still and peaceful in the forest as they toiled along; and now, at last, came on the day when they hoped, by sundown, to reach the landing, and hear the welcome whistle of the steamer. The hours wore on, and it was already afternoon—then, suddenly, one of the wagon wheels crushed down, an utter wreck.

Had God, at last, forsaken them? Had he brought them safe so far, to leave them now to perish by the way? Men ask such questions, falling into Job's puzzle, and coming out of it only by the way recommended to him: "Dost thou know the balancings of the clouds?"

One of the number remembered that they had passed, somewhere, on the road, an old, deserted blacksmith's shop. So, gathering up the wreckage, the men of the party went back those weary miles, and there, with few tools and less knowledge, repaired the damage as best they might. But this made another twenty-four hours' delay, and it was the afternoon of the next day before they could again set forward.

Hope had well nigh died within them. Oh, that broken wheel! Why had their loving Heavenly Father allowed it? Before long they knew, for they were not the only ones interested in meeting that particular steamer. A large party of rough secessionists had gathered at the landing, with the avowed intention of butchering every Northerner on board, and any others who might be fleeing and seeking to catch the boat. And they watched as eagerly at the landing, as the missionaries in the forest, for the whistle of the boat. Through the night, and far on into the next day, they waited, until supplies gave out and hunger set in, but waited in vain. No boat appeared. Detained, first by low water, then by shifting currents and sand-bars, the slow-going steamer had fallen sadly behind time, and, at last, chagrined and disappointed, the rough company dispersed and went home.

Hours after, the fugitive missionaries came out from the forest and reached the little landing, just as the steamer sounded forth her approach. They went on board safely, with none to make them afraid.

Whenever, in after years, Mr. Ainslie spoke of that escape, he always added: "It was the hand of an unseen angel that broke that wheel." They had prayed for safety, for escape, and God gave them the deliverance they sought, though it came in a providence that seemed a denial of their prayer. The "hand of the angel" was surely there, though, to the longing eyes, unseen.

HER WORK.

I was much cheered in Birmingham by a circumstance I heard of when I returned after an absence of eight years. I was told of a lady who had gone to one of the meetings eight years ago, and heard the speaker remark that he "pitied any man or woman who had themselves been in the kingdom of God for any length of time, and never had the luxury of leading a soul to Christ." Then she heard Mr. Sankey sing "Nothing but Leaves." She knew she never had the luxury of leading a soul to Christ; her profession, up to that time, had borne no fruit. But she had set to work, and the first thing she did was to speak to a poor fallen sister in the street. She got so interested in that one woman that she gave up all her spare time to this class; now she has the names of between 200 and 300 who have been rescued from a life of shame, and have been helped back to live pure and useful lives. I think she is the happiest woman I met in Birmingham.

She thought she had no special ability, but she did what she could; and God has blessed her in the work. It seems to me as if she were one of the most useful women there is in that town to-day. Every one speaks in the highest terms of her and her work. It is a quiet work, but my experience leads me to think that the people who make the most noise accomplish the least after all. A little brook runs near the house where I was born. When there comes a flood of rain you can hear the brook rushing and roaring if you are nearly a mile off. But after a few days of sunshine there is scarcely anything left in it. There is a great river that flows by, and I never heard it in my life. Towns have been built upon its banks, and everything prospers where it flows. So this woman has not blown any trumpet, but she is doing a most blessed work.—D. L. Moody, in the Watchman.

UPSIDE DOWN.

"You've put that sleeve in upside down, Henrietta," said Helen Marcy.

"What is the difference? They will never know it; it is finished; throw it into the box," the young girl replied. "Nobody will know who made it."

"Yes, Henrietta, but when they open the box at the mission, somebody will have to rip it out and put it in again before it can be worn."

"They ought to be glad to get anything to put on to those little vandals. Do you suppose they would know whether a sleeve was put in upside down, or even wrong side out, Helen?"

Helen Marcy made no reply, as she saw her companion throw the gingham shirt-waist into the box that stood in the middle of the floor where the finished garments were deposited. She would have taken the sleeve out and put it in again herself, but she had promised to finish off some other work that evening, as the box was going in the morning. These two young girls belonged to the "Busy Workers' Sewing Society." They had been preparing a box for a charitable institution in the city.

Henrietta Fassett was one of those persons who always did things, as her Aunt Jerusha expressed it, "in a whew." She did not think it worth while to baste the pieces of her garments together, for that took too much time; so when she sewed under her mother's or her aunt's supervision, she was oftentimes obliged to rip out the stitches, and do the work over again. She had heard her aunt say a hundred times, "Lazy folks always take the most pains, Henrietta." That afternoon she was responsible to no one, so the upside-down sleeve was allowed to be sent off, and that was all she thought about it.

Helen Marcy was entirely different in that respect from her intimate friend, Henrietta Fassett. It took her longer to finish her work, but it never had to be done over again. She was responsible to herself and her own honor in such matters. If she had made the mistake that her friend made, she would have sat up all night, if needs be, to rectify it. She always aimed to do well whatever she did, and even in the very best manner of which she was capable.

The matron at the charitable institution was very glad to get the box. There were fifteen little boys in ragged garments waiting to put on the fifteen new gingham shirt-waists. It was such a help, she thought, to have them all ready to put on—no buttons to be sewed, and no fitting to be done, and no running up of seams. Those new, clean, pretty gingham waists all ready to be slipped over the boys' shoulders. How good and kind the "Busy Workers" had been.

Mrs. Leavenworth, a friend of Mrs. Marcy's, was there to see the box opened, and she was very proud to say that the box came from the young girls of the town where she spent her summers. One boy after another stepped up to the matron and had a new waist put on, and marched off with a smiling face.

Fourteen boys had been equipped and sent off happy. Then the fifteenth boy came up. He was a thin, pale boy, with the saddest of faces. The matron said he had a very sad history, and sometime she would tell Mrs. Leavenworth all about it. Martin Beers stood by the box with a smile lighting up his face; he was going to have a new waist, probably the first bright, fresh, new garment he had ever had. His right arm went into the sleeve, but there was something wrong with the set of it.

"What's the matter with this sleeve?" queried the matron. "O, I see, it is put in upside down; somebody's made a mistake. It will have to go to the sewing-room and be ripped out. The sewing-girl is gone, too, this afternoon."

Mrs. Leavenworth saw the disappointed look on the little fellow's face. All the other boys were in the play-room with new waists on, and he would have to go back again with his old, torn shirt on. The lady laid aside her bonnet and wrap, and said, "Wait a few minutes, Martin, and I will fix the sleeve;" and so the boy sat down on a stool by her side, and watched her rip out the sleeve and put it in again. It took a half hour to do the work, but she told Martin some pretty stories while she was at work. Then he marched off to join the brigade with new gingham waists.

Henrietta had forgotten all about the "upside down sleeve," until the president of the society rapped on the table a fortnight afterwards, and called the "Busy Workers" and talkers to order. Then she read the letter Mrs. Leavenworth had written about the box. She wrote how needy the boys were, and how pleased they all were with the new garments. But this lady thought best to tell the whole truth as well as part of it, and so she added one waist had to be fixed before the boy could wear it, as somebody made a mistake, and put the right sleeve in upside down. She only mentioned it because she knew that the waist would not have been sent so unless it was a mistake. She also thought it would be a good thing to tell the young girls, so they would be more particular in future,

"Who could have made that mistake?" asked the president, as she stopped in the midst of her reading. No one answered, and Helen Marcy would not betray her friend. But Henrietta, after a few moments' consideration, spoke out clearly, "I made that mistake, girls, and I did not remedy it, but threw the waist into the box. I think I shall be more particular after this. I really did not think it would make much difference."

Mrs. Leavenworth concluded her letter by giving the sad facts connected with Martin Beers' young life, and the account touched the hearts of all the Busy Workers and brought tears to their eyes.

Henrietta seemed to be completely overcome as she listened to Mrs. Leavenworth's letter. When she went home she stopped at the store and bought material enough to make two waists for Martin Beers, and when she cut them out the next morning, she was so deliberate and particular about her work, that her mother said, "Seems to me you are taking more pains than usual with your work, Henrietta."

"Yes, mother, I've got through doing my work upside down. I begin to realize how careless and thoughtless I've been all my life. I have done so many things in such an upside down sort of a way, and I've let them go without remedying the wrong either. I begin to realize it all now. I may sometimes thoughtlessly do more of my work upside down, but if I do, dear mother, I will stop and take it out, and do it over again until it is right. One can do a great deal of work in life 'upside down,' and I hope hereafter God will help me to have all that I do finished up square and true and lasting, and right side up."

"My dear, I cannot tell you how happy you've made me," the mother replied, as she put her arms around her daughter and kissed her.—Susan T. Perry, in N. Y. Evangelist.

TEMPERANCE.

MOTHER'S BOY.

Two little clinging velvety arms;
Two little hands with rose-leaf palms;
Two bright blue eyes, in whose clear deeps
The brook's own sunshine laughs and leaps;
Two little ears like pink-white shells;
A snowy chin where a dimple dwells;
A dainty nose; two peach-bloom cheeks;
A red-lipped mouth that soft words speaks;
A brow reflecting the soul within,
Untouched by sorrow, unmarked by sin;
A crown of curls whose traceries hold
The chestnut's warmth and the sunbeam's gold;
A rounded body; two rosy limbs;
A voice like notes from cathedral hymns;
Two restless feet and a laugh of joy.
What is the total?—Mother's boy.

And the saloon says: "Just let me have a chance at this mother's boy. I will pay you anywhere from $100 to $500 for permission to lay a trap that is pretty sure to snare him. I'll change his 'two blue eyes' into two black eyes—'put them in mourning,' the boys call it; I'll change his 'snowy chin, where a dimple dwells,' into a red, pimply chin, oozing with beer; I'll break his 'dainty nose' and hollow out his 'peach-bloom cheeks'; his 'mouth that soft words speaks' shall utter blasphemous oaths and foul language; his 'two restless feet' shall run swiftly in the way of destruction; and at last his 'laugh of joy' shall be turned into a cry of despair. In short, I'll change your 'mother's boy' completely, and give you for a 'total' a devil's boy."—Emma C. Dowd in "Harper's Young People."

IOWA ANTI-PROHIBITIONISTS.

A State Anti-Prohibition Association has just been organized in Iowa by leading Republicans, the details of which are now, for the first time, made public. Col. Ellsworth, who has been working for years in Wisconsin in the interest of anti-prohibition, is the prime mover, aided by B. W. Blanchard, of Dubuque, editor of the Ledger, of this city, the only Republican anti-prohibition paper in Iowa. The new organization is composed entirely of leading Republicans and has the support of a very large element of the party. J. W. Vail, of Des Moines, is president; B. W. Blanchard, of Dubuque, vice-president; Mr. Crawford, of Des Moines, secretary; W. H. Boyd, of Des Moines, treasurer; the Hon. John Macy and

L. J. Wells, of Des Moines, directors. Col. Ellsworth has been chosen State lecturer and organizer. The Ledger, of this city, was made the official paper. The organization as incorporated is distinctively Republican in its character and will have 40,000 members within six months. Col. Ellsworth will organize local societies in every city and town in Iowa. Each member is pledged to use all honorable means to secure the repeal of the present prohibitory law, and to vote for no man who is not in sympathy with that policy. The organization will at once open headquarters in Des Moines and begin an active canvass of the State. It has no part in politics, but will labor to one end, and that the repeal of the prohibitory law and the substitution therefor of a rigid license law.—Inter-Ocean, Sept. 18.

FRANCIS MURPHY'S WORK.

It is well known, however, that Mr. Murphy is a great advocate of moral suasion, and seems to believe that the horrors of the rum-business are to be overcome in that way instead of by prohibition. For years and years he has been eloquently appealing to drunkards to reform, has induced thousands to sign the pledge, and has made it pay, too. But how many saloons has his moral suasion closed? To what extent has it curtailed the rum-business? To what extent has he made it safer for our boys to run the gauntlet of high-licensed saloons? We venture the assertion that the few years of prohibition (which does not (?) prohibit, you know) in Iowa alone have reformed more drunkards, closed more saloons, and saved more boys and young men from becoming drunkards than all the moral-suasion work Mr. M. has ever done. We had the honor of laboring with him a whole week once in Lebanon, Pa. His addresses were eloquent, a great many signed the pledge, and we paid him $100 and entertainment for his work. The day after he left we met a prominent saloon-keeper, and in a very friendly mood he said, "Well, you've had Murphy here. He is an eloquent fellow. I heard him myself, and was pleased. Indeed, it is a good thing you temperance people hold these meetings, and I hope you'll keep on. It kind o' checks the saloon-business up, keeps it within the bounds of respectability, keeps it from getting too d—n bad. Why, I gave a dollar myself toward paying Murphy." The fact is, all the more intelligent saloon-keepers are friendly to moral suasion and to Mr. Murphy. And why should they not be, when the statistics show that of the toppers who sign the pledge and reform only one in forty stays reformed? To say the least, is not that kind of temperance work which receives the approval of saloon-keepers a very questionable work?—Ex.

A MASONIC MAYOR AND SUNDAY SALOONS.

[From the Chicago Evening Journal, Oct. 2.]

"Political influence" has been too much for Mayor Cregier, and most of the saloon-keepers whose places he had closed during a spasm of reform, because they had disobeyed his Sunday-closing order, received back their licenses this morning, and will now run as if nothing had happened. The exceptions to this act of dispensation are William McDowell, Greenwood avenue and Seventy-seventh street; Ed. O'Donnell, Dekoven and Canal streets; James McCormick, 61 North Clark street, and J. F. Priestly, 823 West Madison street, whose offenses were too grievous to be overlooked.

"We have granted the violators of the law their licenses again," said Chief Hubbard to a Journal reporter, "because they have promised to abide by iron-clad rules in the future. They know that we mean business and that if they are ever closed again it will be for good. O'Dowd, McCormick, McDowell and Priestly will not be allowed to open at present, and perhaps not at all. Their places have the reputation of being tough joints, and such resorts will be closed up wherever and whenever we find them. The rest, however, will be allowed to continue so long as they obey the law."

The news was received around the City Hall with nods of the head and knowing smiles and winks, but no one appeared in the least surprised.

"The Mayor had to do something to satisfy the clamor that was being made about the open Sunday saloons, and so he made a bluff at being willing to uphold the city ordinance as he interprets it, by closing up its violators," said a prominent member of the administration. "But," he continued, "while the martyrs suffered a little by the temporary stoppage of their business, they at no time felt that they were in danger of being permanently deprived of their licenses. Not a bit of it. They knew their power and that the Mayor was not blind to his obligation to them for his election. That they argued well the order returning to them their licenses is indisputable evidence. About the other four? Oh, you'll find them open in a few days. It was thought best not to cut away all semblance of reform at once, but after the storm which the returning of licenses will raise blows over, you'll find them running again."

NOTICES.

OHIO.

Dear brethren in Christ, together with all who desire the purity of the church and the maintenance of justice and civil equality: Recent developments in Chicago and elsewhere of the inherent nature and tendency of the secret lodge system to promote and conceal crime, to pervert justice and corrupt public morals, and, above all, to subvert and destroy the religion of our Lord Jesus Christ, makes it more than ever important that we renew and press forward our warfare with the "unfruitful works of darkness."

After conferring and corresponding with some of the leading friends of the reform in this State, it has been determined to call our annual meeting at Senecaville, Gurnsey county, Oct. 22, 1889. Our meeting will, D. V., be held in the Wesleyan Methodist church, and be opened Tuesday, Oct. 22, at 7:30 P. M., and continue, if thought best, during the 23rd and 24th. Let there be a full attendance. By request.

H. H. HINMAN,
Agent of N. C. A.

Persons attending the Ohio Annual Meeting should come by the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad to Morgan Junction (near Cambridge, Guernsey county), and there they will find trains at 11 A. M. and at 4 P. M. which will take them (four miles) to Senecaville. Arrangements will be made for entertainment. Persons expecting to be present and desiring entertainment will write to Rev. E. Thompson, Senecaville, Ohio.

ILLINOIS STATE CONVENTION.

The annual Convention of the Illinois Christian Association will be held in Elgin, November 5th and 6th, opening on the evening of the 5th. The work of this Association in saving men from the secret orders, should command the attention and secure the co-operation of all Christian churches and patriotic citizens. Among the interesting features of this convention will be an oratorical contest by the College students of Northern Illinois, and addresses by Col. George R. Clarke of the Pacific Garden Mission, Chicago; and Miss E. E. Flagg, New England agent of the N. C. A. Other addresses are expected from Mrs. Gleason, one of the most popular of the W. C. T. U. speakers of New England, Rev. L. A. Johnston of Rockford, President C. A. Blanchard, and Prof. J. N. Bedford. The business of the convention will have an important bearing on the work during the year to come, and every sympathizer with the objects of the Association is most cordially invited to be present. The Executive Committee also make a special request of all Christian churches to be represented by a delegation appointed for the purpose.

WM. WISHART, President.

HENRY L. KELLOGG, Secretary.

NEW YORK.

To the friends of the anti-secrecy cause in New York, greeting.

DEAR FRIENDS:—We believe the time has come when we should again assemble in convention to further the interests of our cause in this State. As the lodge has but recently asserted its right to try, condemn and execute its offending members, as evinced in the case of Dr. Cronin, we deem it an opportune time to again rally our forces and join our protest with those proclaimed in thunder tones through the land. You are therefore requested to meet in Houghton, Alleghany county, N. Y., at two o'clock Wednesday, October 23rd, to elect officers for the ensuing year, discuss questions pertaining to the furtherance of the cause, and such business as may properly come before you. All churches in sympathy are requested to send delegates. The convention will continue through the following day and evening, and longer if the interests of the cause demand. Able speakers will be present and address the convention. The editor of the Cynosure, ex-President Blanchard; the General Agent, J. P. Stoddard; and the Washington Agent, W. B. Stoddard, are expected. They are too well known to need comment. Letters have been written Rev. N. Wardner and others inviting them to address the convention. Will not everyone who feels interested make a special effort to be present, and come praying that this may be the grandest convention we have ever held in the State, and greatly further the cause it represents?

Houghton is on the Rochester branch of the Western N. Y. and Penn. R. R., seventy-two miles south of Rochester. For further information address, W. B. Stoddard, Dale, N. Y. F. W. CAPWELL, Pres.

BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE OLD TESTAMENT.

LESSON III.—Fourth Quarter.—Oct. 20.

SUBJECT.—David's Thanksgiving Prayer.—2 Sam. 7: 18-29.

GOLDEN TEXT.—In everything give thanks: for this is the will of God in Christ Jesus concerning you.—1 Thess. 5: 18.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

DAILY READINGS.—M.—2 Sam. 7: 1-17. T.—2 Sam. 7: 18-29. W.—1 Chron. 17: 1-15. T.—1 Chron. 17: 16-27. F.—Psa. 2: 1-12. S.—Psa. 72: 1-20. S.—Luke 1: 32, 33, 68-79.

COMMENTS ON THE S. S. LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. David's Humility. Vs. 18-20. David never forgot or was ashamed of his former low estate. He seems rather to delight in adverting to it as a background on which to paint in more vivid colors God's wonderful goodness in so exalting him from the humble shepherd boy and persecuted outlaw, to be king over his people Israel—that people which was to Jehovah as the apple of his eye. But David was an Oriental, and to the Oriental mind this was indeed "a small thing" beside the promise that his line should hold the scepter forever, which was not according to any historical precedent, for the throne of an Eastern ruler was never safe from violence and usurpation. A blessing so far-reaching, extending to the end of time, was beyond even human thought, and well might David exclaim in his first overwhelming sense of wonder and gratitude, "And is this the manner of man, O Lord God." Words fail him, but he can rest in the consciousness that God knows his heart. Blessed state! when the soul has nothing it would hide from God.

2. David's Patriotism. Vs. 21-24. Had David been possessed by the common spirit of kings, which is the same whether they rule kingdoms or the stock exchange, he would have been absorbed in mere contemplation of the splendid destiny awaiting him and his family. But he was that most rare thing in history, a royal patriot, and his thoughts at once take a wider range. It was not for David's sake, but for Israel's sake primarily that the Lord was thus blessing him. It was to honor his own word of promise given to Abraham, and it was a proof of David's singular fitness for such a high place that he could so understand it. The honor which comes from men inclines to selfishness; not so the honor which comes from God. One thought follows on the other; that as there is no other being like God, so there is no other nation like Israel. Christians who believe in and practice holiness are often called peculiar, but God does not want a people such as other gods rule over, the gods of fashion and wealth and worldly pleasure. He has redeemed his people that they may be holy like himself. God never gives us great and unexpected blessings because we are special favorites of heaven; but just as David could not think of his own happy fortunes separate from Israel, so the Christian in his hour of greatest joy and prosperity remembers Zion.

3. David's Prayer. Vs. 25-29. David seems to seek to relieve his heart so over-charged with joy and wonder by a series of reiterated petitions that God would do this thing he had promised. In verse 25 he gives it as a reason that "because God had revealed the blessing in store for him; he finds it in his heart to pray for it." We have a right to plead God's promises, not that he will be forgetful of them, but we need ourselves to be reminded of them. Should we find it in our hearts to pray for eternal life if we had no promise of it? or even for our daily bread, or the least material good if we had no warrant for doing so in his Word? When the cause of truth seems crushed, we know that it will rise again. This gives us strength not only to suffer for the right but to pray for its triumph. The saloon, in this its hour of apparent victory, is nearer its final overthrow than it ever was before; and strong and defiant as is the lodge power, we can pray for its complete destruction, saying like David, "Thou hast revealed it unto thy servant." God is great, and he loves to have us ask of him great things. Let us not be afraid to take him at the full measure of his promises, remembering that "he is able to do abundantly above all that we ask or even think."

HELPFUL THOUGHTS FROM PELOUBET'S QUARTERLY.

DAVID'S PRAYER.—Note in the prayer (1) David's humility; (2) his gratitude, his thankful spirit; (3) his faith in God's promises; (4) its wide reach; (5) its earnestness.

THE ANSWER was vastly beyond all David could ask or imagine. David asked for little and God gave much. He asked for brass and God gave gold.

The words for ever, emphatically twice repeated, show very distinctly that this prophecy embraces the throne of Christ, according to the angel's interpretation as given in Luke 1: 31-33. This is also brought out fully in Ps. 89: 29, 36, 37. See also Dan. 7: 13, 14; Isa. 9: 6, 7; Jer. 23: 5, 6; 33: 14-21; Ezek. 34: 24; Zech. 12: 7, 8; Hos. 3: 5, etc.—Cook. Christ was the son of David, and inherited his kingdom. Soon after Christ's death, the authority and almost existence as a separate nation was taken away from the Jews, at the destruction of Jerusalem; but before this time Christ set up his kingdom, which was David's kingdom in another form, for David's kingdom was at that time the visible kingdom of God, in the world. And thus David's kingdom, through his descendant and heir, still continues, and will abide forever, bringing all nations and peoples under its sway, and more than realizing all the visions of glory which filled the Jewish heart.

The Buffalo church were 32-degree Masons. He had thirteen Masons at present in his church, and nearly all his men belonged to some secret society.

Rev. Russbridge has but recently come from the Methodist to the U. P. church. He is pastor of a mission church which was recommended by this presbytery to the board of church extension for a loan of $3,000 and a donation of $2,000 to pay their church debt. As we dined at the same place my work was naturally discussed. I have seldom found a more ardent advocate of secret societies than this man. "Why," said he, as he waxed warm in the defence of his lodge, "I'd rather be a Mason when traveling than a U. P. minister, as far as obtaining help is concerned. Were I in need people might doubt my being a U. P. pastor, but I could make myself known as a Mason," etc., etc. Any man who would use such flimsy, unreasonable and illogical arguments as he presented on this question, is not, in my judgment, a fit instructor of the people.

The evening conference was called together late. A number of extempore speeches were made by Revs. Dodd, Russell and others. After 9 o'clock the moderator, Rev. Russbridge, discovered that they were trespassing on the order of the day—my address. I thanked the presbytery for the courtesy extended, and advised, as the hour was advanced, to continue their discussion. I made a few remarks, however, exhorting them to stand by the position the church had taken in opposing the lodge. One way for the pastors to get money for church work was to keep it from going to the lodge. Where people are interested there their money goes. A man cannot pay to support the cause of Christ as he ought if he is paying to a Christ-excluding lodge.

Dear brethren and friends in the United Presbyterian church, the question stares you in the face. It is lodge, or no lodge? Christ, or no Christ? Do you believe in the noble stand your church has taken? Then don't call Masons from the Methodist church to build up your missions. I do not like to write in this way, but Christ's truth demands it. This snake in the grass, this underhanded, sneaking thing of darkness will have you in its control, or rend your church in twain as it has others, unless you awake to the needs of the hour. W. B. STODDARD.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts, Field Secretary of American Sabbath Union, has traversed thirty-four States and Territories in his transcontinental tour, lecturing in the chief cities and organizing Sabbath Associations and Sunday Closing Leagues in States, counties and cities. Three years ago but two States were organized, namely, Maryland and New Jersey. (There were also city organizations in Philadelphia, New York and Chicago.) When the American Sabbath Union began its work at the opening of this year there had been added to the list of organized States, Illinois, Iowa, Dakota and Kentucky. The American Sabbath Union's Field Secretary has since assisted in organizing Ohio, Virginia, Missouri, Minnesota, Colorado, Wyoming, Montana, Washington, California, New Mexico and Kansas, besides two county and ten city associations. He has also arranged conventions for organization in Louisiana, Arkansas, Wisconsin, Utah, Oregon and Arizona, besides several counties. Let the other States, counties and towns fall into line and help on the fight against Sunday toil and dissipation. A "Form of Constitution" and leaflets on "Sabbath Associations" can be had for the purpose by addressing the Field Secretary at 23 Park Row, N. Y., whence his mail will be regularly forwarded.

—The United Presbyterian Theological Seminary at Allegheny City opened this year with fifty-three students.

—Rev. Galusha Anderson, D.D., has accepted the chair of homiletics and pastoral theology in the Baptist Theological Seminary, Morgan Park, Ill.

—Forty-nine missionaries sent out by the A. B. C. F. M. have either recently set sail, or soon will, for foreign lands. Twenty go to Turkey, four to India, seventeen to China and eight to Japan. A farewell meeting, three hours long, was held in Boston.

—The Moravians, though small in number and wealth, have sent out during the last century 25,000 missionaries, and expended £60,000 yearly. They have nine mission ships. If all other evangelical churches did as well, what a power they would be!

—Rev. T. E. Holliday and wife, sent out as missionaries by the Third United Presbyterian Church, Pittsburg, started for India a few days ago. Rev. T. E. Cummings and wife, sent by the Fourth Church, Rev. E. E. Fife, sent by the Second Church, and W. N. Nichols, by the First Church, Allegheny City, will leave for Egypt in a short time. Also Rev. E. M. Giffin, sent by the church at large.

—The Evangelical Alliance for the United States will hold a national meeting in Trenton Temple, Boston, the 4th, 5th and 6th of December next. A most attractive program has been prepared, including the names of many eminent clergymen and laymen. The meeting is expected to equal in interest and influence the great Washington Conference of 1887. Information concerning special rates of travel and entertainment will be given to the public in due time.

—The first foreign missionary institute ever established in the United States opened in Boston Oct. 1, under the presidency of the Rev. A. J. Gordon, D.D., at the Baptist Tabernacle in Bowdoin square. The object is to supply to those called to the missionary labor, who are unable to avail themselves of the usual advantages, the best possible training for the work. Both sexes are admitted. The lines of study will be systematic. Practical theology will be taught by the Rev. F. L. Chapell, and exegetical studies of the Bible by Boston clergymen. The study of Christian missions, and the history of the same, will be under the charge of the Revs. A. T. Pierson, D.D., of Philadelphia; William Ashmore, D.D., returned missionary from China; H. Gratian Guinness, of London, Eng., and E. F. Merriam, D.D., of Boston. There will also be a course of medicine.

—A correspondent of the British Weekly writes: "Rev. Dr. Pentecost, of America, has been doing excellent work in Edinburgh during the past two months. He has preached twice every Sabbath in the pulpit of Free St. Andrew's Church, one of our most influential congregations, whose much-esteemed pastor, Rev. R. J. Sandeman, is now recruiting his health by foreign travel. These ministrations have met with the greatest acceptance, and been followed by the best spiritual results. He has at the same time held Bible readings four or five times a week in the afternoons, attended by six or seven hundred hearers, who have listened to his clear and closely-reasoned addresses with evident intelligence and delight. And in addition to this he has conducted evangelistic services six nights a week, first in the church and afterwards in the Free Assembly Hall, which have always been well attended, but on Sabbath evenings have overflowed into the adjoining hall. Dr. Pentecost's addresses are more intellectual than emotional. They are calm, sensible and earnest. They have all the logical argument, the keen insight, and the incisive force so characteristic of the best style of the cultured American. They are thoroughly evangelical in their spirit and reverent in their tone. Dr. Pentecost's evident aim is to hold up Christ as the grand object of faith, and to exalt that Word which God has magnified above all his name. Such teaching cannot fail to be followed by the best and most enduring results."

The Chief Reason for the marvellous success of Hood's Sarsaparilla is found in the fact that this medicine actually accomplishes all that is claimed for it. Its real merit has won for Hood's Sarsaparilla a popularity and sale greater than that of any other blood purifier. It cures Scrofula, all Humors, Dyspepsia, etc. Prepared only by O. L. HELPFUL HINTS.

A few oyster shells will remove clinkers from the grate.

To polish nickel-plated goods after becoming black and not worn, use rouge or whiting on a rag with a little oil.

Glass may be cut with any hard tool, like a chisel, for instance, if kept constantly wet with camphor dissolved in spirits of turpentine.

For removing paint from iron a mixture of one pound of lime to four pounds of potash and six quarts of water is most efficient. Other proportions of the same materials do not do so well.

For papering whitewashed walls, dissolve ten cents' worth of glue in two-thirds of a pail of water, sweep the walls clean with a broom, then wet with the glue water, using a whitewash brush. When dry, paper in the usual way.

The new pencils introduced by Faber for writing upon glass, porcelain and metals, in red, white and blue, are made by melting together spermacetti, four parts; tallow, three parts, and wax, two parts, and coloring the mixture with white lead, red lead, or Prussian blue, as desired. These pencils are convenient in the laboratory, and save the trouble of labeling.

THE CURE FOR HEART NEURALGIA.

Angina pectoris (agony of the chest) carries off many people, one of whom, according to the newspapers, was the newest, the Rev. E. P. Roe, who expired in one day because of its crushing anguish. Major-General George B. McClellan, according to the published reports of the time, likewise succumbed after twenty-four hours of uncontrollable pain. Just how these patients were treated I am unable to say, but Dr. Richardson, of London, long before General McClellan's death, had received a prize of 25,000 francs from the Academy of Medicine in Paris, for having discovered an almost infallible remedy for angina pectoris, by the administration, in the small doses 1-100 to 1-25 of a grain, of nitro-glycerine! This discovery entitles Dr. Richardson to the never-ending gratitude of every suffering man, woman or child afflicted with angina pectoris.

I know a number of persons who always carry tablets of nitro-glycerine with them, and I am equally certain that all these people, by the use of nitro-glycerine, are living in comparative comfort, who would otherwise have fallen under the insupportable torture of that form of heart neuralgia, the most dreadful of all pains.

HOME-MADE SOAP.

I have found a way in which I can make soap while waiting for the tea-kettle to boil for supper. It is very easy. Get of a druggist or grocer a pound-box of the pulverized lye now sold so cheaply and in such convenient shape. It will cost you fifteen cents. It comes in a neat can, which can be opened with any pen-knife. Dissolve this lye in three pints of cold water. The lye heats the water and you must wait till this heat passes off before making your soap. Melt your grease and strain through a cheese-cloth and weigh five and a half pounds. As soon as this melted grease is cool enough to bear your hand in, pour grease and lye together and stir thoroughly a few minutes and you will see it thicken. Now pour it into a box or dripping-pan lined with greased paper and let it stand in a warm place for twenty-four hours, then cut into bars. It will be ready for immediate use, will keep growing better, is clean and thoroughly satisfactory for dish-washing and the laundry, makes good suds and is economical, having cost you only fifteen cents, the price of your lye, as the grease was saved at odd times. It can be made without fire, as you see it does not have to be boiled or even have boiling water added. Our laundress uses it and says "It is good," and she is apt to be critical.—Good Housekeeping.

Don't waste time and money on worthless compounds, whatever their pretensions; but remember that Ayer's has been the standard Sarsaparilla for nearly half a century and has no equal.

"Sometime ago I found my system entirely run down. I had a feeling of constant fatigue and languor and very little ambition for any kind of effort. A friend advised me to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla, which I did with the best results. It has done me more good than all other medicines I have ever used."—Frank Mellows, Chelsea, Mass.

FARM NOTES.

STORING POTATOES.

A uniform temperature of a few degrees above the freezing point, a moderately dry atmosphere, and exclusion from light, are the essential conditions for keeping potatoes safely through the winter. How best to secure these depends upon various circumstances. Other conditions being equal, a cellar is always to be preferred for storage, yet immense quantities of potatoes are wintered every year in out-door pits. When potatoes form one of the regular market crops of the farm, it pays to have a separate root cellar. This need not necessarily be an expensive structure, but it must be so arranged that the floor is entirely dry at all times, that frost and light can be excluded, and that complete ventilation can be provided when desired. Potatoes, to keep well, must be fully matured, should be dug when the soil is dry, and picked up soon after digging. Exposure to sun and drying winds does not increase their keeping qualities. If at digging time the ground is sufficiently dry so that the tubers come out clean, they may be taken from the field directly to the cellar, provided this can be thoroughly ventilated. If the cellar cannot be kept cool during the fall months, it is better to store the potatoes at first in some dark out-building until the winter sets in earnest, when they are to be brought to the cellar.

The keeping quality of potatoes is seriously injured if they are kept too warm when first brought to the cellar. To prevent this the windows or ventilators should be kept open whenever the outside temperature is lower than that of the cellar, and closed when it is higher, the object being to keep the temperature as near freezing point as possible, without ever allowing it to fall below. A temperature of one or two degrees below thirty-two does not generally injure potatoes materially, especially when the cellar is dry, but if it falls below this point it certainly deteriorates their germinating if not their eating quality. It is not prudent, however, to run such large risks in this direction. Therefore, upon approach of severe cold weather the fore-handed farmer will make provision for emergencies which are sure to occur once in about ten years in the shape of extremely cold, penetrating winds, against which even so-called frost-proof cellars fail to offer sufficient protection. Old carpets thrown over the heaps will protect potatoes against several degrees of frost. Straw or hay will accomplish the same object, but these are less convenient to handle, and when brought in the cellar doors have to be kept open so long as to increase still more the danger of freezing. An oil stove should constitute an indispensable adjunct to every root cellar. It costs but a few dollars, lasts a lifetime, and with an expenditure of a dime for oil its use during a very cold night may prevent the loss of a season's entire crop. Whenever the temperature in the cellar falls below the freezing point the stove should be placed in the coldest part of the cellar and lighted. It is astonishing how quickly the warming influence of even a small oil stove makes itself felt. In the absence of a stove a few lamps kept burning during cold nights are often sufficient to keep frost out of a small cellar, but half a dozen ordinary lamps do not give as much heat as a medium-sized oil stove.

To maintain the proper degree of moisture in the atmosphere of a cellar is almost as important as the right temperature. If it is too dry the potatoes shrink and lose from ten to twenty per cent of their weight, and if it is too damp the tubers are apt to rot. The latter condition is the one most frequent met with, and to counteract it and drive out the super-abundant moisture, the oil stove comes again into excellent service. By keeping it burning on a damp day for a few hours, while the ventilators or upper windows are open, the greater amount of moisture will be driven out of the cellar as if by magic. But few cellar floors are so dry that it is safe to place potatoes directly upon them, as the moisture rises from below and penetrates the entire heap. The easiest way to guard against

A NEW TREATMENT.
Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membrane of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact, and the result of this discovery is that a simple remedy has been discovered which permanently cures the most aggravated cases of these distressing diseases by a few simple applications made (two weeks apart) by the patient at home. A pamphlet explaining this new treatment is sent free by A. H. DIXON & SON, 337 and 339 West King Street, Toronto, Canada.

PAGAN COUNTERFEITS

IN THE

Christian Church.

A pamphlet of 52 pages, by Chas. A. S. Temple.

The following from Rev. H. H. Hinman shows his estimate of its contents:

"I have read with great interest 'Pagan Counterfeits in the Christian Church' by Chas. A. S. Temple. I regard the subject discussed as important, and its presentation both able and timely. There is a most manifest drift in all our Protestant denominations towards unauthorized ritualism and the substitution of human inventions in place of the simplicity of the Gospel, as given by Christ and his apostles. In calling attention to this tidal wave of formalism, the author has conferred a lasting benefit on the church as of Protestantism."

The object of this volume is to give to that great army who are fast hastening toward the "great beyond" some practical hints and helps as to the best way to make the most of the remainder of that now is, and to give comfort and help like that is to come.

"It is a tribute to the Christianity that honors the gray head and refuses to consider the old man a burden or an obstacle. The book will aid and comfort every reader."—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

"The selections are very precious. Springing from such numerous and pure fountains, they can but afford a refreshing and healthful draught for every aged traveller to the great beyond."—Witness.

OF THE JESUITS.

Published by an ex-Romanist.

This work is a translation from the Latin of the "Secret Instructions of the Jesuit Society." Its revelations are startling, showing to what depths of deceit the Jesuit priest and all connected with this Order of "Spies" and "Traitors" will descend to accomplish their unholy aims. It is printed in the original Latin with the English translation parallel, thus doing away with the anticipated charge of forgery by those who set a premium on murder and treason.

A history of the Order of Jesuits and their expulsion from every Catholic country is given; also, the reason why the Public Schools must go.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

Foundations for the new and great library of Congress are now building. General Casey, the engineer in charge, has about $6,500,000 allowed him for the structure. The library will be large enough to serve for ninety years, and with small additions for 120.

The special train bearing the members of the All-American congress left by the Pennsylvania railroad Thursday morning for their tour of the country. The first stopping place was at West Point, N. Y., where an interesting ceremony took place, including a military salute, and battalion review of cadets, and the unveiling of the portraits of Gen. Grant, Sherman and Sheridan, presented to the United States Military Academy by George W. Childs.

COUNTRY.

Returns from the elections in the new States indicate the success of the Republican tickets in the Dakotas and Washington, with the result in Montana in doubt, both parties claiming the State. Prohibition and woman suffrage are said to have been defeated in Washington, while in South Dakota prohibition has been successful, and the minority representation scheme has been rejected. The Republicans will have about 150 majority on joint ballot in the legislature, and Pierre has been chosen as the capital. In North Dakota the vote on prohibition is ahead nearly 2,000.

The constitutionality of the Iowa prohibitory liquor law was reaffirmed by the Supreme Court Friday in an action in replevin involving the right to the possession of 122 quarter-barrels, 171 eighth-barrels, and eleven cases of beer, all in sealed vessels bearing United States internal-revenue stamps over the plugs. The goods were shipped to John Leisy, a resident of Keokuk, and agent for the plaintiff, and were offered for sale in unbroken packages.

The citizens' permanent relief committee, which has charge of the Johnstown relief fund contributed by Philadelphia, voted to appropriate $10,000 to the Philadelphia Red Cross society, to aid in carrying on the camp hospital at Johnstown, and $100,000 to the State flood relief commission.

It is reported that thirty of fifty-three students in Dartmouth College junior class will leave the college if one of their number, who was expelled for smashing a freshman's door, is not reinstated.

Five hundred Illinois liquor dealers, at the tenth annual meeting of their State Protective Association, passed resolutions equivalent to endorsing the Harper high license law.

D. D. Shafer, of Versailles, Ohio, was shot at three times on his way home from a recent Prohibition meeting, one ball passing through the crown of his hat. A short time previous he received a letter from the White Caps warning him to "let up on his prohibition work and keep his mouth shut, or there would be one less vote for Helwig."

Dr. T. W. Graydon, of the board of public affairs, Cincinnati, Ohio, whose hobby is to see children in the parks, Wednesday completed arrangements whereby in future all children in Burnet Woods park on Sundays shall have free all the pure milk they can drink. On a late Sunday over 3,000 children visited the park.

The steamship Wyoming, of the Guion line, brought to New York Oct. 2 110 Mormon converts, mostly Germans, from Turingia. Over half of them were young girls between the ages of 13 and 18 years. The entire lot was grouped in families, and efforts to discover any of them who were without a legal and natural guardian, so they could be detained, were of no avail. Supt. Simson, of Castle Garden, said, however, that he was confident that many of the elder people who claimed to be the parents of the girls were not related to them in any way.

Fire broke out in Slaton's store, on Washington street, Grand Haven, Mich., Oct. 1, at 1 o'clock in the morning, and in a few minutes it had communicated to a meat market adjoining the Butler House. A perfect gale was blowing from the west, which drove the flames into the hotel, and in a very short time were pouring from every window of this magnificent structure, in which were situated the First National Bank, Plaff's Insurance Agency, the signal service and the Western Union office. The fire swept over several acres of residence property, driving 5,000 people from their homes, and burning two or three churches.

FOREIGN.

The Bavarian Council of State have decided to make a demand upon the chambers for a credit to enable the government to introduce the telephone throughout the kingdom under government control. The proposal has already excited serious opposition, as the state management of railroads in Bavaria has developed nothing but the grossest incompetence on the part of the officials.

The legal costs on the Irish side of the Parnell Commission, including the expenses for witnesses and reporters, are fully covered by the indemnity fund, and amount to several hundred thousand dollars. Sir Charles Russell received £1,000 for preparing the briefs, in addition to £50 daily. Messrs. Reid and Lockwood each received one-half of those amounts. The expenses of the London Times largely exceed those of the Irish side.

Mrs. MacRae, wife of a Presbyterian clergyman at St. John, N. B., has been poisoned by strychnine, which was in candy that had been sent to her husband by mail. Two other ministers received poisoned candy in the same way. The case, which is most mysterious, is similar to the one at Galt, Ont., when little Meta Cherry was murdered and poisoned by candy sent to the family of Rev. John Ridley. An investigation is in progress.

All the scaffolding about the steeple of a church in course of erection at Altenbruch, in Hanover, fell with a crash, and the seven workmen standing upon it were hurled a distance of 100 feet to the ground. Every one of the unfortunates was instantly killed.

Several thousand Jews, who have been expelled from Russia and have taken temporary refuge in England, intend to go out as colonists to the Argentine Republic, in South America.

A terrible hurricane has visited the island of Sardinia. One hundred persons were buried in the debris of buildings shattered by the storm, and thirty persons were killed.

The province of Cagliari, Italy, has been ravaged by a terrible storm, in which 240 houses were destroyed. Sixteen persons were killed and hundreds were injured. The town of Cagliari suffered severely.

The second ballots which took place in France Sunday excite the least possible interest in England, and appear to be regarded throughout France and in Paris itself with nothing approaching the usual election excitement. The feeling seems to have become general that the republic is now firmly established for many years, and whatever may be the result of Sunday's ballots, France will maintain her existing form of government intact. Boulanger is no longer a factor in any French political problem. Those who have heretofore been his warmest political friends are to-day ready to accept an explanation of the general's disastrous overthrow at the polls, which is anything but creditable to their former chief.

The strike of the dockmen at Rotterdam has ended. Both sides were in conference Wednesday, and the modified terms agreed to were ratified by a meeting of 1,500 strikers. The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Gananda jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemason to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his name to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT to it.

In closing his letter he writes: "I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the 'Anti-Masonic excitement' by a sincere desire first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of 'secret societies.'"

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the latest historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 5 cents.

PRAY AND PLAN for the Congress of Churches to meet in Tremont Temple, Boston, December 11th and 12th next.

Last July Mr. Warner, "Grand Commander" of the G. A. R., issued a proclamation on the rate of fare to the Milwaukee brewers' entertainment, otherwise the "grand encampment." Therein he threatened the railroads with the retaliation of the lodge if they refused longer a cent-a-mile fare. "If the railroads persist in refusing," he said, "the comrades will have it in their power to settle with them hereafter, when they are not hiding behind our friends." The time has now so far past that this ominous threat may any day be put in execution. Are the railway companies making any arrangement to resist the attack? Probably not. The G. A. R. do not throw bombs after the style of the anarchist. No, their style of "getting even" is more Masonic. If the threat should prove to be any thing but idle mouthing, we may expect it will be executed quietly, secretly, and with a hidden hand.

The National Congregational Council sitting at Worcester ran upon a color line, which was stretched up from Georgia. Colored churches in that State connected with the American Missionary Association have for years been recognized in the meetings of the denomination. But a few white churches have been established in that State who dwell apart from their colored brethren. Their delegates knocked for admission, and there was a struggle at the door, some to open, some to shake hands with the friends without, but not to admit them until their record was right at home. The Worcester Spy reports an absorbing debate in which Dr. Quint, the Freemason, sought notoriety. The excellent resolutions of Dr. Dwinell of California and Mr. Bradford of New Jersey were voted down and the delegates admitted on a compromise which may work ill for the denomination in the future.

A Masonic exchange notices the fact that the young Emperor William of Germany is the first of his line for several generations who has not been a Freemason. In connection it is stated that a strong Anti-masonic sentiment has developed in that country. This is most welcome news. Masonry began with Frederick the Great as companion and friend of infidelity. It was in favor at court in the person of the atheist Voltaire. It had no desire in those days to be called the "handmaid of religion." To the infidel Frederick the followers of Albert Pike bow as patron saint. It is cheering, therefore, to know that a prince of Frederick's line has thrown off this base order, and that his people respond to his sentiment. The principles maintained by Luther and the German reformers could never tolerate the secret lodge system.

Says the Catholic Review of Archbishop Corrigan's pastoral letter on the Pope's last encyclical: "It is the first note of a cry which will give American Protestants to understand that the papal throne is still a fact to be reckoned with." Let the Archbishop and his paper make it a cry loud enough to make the Protestants who are really Americans hear. That is all we ask. The trouble is the Jesuit power is like the copper head that strikes without warning. Let them speak also so that intelligent Catholics can understand them. Too many honest and well meaning men in that church have long enough been duped. When they understand that they are required to submit to a foreign monarch, a king without a kingdom, their rebellion will be short and successful.

"The Pension office has given the President much concern," says an Inter-Ocean special of Thursday last. A Times special of next day explains it. The two are worth preserving side by side as a part of the lodge record in the history of government control. Says the Times: "Last night it was considered reasonably certain that ex-Congressman Steele of Indiana would succeed Tanner. To-night the opinion prevails that Steele's boom has grounded. His collapse is but a repetition of the old story—he could not secure the indorsement of Commander-in-Chief Alger of the Grand Army. It begins to look very much as if the Grand Army magnates were trying to embarrass the President. Tanner's friends here openly declare that the President dare not appoint any man commissioner of pensions who is not indorsed by Alger, and in the same breath they assert that Alger will not indorse any man who is not approved by Tanner. In consequence there is a hitch. The man who can readily secure Grand Army approval will not be appointed by the President, and men like Judge Rae of Minnesota and ex-Congressman Steele, who are in favor with the President, will not be approved of by the leaders of the Grand Army of the Republic. As a matter of fact the President is no nearer a solution of the pension commissionership to-night than the hour after he received William Warner's positive declination."

The Philadelphia Times lately published a volume of truth regarding the pension business in a cartoon representing Uncle Sam handing out dollars by the double handful to an old soldier. The latter in tattered clothing and resting on a crutch received the stipend in a broken hat through which the money falls; but before it can reach the ground the stout beaver of a fat claim agent thrust in from behind catches every dollar. Very significantly the old hat is marked "G. A. R." The old soldier who puts his faith in the bad hat of the Grand Army and the Shylock of the claim agencies is putting water into a broken cistern which can hold none. An old veteran, disabled for life, who has been much about the country in soldiers' homes and army reunions, said lately that he never joined the Grand Army, because he saw the organization was an opportunity for "three-months" men to put themselves forward in politics, and make a great ado for a distribution of the treasury surplus.

Public opinion is rapidly forming on the Grand Army treasury raid since Commissioner Tanner was dropped. President Harrison himself doubtless better understands the situation than he did last March, since he finds it no ordinary task to secure another Commissioner. Below are the views in brief of two widely read and influential papers on this matter. The first is from the New York Witness: "Commissioner Tanner and private Dalzell have, we imagine, between them made an end of Tanner's political prospects. At the same time they have made things pretty warm for some of their best friends. The trouble with them is that they have imagined that the Grand Army was lord paramount of the Republic, and that with its backing they did not need to care what they said. They and some others will get their minds disabused of that idea by and by. The Grand Army is a mighty power in politics because public sentiment is very strongly in favor of being not only just but liberal to the soldiers. But once let the people get the idea that the political power of the G. A. R. is dangerous to the best interests of the Republic and that power will cease to exist. The vaporings of Tanner and Dalzell will go far to promote this sentiment." The Advance says: "It is twenty-five years since the War ended. To-day there are over 345,000 persons who are drawing pensions from the government. During the last year over $88,000,000 was paid out for pensions. There is a clamor for still further modification of the pension laws which would increase the amount of payments to more than $100,000,000. It is claimed that pensions should be given to any man whose name was ever on the enlistment roll as being one who 'saved the country.' But the 'boys in blue' were by no means the only ones who in those awful days toiled and suffered and sacrificed for the country. If every one is now, out of the public treasury, to be paid for his patriotism and his devotion to the cause of American freedom, where would the end be? and what would become of the spirit of self-forgetting patriotism itself?"

THE RELATION OF CHURCH AND STATE.

BY REV. J. M. FOSTER.

This has been the vexed question of all the ages. The papacy thought it was settled when the church became the supreme ruler of the state in the exaltation of Stevens in 756. The Prelatic party supposed it fixed when King Henry VIII. of England made the state the sole arbiter of the church in 1534. The Constitutional Convention in Philadelphia in 1787 imagined it was disposed of when they embodied the secular theory of government in the fundamental law of this land. But the problem is not yet solved. Neither the enthronement of the church by Constantine in 323, nor her divorce by America in 1787, correspond with the Scriptural model, or peacefully adjust the intimate and delicate relations existing between church and state.

1. According to the Scriptures, church and state are mutually separate and independent divine institutions. They exist by the decree of God, and are answerable to him. "I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven, and whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth shall be bound in heaven, and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven." This divine ordination establishes the church's independence. "The powers that be are ordained of God;" "Rulers are God's ministers to thee for good." This determines the freedom of the state. From the beginning church and state were separate. It was so in the Jewish economy. The Jewish church was not the state, nor was the state the church. Each had its distinct rulers, courts, laws, subjects, penalties and duration. Moses, Joshua, David, Solomon, Hezekiah, and Zerubbabel represented the state; Aaron, Eleazar, Abiathar, Zadok, Azariah and Joshua represented the church. "These are the two anointed ones that stand by the Lord of the whole earth." The church had the synagogue and the ecclesiastical Sanhedrim, the state the court of the gate and the civil Sanhedrim. Ceremonial laws belonged to the church, judicial laws to the state. Proselytes were always members of the church, but not always of the state, and scandalous offenders against the ceremonial law were debarred from the fellowship of the church, while permitted to enjoy civil rights. The penalties of the church were purely ecclesiastical, as casting out of the synagogue; those of the state extended to fine, and even to death. The Jewish state ended when it became a Roman province; the church in the destruction of the temple and the scattering abroad of the Jewish people. "The co-ordinate jurisdictions of church and state are mutually distinct and independent. The church has no formal jurisdiction over the state, as such, and the state has no formal jurisdiction over the church. The ministers and members of the church are subject to the state in things civil, and the ministers and members of the state, if members of the church, are subject to the spiritual courts in things spiritual. The ministers of religion are more immediately the guardians of faith and judges of doctrine; the ministers of the state are more immediately the guardians of law, and judges of its violation. It does not belong to the state to prescribe the terms of the church's ministerial or Christian communion, to appoint her officers, to convene her courts, to dictate her constitution, or administration, in her doctrine, worship, discipline, or government, or exercise an appellate jurisdiction over her censures; as little does it belong to the rulers of the church to appoint the rulers of the state, convene its courts, enact its laws and execute their sanctions, by assuming the sword. The jurisdictions of both are final. Church and state are each of them supreme in its own sphere—the church in things spiritual, and the state in things temporal. The church gives effect to her own laws ecclesiastically, and the state to its civilly. The latter is relatively free to sanction, and give civil effect or not, to ecclesiastical decisions; and the former is free to approve or not of civil enactments, and give them effect ecclesiastically, as in the case of national fasts and thanksgivings." (Lectures on Second Reformation.) The state deals with external conduct. Its province is to prevent the violation of law and to encourage obedience. "Rulers are a terror to evil-doers and a praise to them that do well." The church's sphere is the conscience and the heart. She deals with matters of faith. The moral law is both a civil and an ecclesiastical code. In the former sense the state is its keeper, in the latter the church. It is the state's duty to suppress open idolatry, as Asa did in Judah. It is the church's privilege to enforce the worship of the true God. It belongs to the state to prohibit all public Sabbath desecration. It is obligatory upon the church to consecrate the day to God. The state must crush polygamy and banish speedy and easy divorce. The church teaches husbands to love their wives, and wives to obey their husbands. The state punishes the external act of covetousness, as Achan in the camp. The church strikes it down in the heart. The church and state are mutually separate and independent kingdoms, each subject in its sphere to the mediatorial throne.

2. According to the Scriptures, the state and its sphere exist for the sake of, and to serve the interests of the church. Not to mention the fact that Christ is "head over all things to the church," it is expressly asserted, "Kings shall be thy nursing fathers, and their queens thy nursing mothers;" "The nation and kingdom that will not serve thee shall perish; yea, those nations shall be utterly wasted;" "The mountain of the Lord's house shall be established in the top of the mountains, and shall be exalted above the hills; and all nations shall flow unto it." The general truth here taught is not far to seek. "Mountains" and "hills" in Scripture signify the greater and smaller kingdoms of the earth. "The mountain of the Lord's house" means the church. And to "be established in the top" of the one, and "exalted above" the other, indicate that the nations shall be the support and defence of the church. Kings becoming "nursing fathers," and queens "nursing mothers," refer to the sustaining care which nations shall exercise over the church, and "serve" signifies the ministry of the nations in providing for her material wants. The essential truth of these prophecies is: The true state will have a wise reference to the church's interests in all its legislative, executive and judicial proceedings. Public vice and crime, immorality and licentiousness—the wild boar from the forest that devours the garden of the Lord—it destroys; and morality, virtue and good order, the handmaids of religion, it promotes and encourages. The expenses of the church in carrying on her public aggressive work, it meets in whole or in part out of the public treasury. Thus the church is protected and exalted by the state. David and Solomon made provision for the building of the temple, and Hiram, King of Tyre, assisted them. Cyrus, King of Persia, issued a decree respecting the rebuilding of the temple, and it is expressly declared that the Lord stirred up his heart to do it. Darius afterward issued an edict to the same effect. Another royal enactment was made by Artaxerxes to the same purpose. And all this was done with divine approval. "Blessed be the Lord God of our fathers, who hath put such a thing as this in the king's heart, to beautify the house of the Lord which is in Jerusalem." The true state will follow their example in serving the interests of the church. "The kings of Tarshish and of the isles shall bring presents; the kings of Sheba and Seba shall offer gifts;" "He shall live and to him shall be given of the gold of Sheba;" "The Gentiles shall come to thy light, and kings to the brightness of thy rising;" "They shall bring gold and incense, and they shall show forth the praises of the Lord;" "Surely the isles shall wait for me, and the ships of Tarshish first, to bring thy sons from far, their silver and their gold with them, unto the name of the Lord thy God, and to the Holy One of Israel, because he hath glorified thee."

3. According to the Scriptures, the church and the true state will exist in friendly recognition and co-operation. Because the state is distinct from the church, it does not follow that it is divorced from her. The Christian family is a divine institution. It is independent of the church; and yet it exists in friendly recognition and co-operation with her. The church will recognize the good offices of the Christian state; and the true state will formally acknowledge its obligation to "serve" the church. They may swear the same covenant bond, in which are embodied the duties which each, in its sphere, owes to the king. The nation and the church of Israel seem to have sworn the same bond at Sinai. The church of the British Isles and the three kingdoms, Scotland, England and Ireland, swore the same covenant in 1643—"The Solemn League and Covenant."

Rev. William Milroy has well said, in reference to "the duty of the state, as such, to enter into alliance with the church of Christ, and to profess, adhere to, and maintain the true religion." "Ever since Christianity became a power among the nations of the world, the minds of legislators have been occupied with the difficult question: Can church and state enter into mutual alliance and yet each prosecute, untrammelled, its respective ends; and exercise, uncontrolled, its important functions? Though the verdict of the Christian people of the United States, if called to-day to answer this question, would probably be overwhelmingly in the negative, yet we conceive the pious, profound and sagacious men of the Second Reformation, more than two hundred years ago, solved the problem correctly, answering in the affirmative. And not only so, but for a brief period in the land of the covenants they presented to the world what has nowhere else been witnessed, the solution in practical operation." May our land soon be thus in covenant with God, and in a state of friendly recognition and co-operation with the church of Christ.

THE CLAN-NA-GAEL NOT AN EXCEPTION.

"Outside the Clan-na-Gael itself it is safe to say that every American citizen above the level of an idiot is opposed to a secret political organization which aims to violate the neutrality laws and obligations of the United States and involve this country in war with a foreign power, and which does not hesitate while in pursuit of these unlawful purposes to decree the death of any of its own members who are accused of violating the rules of the society. All good citizens are opposed to such secret, oath-bound, unlawful societies."

This extract from the Chicago Tribune of the 13th ult., very prettily presents the truth, as far as it is intended, against the pat-riot-ism of the Clan-na-Gael, or United Brotherhood. But how different is the conclusion of all these brotherhoods from the closing words of the above extract: "All good citizens are opposed to such secret, oath-bound, unlawful societies!" We can imagine the cry of horror that would fill the polluted atmosphere of lodgery if our citizens should really awake to the fact that the principle on which such societies are based is precisely that which "does not hesitate to decree" and execute the penalties of their orders upon their respective members, be these penalties fines, or boycotts, or death itself; or, in polite lodge phrase, "removal" from the scenes of time.

Every lodge, from the Freemasonry to the Clan-na-Gael, exercises a power over the civil rights of its members independent of the civil power which our country boasts as the protector of the liberty of her citizens. Lodgery is based upon despotism, and anti-Christ is its king for the risen Christ. The King of the kingdom not of this world never gave such demoniacal oaths and authority as these and kindred lodges exercise among us to-day!

If our politicians can detect danger to the state in the United Brotherhood, alias Clan-na-Gael, how much danger was there before our war and in it from Freemasonry? Could the war have been begun without hatching its eggs in their oath-bound lodges? And again, if our citizens are now called on to save themselves and country, how much more should our Christians awaken to the danger to their common Christianity, and try to save it from degradation and the plausible charge of inferiority to the universal brotherhood claimed by Freemasonry! Consider for a moment. Churches expel members when they adopt opinions differing from their creeds, as in the case of the ex-Methodist, H. W. Thomas, now of the "People's" Church—a suitable name, indeed, whose simple confession of faith may be that they have itching ears; or, perhaps, that there is a great "Architect of the Universe." But thus strangely the plea arises that lodgery is more liberal and fraternal, and cultivates universal brotherhood better than Christianity. Yes, and therefore the Christian, the Mohammedan, the Brahmin, etc., may meet in the same lodge as brethren in the same hope of the same "grand lodge above," while each of these are but sects whose members, if they choose, may retain their respective opinions, but under the authority of their common master, Freemasonry.

Christian, are you a lodge member? How dare you attempt to serve two masters, when Jesus said you can not?

NOTES OF GERMAN LIFE.

FROM OUR ARTIST FRIEND IN EUROPE.

We are having a good deal of rain this season, though not so much as last year. It rains nearly every day part of the time, and for three weeks it is cool enough to be October. I wonder how many pounds of cherries a bushel is; isn't it forty at least? Here all fruit is sold by the pound, and when cherries are the very cheapest they are five cents a pound. Usually they are six or seven cents, and now they cost ten cents. Tomatoes are six, gooseberries seven, plums and currants six to eight cents, and miserable, little, hard, tasteless peaches and apricots are ten to twelve cents per pound. When apples are cheap in winter they are never lower than four cents; but they are pretty good sometimes, and so are the oranges. I would feel like giving a dollar or two a pound for some good fruit, if I had money to throw away. Raspberries and blackberries, bananas and water-melons are not to had at all.

There is a great festival of the "Turner" societies in Munich this week, and the streets are quite gay with flags. In the house next to the Duke Max's palace some one has hung out a great American flag. The weather has been bad the whole time. It has rained "pitchforks and hailstones" all the time, and damped and cooled their celebration somewhat. But they can drink just as much beer as ever, if they are wet on the outside.

Miss E— and I went out to Tegernsee and stayed two days. Went to the top of the Hirschberg again and had some fresh air for once. It is the first time in almost three months that I have been in the country. I should hardly know it was summer if other people did not tell me, because Munich looks about the same as it does in winter. O yes! I could know, too, by the number of streets that have the paving up. They seem to have one street after another torn up continually here as soon as it is warm weather. They have been working more than three weeks in this street, and wake me up at six every morning with their screaming and hammering. One of the next streets is having an asphalt pavement made, and the foreman who manages the job and one or two of the workmen are Americans. It sounds funny to us to hear them talk English. The street has the pavement of asphalt on trial, and only for about five blocks, but it is going to cost 180,000 marks. I wonder if it costs so much at home? They say that is about fifteen marks, $3.50, a square yard.

The Shah of Persia has been here lately. He looks very much like a Turk; and wore a fez very much like them. His other clothing was like that of Europeans. Mrs. S— and I went, as nearly every one else did, to see the procession, and waited more than an hour before they came. The streets through which he passed were lined five or six deep on both sides with people. There came first carriages with the highest German officers in their uniforms; then the body-guard of the Prince Regent mounted; the Prince Regent and the Shah in one carriage, and directly after them the Shah's attendants and his favorite, a little boy nine years old, who is called Assiz Sultan, and is already a general of the Persian army. The people shouted "Hoch!" (hurrah), of course, and the Regent bowed on all sides; but the Shah looked as if it was below his dignity to notice the existence of common people, and he was bored at being on exhibition so long, for the carriages were driven at a funeral pace. We could see it all very well. Some of the Shah's attendants amused themselves by nodding and winking at the people, and seemed to enjoy the attention they attracted much more than their master. He had forty servants with him, his own butcher and cook among them, and he will only eat what meat is killed by this butcher. I believe he is a Mohammedan. "They say" when he eats alone he eats with his fingers, and at the great dinner given at court in his honor, where he sat next the Prince Regent, he took tit-bits from his next neighbor's plate and put them in his own mouth; and "they say" when the ladies of the court were introduced to him, he saluted them in the Oriental manner with a kiss. R.

AS TO "METHODS."

We have been thinking that the methods of Christ were divine as well as his truth, and that when the Christian world will use Christ's methods in the propagation of truth there will be a great advance upon some features of the present. Dr. Parkhurst has some very suggestive sentences in this line of thought in a sermon on "The Regenerative Force of the Gospel." His words are: "Christ never patches. The Gospel is not here to mend people. Regeneration is not a scheme of moral tinkering and ethical cobbling. In the Gospel, we move into a new world and under a new scheme. The Gospel does not classify with other schemes of amelioration."

This accords with our thought of the methods of Christ. The way to meet that which is wrong, is to meet it as a wrong. We shall not do well to ameliorate it. If we may not expect those who have been "raised" amid prejudices and ignorance to be leaders for the absolute rectitude of things, those who have not lived where this excuse is available should be the leaders. If some do not lead, none will follow. Where principles were at stake, Christ never gave way to prejudices: He never yielded to that which was in itself wrong. If those to whom he ministered could not come up to his standard, then he waited, but he never compromised. That which is right should not yield to that which is wrong.

It may take a right hand. It may take an eye. But "if thy right hand offend thee, cut it off," and "if thy right eye offend thee, pluck it out." He would not "cut it off" by amputating the finger and gradually disjoining it up to the mark; and plucking out the offending eye is not to bandage it so that it temporarily does not see the evil to which it is attracted. No, the Gospel is not a system of repairs. It is not here to temporize, but to make all things new, and it strikes at the heart of evil and not at its surface.

It was not Christ's method to ignore an evil which confronted him. He did not evade or get around issues. He met them. He answered them. He was an "incarnate conscience" in the land. He knew what was in man. His followers cannot fail when they walk closely with him in the path which he has made plain.—The A. M. A. Magazine.

AN EPISODE IN THE CRONIN TRIAL.

[In connection with observations on this celebrated case, which have appeared from time to time in the Cynosure, the following passage between Judge McConnell and the lawyers, from the Inter Ocean report, is worth preserving entire. The secret society phase of the case was at this time considered at greater length than usual, and the remarks of Judge McConnell, which indicate that he is in sympathy with the lodge, is reviewed at more length on the editorial page. Mr. Forrest is examining a juror in behalf of the defense. Mr. Hynes represents the state:]

Q. Would your opposition to secret societies induce you to discredit the evidence given by members of such societies? A. I do not think I could place implicit confidence in their evidence.

Q. The evidence will probably show that some of these men are members of the Clan-na-Gael society, as it is called, the proper name of which is the United Brotherhood. You have heard of that society? A. Yes.

Q. It may be that some of the witnesses on both sides will be members of that society? A. Yes.

Q. Do I understand you to say that you would refuse to credit the evidence of a witness merely because he was a member of that society? A. I do not think I could give that credence to his testimony which I could to that of a man who had no connection with it.

Q. Would you require corroborative testimony? A. Yes.

Q. Before you would believe such a witness? A. Yes.

Q. Would that be your attitude if you were a juror in the case? A. Yes.

Q. (by the Court)—Did I understand you to say that would be your attitude if you were sworn as a juror in this case? A. Yes, I think it would; my knowledge of human nature leads me to suppose that the evidence of such a man might be biased in that direction.

Mr. Hynes—The question was an unfair one, as it premises that the interest of the organization would be involved.

Mr. Forrest—The question did not do anything of the kind.

The Court—It will be the duty of the juror to decide this case upon all the evidence heard here in the court, and upon the law. Do you mean to say that because a man came here who the testimony disclosed was a member of a particular society you would discredit his evidence? A. Not if the interests of the society were not involved; I do not suppose I should.

Q. Well, if it should appear in the course of the examination that these defendants were members of the same society as some of the witnesses, do you mean to say you would not credit the evidence given by the witnesses as fully as the evidence given by any other witness? A. I do not think I would, because there would be bias in the case.

Q. Well, take this case: Suppose two brothers have a suit in court; under the circumstances you would assume that a brother has a prejudice. Do you mean to say you would discredit the evidence of one of the brothers? A. No, that would be different.

Q. Would you discredit the evidence of a man who belongs to the society any more than you would the evidence given by one of the brothers? A. I think the cases would be different; I think their relationship would be different, and I regard it as such.

Mr. Forrest—I challenge the juror for cause, on the ground disclosed in his examination as to his attitude toward the witnesses.

The Court—Well, certainly, there is no cause shown in that. There is no cause which appears now for a challenge.

Mr. Forrest—The juror evidently has the impression that, being members of the same society, the witnesses are oath-bound.

Q. (the Court)—Do you believe, in this case, you could render a fair and impartial verdict, upon the law and the evidence, regardless of any opinion you may have formed, or any prejudice you may entertain? A. Yes; I should decide it upon the law and the evidence as I view it.

Q. (Mr. Forrest)—But in coming to that verdict, which you call a fair and impartial verdict, I understand you to say you would discredit the testimony given by these witnesses? A. Yes, sir; I would require it to be corroborated.

The Court—I believe this man when he says he can render a fair and impartial verdict, and that he will take the law from the Court.

Q. (by Mr. Forrest)—After what the Court has said to you, do you still say you would discredit the witnesses called on behalf of these men merely because they may be members of the Clan-na-Gael society? A. I do not say that I should discredit them entirely, but I should not give their evidence the same credence I would to that given by a man who was not a member of the society.

Q. I want to find out how much you would discredit their testimony? A. As I said, I would not place the same dependence upon that witness as I would upon a witness who was not a member of the society. I should regard that there was bias in his case.

Q. Would you regard the evidence he gave with suspicion? A. Yes, because I understand that most secret societies are oath-bound.

Mr. Forrest—I renew the challenge.

The Court—I overrule it, and I do so because I do not know that there will be any such evidence.

Mr. Forrest—I am willing to be sworn in this case, and to say that we cannot make a successful defence in this case unless we call some members of the society as witnesses.

The Court—This man's opinion is conditional, entirely. He says if there is an oath-bound society which is involved, he will not be disposed to credit the evidence.

Mr. Forrest—He says he will not credit the evidence given by witnesses who are members of this society.

Mr. Hynes—The counsel will not say that there is an obligation on the members of that society to tell a lie for another.

Mr. Forrest—I do not know that there is.

The Court—This gentleman says that he can render a fair and impartial verdict upon the law and the evidence. It will become his duty to judge of the witnesses on the stand and the evidence they give. I overrule the challenge.

Mr. Forrest—The conclusion at which the juror has arrived is a legal conclusion. He will give a fair and impartial verdict, but in doing that he will discredit some of the witnesses.

The Court—After the Court had explained to him the law, he said he can give them a fair and impartial trial and render the verdict on the law and the evidence.

Q. (by Mr. Forrest)—Do you mean to say you would require the testimony of any member of the Clan-na-Gael society to be corroborated before you would believe it? A. I think I should.

The Court—Without any further testimony or information than you now have, which you say is a mere impression, would you undertake to say you would discredit the evidence of any man who was a member of that society? A. Yes, sir; to a certain extent, I should.

Q. Upon some impression you had as to this particular society? A. I have no prejudice against any association, any secret organization, more than against any other, but my prejudice is based upon my mere general knowledge of secret societies.

Q. Are you going to act upon that general knowledge of secret societies, or will you take the evidence of the witnesses? A. I suppose I will have to take it from the witnesses; but then—

The Court (interrupting)—I want you to answer that distinctly as to whether you will take the evidence of the witnesses taken in court, exclusively? A. I have no opinion in regard to this secret society especially, but it seems to me, and always has seemed to me, that they are oath-bound, and there would be apt to be a little bias on their side in standing by each other.

Q. Suppose nothing appears in the court to support that impression of yours, which I hope is but lightly held, and ought to be, and a man comes upon the stand, and it appears incidentally that he is a member of the Clan-na-Gael society, or some other society, do you propose to discredit his evidence? A. No. I do not; not on outside matters unconnected with the affairs of the society, I should not discredit him at all.

Q. Let me understand that more fully. If some member of the organization known as the Clan-na-Gael should come and testify as to facts tending to show that these men were innocent, would you discredit that evidence? A. No, I do not think I should, unless it in some way affected the society primarily.

The Court—The Court cannot assume for a moment that the interests of the Clan-na-Gael society are in anyway involved in this controversy, or that it will so appear.

Mr. Forrest—One of the issues of this case is as to whether there was a conspiracy in one of the camps of the organization.

Mr. Hynes—Among some members of the camp, and not that the whole camp, by any means, is guilty of the crime. I wish this point to be very clearly and emphatically understood.

The Court—The juror says that unless the interests of the organization is at stake he will assume that the witnesses on either side who may testify, and who are members of that organization, are as good as any other witnesses. The Court cannot assume that the organization will be involved.

Mr. Hynes (emphatically)—The organization, as such, is not involved.

The Court—I overrule the challenge.

THE ORDER OF TONTI.

"Who is Tonti?" is now the question asked by many persons who read of the ostracism of the Jews in secret societies. "The Order of Tonti" is a secret benevolent organization, with headquarters in Philadelphia, where its supreme president, Mr. Wheeler, resides. It has in Chicago twenty-one subordinate lodges, governed by three deputy presidents. The success of the order is such that it has become necessary to establish another deputy presidency to accommodate the increasing membership. A voluminous correspondence between the supreme president and the Chicago authorities resulted over the new presidency. The supreme president ordered the Chicago men not to admit Jews or Negroes to membership; that the Jew was no better than the Chinaman; a curse to any society; and unfit for existence at all in the animal kingdom.

It appears that the Hebrew race constitutes fully one-half the membership of the order in Chicago. This correspondence fell into the hands of a Hebrew officer, who communicated the matter to his fellow religionists. The indignant Jews held a meeting, and now they demand the removal of Mr. Wheeler, or they will remove themselves from the order. It is not generally supposed that Jews seek an entrance to secret societies. They do, and they are the most inveterate society hunters of any race in America. There is not an order from Masons to Tuckpointers but has a large representation of Jews. The societies charge the Jews with selfish and business motives in entering them; hence the opposition. Old Tonti was an Italian, and founded a system which benefited the longest lived. The Jews are a people who cling to life with wonderful tenacity and are perhaps getting too much of the Tontine benevolence. This would be reason enough for the opposition to Jews. The average American wants to have the best of every trade. After you take him on your back across the stream, you must be sure to lay him down very gently. If you stumble at all he is sure to abuse you. Thus it is with Tonti and the Jews. When the order was weak and struggling, the Jews were sought after and caressed. Now the order is flourishing, the Jews are selfish and obnoxious.—Chicago Letter to the Deseret Weekly.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

The Congress of Churches in Boston—Prof. Townsend and Joseph Cook—A hopeful sign—What the lodge is doing—The Non-Secret Endowment Order—Boston Knight Templars departing for Washington—How the government recognizes the lodge—Will Boston entertain the next Grand Encampment—Some noteworthy New England anniversaries—The new monthly—The Boston Missionary Training School—Boston women registering in large numbers—Mrs. Miller and dress reform.

Our indefatigable General Agent and Secretary, Rev. J. P. Stoddard, is stirring the waters in New England with grand effect. Among the prominent clergymen who have signed his Call for a Congress of Churches to discuss the lodge evil, and "consider the relation of this system to civil liberty and the Christian religion," the name of Prof. L. T. Townsend of Boston University, who edits the department of Education in Our Day, carries special weight. He is a veritable giant in the theological arena, and no one who has read his writings or heard him speak, need be told that in him the free schools of our country have a mighty champion.

The Congress will accomplish a most important work if it should do nothing more than simply to enlighten the minds of these anti-Romanist leaders, who are now standing as a bulwark against papal aggressions on that liberty our forefathers left their bones on Burial Hill to secure, that Masonry and Jesuitism are very closely related, and the two will pull together in secret when they have a common end to secure, while all the while keeping up the semblance of mutual antagonism as a blind to Protestant Americans. The amount of ignorance met with among even men of the greatest literary acumen and wide reading, who have given some of the best years of their life to considering the Catholic question, is amazing. There are pages of history which only need to be unsealed before their gaze to convince them that the two reforms are identically one.

Joseph Cook is deeply interested in the proposed Congress, and in conversing on the subject with Secretary Stoddard, used these emphatic words: "This question must be discussed, and now is the time to strike hard blows."

The city election occurs of the tenth of December, and it was not desirable to hold the Congress before that event, with all its attendant political excitement. Tremont Temple has been secured for the eleventh and twelfth. Of the speakers and their themes, I can at present give but an imperfect program. Dr. A. J. Gordon is to preside at the first meeting. Dr. James M. Gray will make the opening prayer, and Dr. A. A. Miner will give the address of welcome. Rev. O. P. Gifford's subject is not yet announced. Rev. I. F. Lansing has agreed to speak on the Secret Society of the Jesuits, and Rev. David McAllister, D.D., of Pittsburgh, on the Freemasonry of the Mormon Endowment House.

The Secretary called on seven of the most prominent pastors of Worcester, and every one bade him God-speed. He addressed the Baptist Ministers' Meeting in Boston at which there were about one hundred present, giving notice of the Congress; and also the Congregational pastors. He intends to be at the Baptist State Association which meets in Springfield on the 28th of this month, and do similar work. Good news may be looked for from the Congregational Council which meets at Worcester this week. Five thousand circulars have been printed for distribution at this and other religious assemblies, and among the ministers and thinking people of New England. Everything points to a turn in the tide, nor would it be strange if the hottest battles yet to be waged in the anti-secret warfare should be fought out on New England soil. That a goodly number of pastors have agreed to give public notice on the Sabbath of the Congress and its object, is surely one hopeful sign that the spell of terrorism which has so long paralyzed the pulpit is at last broken.

The lodge meanwhile is not folding its hands. The Boston Evening Traveler has opened its columns to a Secret Order Department, whose first installment covers nearly a page, and is a very instructive resume both of what the lodge power is doing and of what it intends to do. The number of new societies that are starting up on every hand is absolutely bewildering, and I am sure that their originators must sometimes be hard put to it in choosing a name that has not already been taken up by some other organization. The Non-Secret Endowment Order is the latest of these mushroom growths, its ostensible object being to reach that class of people who are opposed to secret societies. So it seems that the lodge spider is fitting up a nice little "parlor" into which it means to invite our honest anti-secretists. I shall wait further developments regarding this non-secret order with some interest. That it will have its own system of invisible wires connecting it with its author and mother, Freemasonry; and that it will deceive some foolish human flies who ought to know better is most probable, yet it seems as if a right understanding of the principle involved in every system of life insurance, whether secret or open,—that it is in effect giving the lie to God's promise, "Leave thy fatherless children, I will preserve them alive; and let thy widows trust in me," ought to keep every sincere Christian from this last and most subtle snare of the lodge Apollyon.

The Boston papers give elaborate reports of the departure of Boston Knight Templars for Washington on Saturday at 3 P. M. The usual amount of Sabbath desecration seems to have been planned for in arranging the program. The Boston commandery, 130 strong, with a brass band, arrived in Washington at about 4 Sunday morning. Other commanderies arrived later, and thus all day they came pouring into the city; and, to quote from the daily papers, "the streets resounded on Sunday with marching columns, brilliant uniforms and beating drums," the Pilgrim State bearing its share in the shame and guilt.

The new and very elegant banner presented to the Boston Commandery has on it the seal and motto of the city of Boston, and was consecrated by the Prelate Sir and Rev. Geo. L. Perrin, at the close of which ceremony the band played, "Onward, Christian Soldier." What a travesty on the holy religion of the Prince of Peace!

Another Fulton might write a book on "Washington in the Lap of the Lodge," for surely Rome and Masonry can divide this honor between them. Certainly the Jesuitical and monarchical order of Knights Templar has received extraordinary, and for a republic, rather dangerous recognition, when the Treasury Department is decorated with flags in designs prepared especially for this occasion, a thing never done before by any of the departments of Washington except on occasions of a national character; and when, to do them still further honor, Government grants a half-holiday to all the employes in its service.

There is a good prospect that Boston will be the place where the next Grand Encampment in 1892 will be held, for though Denver, Milwaukee and Philadelphia are putting in claims, the party which is pushing Boston's candidacy is the strongest. All this will be extremely good news for the saloon-keepers at the Hub. Meanwhile this is a world of changes, and a good deal may happen before 1892.

An absolute change of subject is a relief, and so before closing my letter a brief reference to the 225th anniversary of the First Church in Newton, Mass., which was celebrated this week, may be interesting to the reader. When it was first established in 1664 the congregation was composed of about thirty families, and the total number of church members was not far from eighty. Its first pastor was John Eliot, Jr., son of the Apostle Eliot, and what is most remarkable of all, it has had but eight pastors since. Last week Stratford, Conn., celebrated the anniversary of its settlement 250 years ago, bringing to light a carving knife, imported in the Mayflower, an oaken sideboard made in England and brought to Stratford in 1620, the key of the First Church dating from the same year, and other venerable and interesting relics of "ye old times." What we need, however, is a revival of the Pilgrim spirit, and not a sight of the inanimate objects their fingers, long since mouldered to dust, may have touched,—such a revival as shall make forever impossible the outrage on their memories of a second Plymouth dedication.

A correspondent of the Outlook notices that while a saloon-keeper on the Massachusetts line has to pay a 1,800-dollar license, a saloon-keeper just across the line has only to pay $400 to get one! How long will Rhode Island be willing to stand in so humiliating a position, actually bidding for the rum trade of Massachusetts.

A new monthly is to appear in Boston in December called the Arena, which will be similar in form and make up to the North American Review, and devoted to the discussion of leading social and political issues. Though different from Our Day in not being conducted on a distinctly religious basis, the proposed publication is a strong proof how deeply reform questions are now stirring our leading minds.

The Boston Missionary Training School for Young Men and Women has just opened under the superintendence of Rev. Grattan Guinness. Twenty students have already passed their entrance examination, and among these one proposes to devote his life to mission work in China, and several others are going to Central and South Africa. The new institution is most ably officered; Dr. A. J. Gordon, president; Rev. A. T. Pierson, vice-president; and Rev. M. R. Deming, secretary.

Rather contrary to expectation, Boston women were sufficiently satisfied with the result of their action last year to be ready to dabble again in "the muddy stream of politics," and the assessor's office has been well filled the past week with those desiring to register. It is certainly difficult to see how the most determined opposer of Woman Suffrage can see anything unfeminine in voting under the Australian ballot system.

Mrs. Annie Jenness Miller is about to make a dress reform tour through New England, and all women who desire to see their sex released from the thralldom of corsets, and garments ingeniously made to pinch the form precisely where there should be the freest movement, will give her a fervent God-speed. Everybody knows that in a modern gown made by a fashionable dressmaker, it is impossible to work comfortably, and scarcely to walk, sit or stand with ease, but few people stop to think that good intellectual work is even more impossible under such conditions. I believe that women are sufficiently impeded in the march of mind by the traditions and prejudices of the past without the weight of their absurd dress to pull them back. Let corsets and trails, and tight sleeves and all kindred abominations be delegated back to the dark ages, but let Mrs. Miller be the apostle to show us how it can be done.

CHURCH STATISTICS FOR THE NEXT CENSUS.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, }
CENSUS OFFICE, WASHINGTON, D. C. }

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—Dear Sir. Having determined to include Church Statistics in the special inquiries to be made for the Eleventh Census, I wish to announce to you and, through you, to your readers, my desire and purpose to obtain the fullest and most accurate results possible in this special department. I need not enlarge upon the value of such results to any who are in any wise interested in church work and progress, and wish to know the numerical strength of the various religious denominations of the United States.

The inquiry will be broad enough in scope to embrace every religious body, of whatever name or creed, however few or many its churches and members, and it will be conducted with the utmost fairness and impartiality. The information sought will be arranged under five heads: (1) Organizations or societies; (2) Church edifices; (3) Seating capacity; (4) Value of church property; (5) Communicants. This is as much, in my judgment, as it will be wise to undertake in this direction for the Eleventh Census.

In order to prosecute this plan successfully and to make the results so thorough and accurate that they cannot be impeached, the Government will have to count largely on the prompt and generous co-operation of those in each denomination who are in a position to furnish the information desired.

The conduct of this special inquiry has been committed to a gentleman whose qualifications for the work will, I am sure, be instantly recognized. H. K. Carroll, LL.D., editor of the Independent, of New York, has consented to assume the duties of the position. Dr. Carroll is now engaged in preparing plans for such a division of the territory of each denomination as will make it comparatively easy for those to whom his inquiries will be addressed to give a prompt and faithful response. I ask for him, and I am sure you will heartily second me, such cheerful and generous assistance as he may require from officers of the denomination you represent.

Very respectfully, ROBERT P. PORTER, Superintendent of Census.

INDIANA COLLEGES.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, Ind., Oct. 12, 1889.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—The past three weeks have been spent among the colleges. De Pauw University at Greencastle, Ind., was first visited. This is a fast growing institution. Since De Pauw donated about one million dollars and the name has been changed, it has been advancing at giant strides. President Martin has resigned, but still remains in the faculty as professor of Philosophy. The trustees elected a man from Rochester, N. Y., to the presidency; but he would not accept unless they gave him $10,000 salary. This they could not accede to. The vice-president, Dr. John, has been made president pro tem. They have elegant buildings and two large dormitories, one for ladies and the other for gentlemen. They have 750 students, and calculate on 1,100 during the year.

I next visited the Indiana State University. Several changes have been made in the faculty. Young blood predominates. President Jordan is away at Yellowstone with a government expedition, searching for "a lost river." The legislature is very liberal with the institution. The foundation has been laid for an elegant library building. The new main building is yet to be built. Prof. Atwater, the only member of the faculty remaining of those connected with it during my college days twenty years ago, was master of ceremonies at our Sabbath afternoon lecture. Dr. Wylie, who was professor of Philosophy in that former time, but now retired, was present.

That evening a union service was held in the M. E. church under the auspices of the W. C. T. U. Such a meeting is held the first Sabbath evening of each month. By invitation I delivered the address. There were 900 people out. They listened for an hour with the closest attention, while the utmost endeavor to make the license and tax systems appear odious was made. A Republican prohibition editor said afterwards: "I fully agree with you that license is wrong and prohibition is right. We only differ as to the method of getting it." "Yes, if you and I are going to Louisville we can choose our route. But I do not want to go over a rotten bridge that will let me down."

I am now at Crawfordsville, the seat of Wabash College, to fill an appointment to lecture.

J. M. FOSTER.

BRO. DAVIDSON AND HIS CHURCH.

NEW ORLEANS, La., Oct. 5, 1889.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I enclose you a circular written by Mr. Wm. Christian, of Sunnyside, Arkansas. Its contents will probably interest your readers, as it seems to call special attention to every preacher to preach Freemasons' religion:

[The following are verbatim extracts:]

Notice to all the preachers in the world:

I have been taught by God that Freemason religion is the old religion and God at the head of it. I find God's all-seeing eye in the Northwest; I find "C" in the Northeast. I find "H" in the Southwest; I find the temple in the South and this is the old Mosaic church.

Place, to show how it is drawn, a compass around "G," one prong leading to the Southwest to "H" and the other prong Northeast to "C." Take a square, put the crook against "T" in the South, short "N" lap across at "H" Southwest, and the long "N" lapped across "C" in the Northeast, and you will have a complete Masonic badge of the old dispensation. . . .

Jesus is the Master of heaven and earth and the Holy Ghost is the deputy which baptizes men by the heavenly baptism and with the fiery love of God. This makes a man a fit subject to be a Freemason in the heart. No man without this can be a Freemason, and all men that are Freemasons and say this is not the truth, they don't know what Freemason religion is.

Brother preachers, white and black, old and young, we had better begin to preach Freemason religion to everybody and let all the people know they must become cemented into one family to God. Throw out all your literature and teach the New Testament Scripture to the people.

I trust this will be heard in the name of the Father, Son and Holy Ghost. Amen. WM. CHRISTIAN.

Straight and other universities have opened. Leland opens Monday, the 7th. We are yet struggling along in the midst of much opposition. I am under much of a burden with my church work. I hope your readers will pray for me; also I hope some liberal friend will contribute something to help me pay for my church property. I had hoped to meet the note the 1st of October, but a failure to collect the required $1,000 has prevented it. I have not raised one-tenth of the $1,000 yet, but we are struggling manfully onward. Our Sunday-school numbers ninety-seven, and my church membership thirty-eight. I hope the eyes of some God-loving Christians will fall on this article, and touch their heart and cause them to help us in our struggle. The winter is at hand and our building, besides not being paid for, will be very uncomfortable. All donations for the church can be sent to myself, 140 Clara St. I will acknowledge all donations through the Teller. May God help you to continue your warfare against sin and unrighteousness. F. J. DAVIDSON.

THE REIGN OF USURY.

RICHVIEW, Ill.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—The short and kind criticism of my first article, on the ninth page of the Cynosure of September 26, was a surprise. Of course interest is usury, and usury is interest. The definition that usury means unlawful interest was a fabrication of Shylock under the reign of Henry the VIII., and is no more true now than when it was first invented. "The term usury (says Drew) fell into disrepute, and the word interest was substituted therefor." Hume, the historian, by no means inclined to liberal ideas, refers very quaintly, but pointedly, to this substitution as a lucky accident in language which has great weight on men's minds.

When Moses wrote the law, "Thou shalt not loan thy money for usury," he added, "or increase." What if Moses had said, "Thou shalt not loan for unlawful interest." The Jews had no written law previous to this. If one per cent was usury in good old Nehemiah's day, why not now? The distinction between usury and interest "a fair one?" There is no "distinction." How can a nonentity be recognized?

2. I "speak with disrespect of the church and its Founder?" Nay, verily. I said, "True Christianity, such as the Master founded, and the church for 300 years practiced, is what the world needs." Does that look like "disrespect to the church and its Founder?" But I said, "Our Christianity needs remodeling. It is defective." Perhaps I ought to have said our form, or our churchanity. Don't it need remodeling? Are we not working to remodel oath-bound secrecy out of it? True Christianity can never be remodeled. It is perfect. But the churches or sects are only the scaffolding around the great temple, and when the temple of true Christianity is completed, the scaffolding will be removed. "The church or churches lost their grip on society?" Certainly they have. We don't say that Christianity has lost its grip. The principles of Christianity have permeated society through every fibre, intellectually and theoretically; but practically and spiritually these principles are a dead-letter, because the churches, which stand as exponents of Christianity, ignore them. Take the secret oath-bound orders. The churches are the pillar on which it rests. Just so of the rum power. The churches have the ballot-power to wipe it out at any time. Do they do it? Don't they need remodeling? There is hope of "remodeling" the churches on these lines, because hundreds of thousands of the best men and women in the world are praying and laboring incessantly to do it. But in regard to the "reign of usury," I said there is no remedy. It will reign on until the explosion comes, and it kills itself as slavery did. Why? Because no moral agencies are being used for its extermination. The churches don't really believe in oath-bound secrecy, nor in rum. But they tolerate and uphold them. They do, however, believe in usury, and practice it on the same lines that the world does.

If the Master was to visit our great city churches, and scourge out the money-changers, how many would be left? Bishop Foster, in his sermon at Baltimore, at the centennial of American Methodism, said, "The poor are as effectually shut out of the church as if they were guarded by sentinels in uniform, with sword and musket." The church is wondering why it is so. Ministers are holding conventions to devise means to reach the masses with the Gospel. Yet if one presumes to tell them that usury is the cause of the separation between the churches and the masses, he is ostracised, denounced, and called a crank. Hence, we said that this evil is one that will have to bring its own destruction. Moral agencies having failed, some physical force, some judgment of heaven, some vial of wrath will purge it out.

We, as a nation and people, are getting ripe for some kind of punishment. We are being smitten now with blindness, as the South was before the War of the Rebellion. Politically there is no soundness in us. "From the crown of the head to the soles of the feet, all is wounds and bruises and putrefying sores." It is little less than one mass of moral corruption. What has brought us to this? Mammon-worship. Money is our god politically. Men ought to have rights, and used to have a pre-eminence over everything; but now property rights are everything. With all our churches, Sabbath-schools, etc., etc., money stands higher than men politically, and to a very great extent socially. It would be folly for a poor man to offer for nomination, or run for office. In fact, men's standing and influence depends on the wealth they own. They may be as pure as saints and as wise as Solomon, but if they are poor that settles the question. Money, the creature of man, is elevated above man, the noblest creature of God. It is idolatry. It is blasphemy. It is idolatry baptized into the church, just as chattel slavery was.

The church "lost its grip" on the masses? Who needs proof of this. Travel over the land in any direction, and the church houses are comparatively empty. The women make up four-fifths of the members and attendants. Not long ago the Cynosure printed statistics showing that ninety per cent of the young men of the United States were not even professors, nor church members. What is to become of churches when they can't hold the young men? Are they dying? Even now many, very many churches are managed and run by worldly men as a place of amusement, ease, pleasure or entertainment. Don't they need "remodeling?"

It is painful to recount such a state of the church. But it will never be any better, but grow worse and worse as long as mammon-worship lasts and "usury reigns." D. OGLESBY.

DIVINE HEALING.

NEW MARKET, N. H.

In editorial correspondence in Cynosure of Sept. 26, there are several errors which ought to be corrected. Miss E. E. Flagg does not "still walk with crutches." She uses one cane. "The idea of getting bodily healing" does not "lead every other at Old Orchard." The leading theme there during Rev. A. B. Simpson's convention is Bible holiness. The near coming of the Lord and Divine Healing are taught, but the latter topic holds a comparatively subordinate place. In proof of this I cite the official report of the convention in the Christian Alliance, Mr. Simpson's paper, and am myself also a personal witness. As to Dr. Cullis' work, a little explanation is necessary to make the matter clear. Dr. Charles Cullis, of Boston, is both physician and preacher. He was a practicing physician before he was a preacher. He has charge of three hospitals and two churches in or near Boston. No doubt bodily health is much regarded in the hospitals, but it is a great error to suppose divine healing occupies a leading place in Dr. Cullis' churches and conventions. In proof of this I cite his own excellent paper, the Times of Refreshing, and am also myself a personal witness. It is emphatically and perpetually taught by both Mr. Cullis and Mr. Simpson that those who seek divine healing must "seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness." Dr. Cullis administers remedies to those who have not faith to be healed by the Lord. From the days of the apostles to the present time, impostors have vexed the church. "Nevertheless the foundation of God standeth sure, having this seal, the Lord knoweth them that are his." And, "Let every one that nameth the name of Christ depart from iniquity." Moses did not cease to work miracles in the name of the Lord because magicians attempted the same things. God was stronger than the devil then, and is so still.

S. C. KIMBALL.

A SECRET SOCIETY GRAVE FOR PATRIOTISM.

WHEATON, Ill.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—At the last meeting of our W. C. T. U. a sister, who had lately visited a thriving town in northern Michigan, told us of the temperance work in that place. The greatest drawback to the work there seemed to her to be a lodge of Sons and Daughters of Veterans. [The name of the female branch of the Sons of Veterans lodge is Ladies' Aid Society.—Ed.] The lodge, with an annual fee of $1.00 and weekly meetings, was large and flourishing, while a once large W. C. T. U. now consisted of three members, and an attempt to start a Young Woman's Union found an equal number ready for the work. The lodge members had no time nor money for the temperance work.

Suppose that during the dark days of our late war the sons and daughters of Revolutionary heroes had been too busy "keeping green the graves" of their fathers to come to the help of the country in its hour of peril. Is not the warfare with the drink curse greater than any which, as a nation, we have been engaged in? Its martyrs have not been so many, but its victims many more. Let us see that our record in this and all other reforms is that "She has done what she could," so that those who come after us may enjoy the free Christian institutions which we have helped preserve for them, though our graves may be unknown and forgotten.

A HEROINE IN MEXICO.

YOUNG WOMEN SHOULD READ THE REMARKABLE LIFE-STORY OF MISS RANKIN.

MILES, Iowa.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I have recently read a book of thrilling interest. It is the life of a quiet woman who went out alone under a holy inspiration to conquer Mexico for her Master. As long as such books of grand adventure and stirring, sterling truth are afforded us, I see no possible use for the sickly gossamers of fiction. What a bold and devoted woman was this heaven-appointed Mexican evangelist! Her story is a supplementary chapter to the Acts of the Apostles.

My special purpose in this note is to ask you to put this very valuable book on sale in your office, and that you urge young Christians, workers especially, to read it. It should be in the library of every Christian college for women, and should be recommended to be read by the leaders of all mission training homes. Who will order ten or twenty copies to be sent at once to the training homes in America? It will be especially useful to women (and men too) who are looking toward foreign mission work. I am glad that I met with earnest Christian biography in my boyhood. Such reading helped much to make me an earnest, working Christian.

The book costs only $1.25, I think. Will you kindly bring it before the public? I pray that the blessed example of this consecrated heroine may prompt many to go and do likewise. Yours in the work,

WALLACE J. GLADWIN.

PITH AND POINT.

FOR 1892.

Since the publication of the letter of Geo. Dohoney of Galveston, Texas, in some of the daily papers, suggesting that Daniel B. Turney of Illinois, be made the Prohibition nominee in 1892 for President, with James B. Converse of Tennessee, for Vice President, I have been aching to say "Amen" at the top of my lungs. These men are free from the secret lodge system and equally free from papal dictation—honest, competent, and ought to be nominated and elected. Let us give them a boom.—P. W. PENN.

THE COPE STONE AND LORIMER.

Masonry that breeds, sustains and upholds all other secret societies, must father and be held responsible for its own and their acts and doings; and therefore the murder of Cronin is to be attributed to Masonry, not to Clan-na-Gael, its child. Since that horrible tragedy Masons and Odd-fellows and Knights of Pythias have been invading temples, theaters, and drumming in streets, to avert attention by pretending to mourn for Cronin and to convince the public that not they, but "other chaps," do such work. Masonic begging for the Auditorium to have cope stone laid by them has succeeded; and then, after being granted, the Masons said they would condescend to do it. It is a building of note and could help to bestow influence to lodgery. You ought to reach out for the grand orator, Mr. Lorimer, who holds to Masonry to give him worldly influence in the lodge, and help to position and good salary in the church while he peddles the Gospel out in a manner that gives him independence and popularity. His oration says Masonry is not a black-mailing, ostracising, assassinating order. May you live long before you join an order that you have to defend in that way.—ANTI-CABAL, Chicago.

A MEMORY OF BOYHOOD.

"Hey the merry Masons!
And Ho the merry Masons!
A rat, tat, ta."

Such was the style of song in my young days when the merry Masons marched through country towns with bands playing, followed by a crowd, while the chaplain with open Bible, etc., before his white apron, looked more distinguished for piety than any one had ever discovered in his daily life. Into the public hall they marched where dinner and drink ended, as then was usual, in a fine display of staggering toppers, and year after year, they repeated the game, and cheer after cheer was much the same, until death drew near with the summons to appear.—T. H., Chicago.

STAND BY THE COLORS.

I am pleased with the bold and fearless front which the Cynosure has presented to the foe. May you keep your colors ever waving in the thickest of the fight, "the oriflamme of God." A lady sends me a copy of your paper, and I am well pleased with it.—V. A. B., East Randolph, N. Y.

LITERATURE.

The Century Magazine closes its nineteenth year with a number for October which, besides its leading serials on Lincoln and Siberia and the Old Masters, contains several papers of peculiar importance. One of these is a striking paper, "Reminiscences of the Hershels," by the celebrated American astronomer, the late Maria Mitchell. With the latter article is a portrait of Miss Mitchell, and a picture of her last observatory, at Lynn, Massachusetts. Miss Brackett has an appreciative "Open Letter" on Miss Mitchell in the same number. A group of brief illustrated articles on manual training presents this subject from three different points of view—the articles being by Prof. Butler, of the New York College for the Training of Teachers; Prof. Thorpe, of the Philadelphia Manual-Training School; and Dr. Felix Adler, founder of the Workmen's School and Free Kindergarten of New York. Mr. Kennan's Siberian article, beside repeating the awful stories of suffering among the banished convicts of Russia, and the official neglect and cruelty of the government, gives a vivid description of mining in these remote regions. "Topics" and "Open Letters" are on the late Prof. Alexander Johnston, of Princeton; on "Disasters;" "A New College for Women;" "A View of the Confederacy from the Inside," bearing upon the subject treated in the Lincoln installment; "The Single Tax on Land Values;" "Country Roads;" "Prohibition in Iowa;" "A Tenor Farm;" and "Irish Estates."

The frontispiece of the October St. Nicholas is the favorite picture of the noble French hounds that belonged to the Count de Barral, and an article, "Among Dogs of High Degree," by Noah Brooks, using the pictures as a suggestive text, discourses entertainingly upon fine dogs everywhere. "The Making of a Great Steel Gun," by G. F. Muller, describes in an interesting style the processes used in producing the cast-steel breech-loading cannon. A word to the reader upon the awful use for which this gun was planned should have been added. Of course there are, besides, jingles, illustrations, and detached pictures and other entertaining and amusing features in abundance, good for amusement and pastime, but with little substantial worth.

The Old Testament Student handsomely prints papers on "Ecclesiastes Considered Psychologically," "The Jewish Literature of New Testament Times," "The English Bible," "Description of Spiritual Phenomena under the Figure of Natural Convulsions," and "The Post-exilic History of Israel." A series of critical Bible studies in Jewish history, contemporary with the International S. S. lessons, is conducted by Prof. Harper, the editor.

In his International Health Studies in Good Health for October, Dr. Felix L. Oswald turns to Russia and gives a general view of the out-door life of that interesting people. All the departments of the number are well filled. The reader will hardly pass "The Relation of Dress to Surgical Disease" and "The Mind-Cure Delusion" without reading.

The American Garden gives us a grand October number, beautiful as our autumn woods. We are pleased to note that the unseemly old fences are not forgotten, but pen and pencil are demanding their demolition. No gardener or florist will fail to find practical reading in this magazine.

The African News continues Bishop William Taylor's entertaining autobiography, while that industrious and laborious missionary also finds time to write of his African missions with a prolific pen. Africa is presented in the columns of this magazine as in no other.

Mollie Maguire's Oath.

ANCIENT ORDER OF HIBERNIANS.

The objects of the order are thus stated: "We are joined together to promote Friendship, Unity and true Christian Charity among our members, by raising money for the aged, sick, blind and infirm. The motto of the order is Friendship, Unity and true Christian Charity; unity, in uniting for mutual support in sickness and distress; friendship, in assisting each other to the best of our ability; true Christian charity, by doing to each other and to all the world as we would wish they would do unto us. It is the desire to promote friendship among the Irish Catholics, and especially to assist one another in all trials.

The oath: "I, A. B., having heard the objects of the order fully explained, do solemnly swear that I will, with the help of God, keep inviolably secret all the acts and things done by this order, and obey the constitution and bylaws in every respect. Should I hear a member illy spoken of, I will espouse his cause, and convey the information to him as soon as possible for me to do so. I will obey my superior officer in every thing lawful, and not otherwise. All this I do solemnly swear."

That I will keep strictly secret the name and everything connected with this C'e from all not entitled to know such secrets. That I will obey and comply with the constitution and laws of the C'e, and that I will faithfully preserve the funds of the C'e for the cause of Jsíti revolution alone, as specified in the constitution. That I will deem it my special duty and mission to promote and foster sentiments of union, brotherly love and nationality among all Jsítimfo. That I take this obligation without any mental reservation, holding the same forever binding upon me, and that any violation thereof or desertion of my duty to the B'd, is infamous, and merits the severest punishment. The Ku Klux Klan.

OR, INVISIBLE EMPIRE.

Statement of principles adopted by a general convention of the order at Nashville in 1867:

"1. To protect the weak, the innocent, and the defenseless from the indignities, wrongs, and outrages of the lawless, the violent, and the brutal; to relieve the injured and the oppressed; to succor the suffering, and especially the widows and orphans of Confederate soldiers.

"2. To protect and defend the Constitution of the United States, and all laws passed in conformity thereto, and to protect the States and people thereof from all invasion from any source whatever.

"3. To aid and assist in the execution of all constitutional laws, and to protect the people from unlawful seizure, and from trial except by their peers in conformity to the laws of land."

Jesusit's Oath.

I, A. B., now in the presence of Almighty God, the blessed Virgin Mary, the blessed Michael the Archangel, the blessed St. John the Baptist, the holy Apostles St. Peter and St. Paul, and the saints and the sacred host of heaven, and to you, my ghostly fathers, do declare from my heart, without mental reservation, that his Holiness, Pope Leo XIII., is Christ's Vicar-General, and is the true and only head of the Catholic or universal church throughout the earth; and that by virtue of the keys of binding and loosing given to his Holiness by Jesus Christ, he hath power to depose heretical kings, princes, states, commonwealths, and governments all being illegal without his sacred confirmation, AND THAT THEY MAY SAFELY BE DESTROYED; therefore, to the utmost of my power I shall and will defend this doctrine and his Holiness' rights and customs against all usurpers of the heretical or Protestant authority whatsoever, especially against the new pretended authority and Church of England and all adherents, in regard that they and she be usurpal and heretical, opposing the sacred mother Church of Rome.

I do renounce and disown my allegiance as due to any heretical king, prince, or state named Protestants, or obedience to any of their inferior magistrates or officers.

I do further declare the doctrine of the Church of England, of the Calvinists, Huguenots, and other Protestants to be damnable, and those to be damned who will not forsake the same.

I do further declare that I will help, assist, and advise all or any of his Holiness' agents in any place wherever I shall be; and do my utmost to extirpate the heretical Protestant's doctrine, and to destroy all their pretended powers, regal or otherwise. I do further promise and declare that, notwithstanding I am dispensed to assume any religion heretical, for the propagating of mother church interests, to keep secret and private all her agents' counsels, as they instruct me, and not to divulge, directly or indirectly, by word, writing, or circumstances whatsoever, but shall execute all which shall be proposed, given in charge, or discovered unto me by you, my ghostly father, or by any of this sacred convent. All which I, A. B., do swear by the blessed Trinity and blessed sacrament which I am now to receive, to perform on my part to keep inviolably; and do call all the heavenly and glorious host of Heaven to witness these, my real intentions, to keep this my oath.

In testimony whereof, I take this most holy and blessed sacrament of the eucharist, and witness the same further with my hand and seal in the face of this holy convent, this — day — A. D. —, etc.

Freemason's Oath.

THIRD DEGREE.

I, —, of my own free will and accord, in the presence of Almighty God and this worshipful lodge, erected to him and dedicated to the holy Saint Johns, do hereby and hereon (Master places his hand on candidate's hands, on the Bible,) most solemnly and sincerely promise and swear, that I will always hail, ever conceal and never reveal any of the secret arts, parts, or points of the Master Mason's degree to any person or persons whomsoever, except it be to a true and lawful brother of this degree, or in a regular constituted lodge of Master Masons, nor unto him nor them, until by strict trial, due examination, or legal information, I shall have found him or them as lawfully entitled to the same as I am myself.

I further promise and swear, that I will stand to and abide by all the laws, rules and regulations of the Master Mason's degree, and of the lodge of which I shall be a member, as far as the same shall come to my knowledge....

Further, that I will aid and assist all poor, destitute, worthy Master Masons, their widows and orphans, knowing them to be such, as far as their necessities may require, and my ability permit, without material injury to myself or family.

Further, that I will keep a worthy brother Master Mason's secret inviolate, when communicated to and received by me as such, murder and treason excepted.

Further, that I will not aid nor be present at the initiation, passing or raising of a woman, an old man in dotage, a young man in his noilage, an atheist, a madman, nor a fool, knowing them to be such....

Further, that I will not cheat, wrong nor defraud a Master Mason's lodge, nor a brother of this degree knowingly, nor supplant him in any of his laudable undertakings, but will give him due and timely notice, that he may ward off approaching danger....

Further, that I will not have illicit carnal intercourse with a Master Mason's wife, his mother, sister, or daughter, nor suffer the same to be done by others, if in my power to prevent....

Further, that I will not give the Grand Hailing Sign of Distress, except in circumstances of the most imminent danger, in a just and legal lodge, or for the purpose of instruction; and if ever I should see or hear it given by a worthy brother in distress, I will fly to his relief if there is a greater probability of saving his life than of losing my own.

All this I most solemnly and sincerely promise and swear, with a firm and steadfast resolution to perform the same, without any hesitation, mental reservation, or secret evasion of mind whatever, binding myself under no less a penalty than that of having my body severed in twain, my bowels taken from thence and burned to ashes, the ashes scattered to the four winds of heaven, that no more remembrance might be had of so vile a wretch as I should be, should I ever knowingly violate this, my Master Mason's obligation. So help me

God and keep me steadfast in the due performance of the same.

OATH OF THE THIRD OR POLITICAL DEGREE.

Before God and these witnesses, I do vow that I will never reveal the signs, grips, passwords, tokens or significants of the 57 (Knights of the Columbian Star), to any man, woman or child, except to a 57 in good and lawful standing, and then only as hereafter directed, and for the lawful purposes of this Order. And I pledge and commit myself fully and freely to each of the following obligations, and in perfect good faith.

1st. I vow and promise to conceal the names of the 57, the objects and character thereof, and never to speak of the same as though I was a member, except to those who can give me our sacred word in such a way as to satisfy me they are 57.

2d. No matter what secrets may be given to me by a 57, if given as the secret of a 57, and because I am one, I will hold the same sacredly in my own knowledge, and never communicate it, even to a 57 (Knight of the Columbian Star), unless authorized so to do by the brother whose secret it is. I will never speak evil of a brother 57, either before his face or behind his back. I will never dishonor the wife or daughter of a 57, I knowing them to be such, but I will shield and protect the character of all 57 whom I may know to be such, their wives, daughters and families.

3d. I will oppose, to the utmost of my ability, and never consent, but vote against the admission of any confirmed drunkard, professional gambler, rowdy, convict, felon, 68 (Abolitionist), Negro, Indian, minor, idiot, or 69 (Foreigner), to membership in this department of the 33, but I will get as many good and eligible 70 (Southern born men) to join this Degree as I can....

9th. I will protect and defend all widows and orphans, to the best of my ability, and especially those of a 57, and I vow I will never desert the 57, or their cause and aims, while three members remain and consent to propagate it.... In 2 I will endeavor to cause to be opened to the public all 84 (nunneries, monasteries or convents), and there shall be no advantages to 67 (Roman Catholic) which is not equally accorded to 60 (Protestant). The 50 (Bible) shall be adopted for use in all public schools, and any 85 (Priest) who shall be detected in 86 (gambling, or violating the ordinances of religion), shall be expelled from 2. Any minister holding any place under the Government must be 60 (Protestant).

10th. All civil places of prominence shall be given, so far as my influence goes, to 57 (Knights of the Columbian Star), and, when these are supplied, to the 18 (True Faith); then to the 1 (Knights of the Iron Hand). I will advocate the establishment of 63 (a government) which shall place the power in the hands of the most educated and moral, and oppose the recognition of any 87 (Negro, Mulatto, Indian or mixed blood), to citizenship....

In witness, I do voluntarily, here in these presence, sign my name and P. O. address.

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Onondaga jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemason to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his name to the letter, but attaches his affidavit to it.

In closing his letter he writes: I now look back, through an interval of fifty-six years with a consciousness of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies."

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 5 cents.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, OCTOBER 17, 1889.

F. W. CAPWELL IS DEAD.

With deeper regret we have seldom written a line like this. A leader, a hero is gone. His battles are over. He has joined the chant of praise and victory about the throne of his Redeemer. This providence is as sudden as it is severe. Word of severe sickness came last week, and in two days after he was dead. Wednesday evening at 9:30 o'clock his work and suffering were done, the call came and his spirit passed to his God. Mr. Capwell was a great-souled man. Magnanimity, friendliness, hospitality, the fellowship of a Christian life and the courage of a Christian heart beamed in his eye and thrilled under the warm pressure of his hand. His generous enthusiasm, while it was imparted to all, yet seemed to lift him above ordinary men, and he became a natural leader. Such he has been in the cause of Christ against lodge and saloon. He was during two terms president of the National Christian Association, and for years he has cared for the work of the New York State Association as its presiding officer. The convention which meets next week in Houghton will heavily feel the blow. It was about ten years ago he first became prominent in our councils. The managing editor of the North American Review, Mr. Metcalf, now of the Forum, applied to him for help. They wished an article against secret societies. Could he direct them to a competent writer? Willingly; and a paper was sent by the senior editor of the Cynosure; but, failing to find a lodge champion who dared reply, nothing was published. In the construction of the Morgan Monument Mr. Capwell took a warm personal interest. His means, too, have been given liberally and carefully for our reform as well as for prohibition. But the end of earth has come, and his eternity of reward is begun. Verily, a "prince and a great man has fallen in Israel."

DIVINE HEALING.

We give a letter on this topic from Elder Kimball, who corrects us for saying Miss Flagg used more than one support in walking, whereas "she uses one cane." This correction misses the point, which was, that Miss Flagg is not made "every whit whole" in answer to prayer; not how many canes she uses. Until she is recovered from her afflicting lameness, those who have prayed for her recovery should not teach universal faith healing as a tenet and duty for Christians. Jacob's wrestling with the Angel Jehovah was successful prayer. "As a prince hast thou power with God and with men, and hast prevailed." Gen. 32: 28. But after that he halted upon his thigh, for aught we know till he died. But we shall have no controversy with Bro. Kimball, for he is doing a good work; and there is no danger of praying too much for the sick, or relying too much on Christ for their recovery. As to the teachings of Dr. Cullis and Rev. Mr. Simpson, exhorting their patients to seek first the kingdom of God, I have met their patients in several States, and I regret to say that I have no proof that the crowds of their admirers vote against the saloon, or throw their influence against the lodge, whose god is Christ's rival and antagonist. Some of them I know do not. Dr. Cullis's "three hospitals and two churches" ought to turn out a strong body of voters on election day for our free schools.

JUDGE MCCONNELL ON LODGE OATHS.

The portion of the Cronin trial report appearing on the third page gives our readers a brief view of the court and its proceedings for the past five or six weeks. Especial attention is called to the parenthetical remark made by Judge McConnell to the reply of the juror who says (see top of first column, third page): "It seems to me, and has always seemed to me, that they [secret societies] are oath-bound, and there would be apt to be a little bias on their side in standing by each other." This opinion Judge McConnell hopes "is but lightly held, and ought to be."

This sentiment, apparently interjected without heed, and representing the personal sentiment of the court, and not an official declaration, is enough to condemn Judge McConnell as unfit to preside in a case where secret societies are implicated. We do not charge him with being a Freemason, having no direct knowledge of the fact; but his utterances from the bench are a strong presumption that this is the case.

Why does the Judge hope the opinion, that men secretly sworn in the lodge are apt to stand by each other, is "lightly held, and ought to be," if he does not by so saying intend to contradict that opinion and condemn it. If the opinion is founded on an observation of facts, there is nothing unlawful in it, nothing to be deprecated in the opinion itself, but much in the cause of it which abides in the lodge. The expression of Judge McConnell resolves itself, therefore, as we view it, into a vindication of lodge oaths before a man who is free from them, but has seen and deprecates their effects. And because this vindication is given parenthetically when the speaker seems for the moment to be off his guard, is a more sure proof that the author of it is himself bound by such oaths.

Another expression of Judge McConnell, also unguarded and careless, confirms our reluctant belief concerning his qualification to sit in this Clan-na-Gael trial. Last week Tuesday a Swede was examined for the jury and expressed his opposition to secret societies, which was pronounced. He believed their members have such regard for their secret oaths that their testimony, given under a subsequent and legal oath, cannot be believed if it should be prejudicial to the order. This honest conviction called out from the Judge the extraordinary remark, "I think you are a dangerous man to be on a jury, and you can go!" If the published record is correct, Judge McConnell has in this condemnation of a jurorman condemned also himself. If a man is unfitted to sit on a jury, to a "dangerous" degree, because he has observed that lodge oaths bind those who take them to an unlawful interest in their societies and to each other, what then must be said of the fitness of a judge to preside in a case, where such a secret society and its oaths are the leading factor, who attempts from the bench to overbear jurors who discover and abhor the real nature of these oaths? The tremendous fact that but for a secret lodge and its oaths there would be no Cronin trial cannot be so ignored either by judge or jury.

Since these sentiments were uttered the court and the whole city has been thrown into another fever of excitement, and the men who are told they "ought not to" believe that men in secret lodge swear fealty to one another, and are "dangerous to be on a jury" if they do, have their belief confirmed tremendously.

Two bailiffs of the court, sworn officers of the law, who have day by day for some two months sat under Judge McConnell's eye, and almost within reach of his hand, one guarding Kunze, the other the ex-detective, Dan Coughlin,—these two men are found conspiring with members of the Clan-na-Gael out of court to bribe jurymen and either "hang" the jury or secure an acquittal. A thousand dollars offered at first was increased to $5,000. Fortunately they attempted to corrupt one or two honest men who delivered them over to the officers. Friday afternoon and all night and all day Saturday this conspiracy was being tracked and six men were arrested, but yet the prime mover seems not to be discovered. There are dark hints that Alexander Sullivan's is the hand that moves the secret wires, but he is yet secure behind his secret oaths. Of this latest plot one of the lawyers says:

"They reveal a most damnable organization against the law of the land, a conspiracy against the jurisprudence of this country that will startle the continent when it is thoroughly known—a conspiracy of ramifications, of audacity, a conspiracy involving men whose name will be a surprise to the country. It is no exaggeration when I say that you cannot magnify the damnable outrage of this conspiracy. In the taking off of Dr. Cronin, and the manner in which it was done, the whole world was startled. This second conspiracy will alike startle the whole world. It is an assault on the very integrity of our institutions."

Here, then, we have a great conspiracy, widespread, fiendish and implacable, concocted and concealed behind lodge oaths, and executed in the murder of Cronin. Another conspiracy, cunning and malevolent, implicating numerous sworn officers of the law, had succeeded in blinding and deluding the public until the accidental discovery of the body in a catch basin. Ramifications of these plots are from time to time coming to light, the purpose of which was to yet further deceive the public and public officers. And now this last conspiracy, unscrupulous and malicious, inculcating other sworn officers of the law, far-reaching in attempted results, is unearthed. How many more we are to have, who can tell? The lodge is as prolific in devilish plots as the Cerberus is of whelps, that sits "fast by the hell gate" of Milton's dreadful vision. Judge McConnell is a bold man if he attempts to rule out the fact that these conspiracies are the legitimate offspring of secret lodge oaths, and that men who have been sworn by those oaths will ignore them when they come to testify in his court. If the men who believe these fearful facts are dangerous for the jury, trebly dangerous for the bench is the judge who himself disbelieves, and would have all other men disbelieve them.

DR. LORIMER, "Grand Orator," etc., says of Freemasonry: "Were it a blackmailing, ostracizing, murdering association, its temple would be abandoned by those who tread its pavements, and would be left to the bats and owls, to those who love secret plots and midnight assassinations."

It would be very easy to bring evidence on every point mentioned in the "Grand Orator's" indictment and convict Freemasonry of blackmail, ostracism and murder. If no murders have been charged up to the order of late years, it is only because it has failed to kill its man, as with Starry, Rathbun, Ronayne; or has done its work under an alias, as Ku-Klux, White League, Blue Lodges, or Clan-na-Gael. Every little town in the country, where a lodge is established, can furnish proof on the other counts.

But we need not go hunting for particular instances, when we may compare the oath "which makes the Mason" with those of other secret societies, which even Dr. Lorimer will condemn as murderous and ostracizing. They are submitted to his careful attention on the preceding page. He says the lodges would be abandoned if Antimasons could prove their charges. The oath proves them. Read and compare.

Mrs. C. A. Higgins reports in the Christian Alliance that the Lord healed her broken ankle without medical attendance. "Luke, the beloved physician, and Demas greet you." Col. 4: 14.

—Bro. H. H. Hinman has an appointment at New Concord, O., this week. Last Friday evening he spoke in a Radical United Brethren church near Baltimore, Ohio, and was engaged for Sabbath evening for another U. B. church in the vicinity. He is preparing for the State meeting in Senecaville on Tuesday of next week. Are all our Ohio friends preparing to attend that meeting who should be there?

—The article in Our Day for August, by Pres. C. A. Blanchard, entitled "An Age of Lodges," has been republished in separate form for wide distribution. A large number will be given out at the National Council of Congregational churches at Worcester and a quantity will be sent to Chicago for circulation. An announcement of the Boston congress of churches with the leading speakers is prominent on the title page.

—A few days since a bomb was thrown through an open window of a slaughter-house in New York. The explosion caused wild excitement and considerable damage to the building, but fortunately no lives were lost. Last February there was difficulty with the men, who struck, and non-union men were employed in their stead. Bomb-throwing was the method of revenge adopted by the lodge,—a very certain indication of its fraternity charity, and the possession of numerous other moral and virtuous qualities.

—The Catholic Review in a late number declares in explicit terms for high license. A few weeks ago it gave this advice to its readers: "Catholic workers in the temperance movement have nothing to gain and much to lose by undertaking to defend Prohibitionists;" and, moreover, urged them to vote against State prohibition. To trust the leaders of the Roman church for unselfish and genuine aid in any reform is like leaning on a broken reed. They may be opposed to some forms of secretism, but at the same time they foster others just as dangerous. Their opposition even seems to stop short of the inherent evil of a system, and to be expended only upon what may be prejudicial to their own system.

—A member of the Morgan Street Free Methodist church of this city was formerly a Freemason and member of Pleaides Lodge No. 478. He has been many years a resident of Chicago, and has sat in the lodge with Michael C. McDonald, the late gambling and political boss of this city. Mike McDonald is understood to be a Catholic. He is wealthy, and his house furnished a great scandal a few weeks ago when his wife ran away with a young Catholic priest. The priestly fraternity repudiated the scape-grace, who was, they claimed, not in good standing in their church. He nevertheless seems to be entrusted with considerable responsibility. Our seceder friend also knows of a case of Masonic interference with justice when Charles H. Reed, prosecuting attorney here and Freemason, some dozen years ago let a Masonic banker of Momence, Ill., go free.

—The critical condition of the United Presbyterian church, in some parts of the country, is realized by good men and leaders in the denomination. A recent note in the Christian Instructor of Philadelphia shows that the grievous tidings from New York published last week are not overlooked nor received with indifference. It says: "In some congregations the manner in which our principles against secret societies is administered is simply an evasion. The point of our testimony is blunted by the action of the Assembly in regard to one of the most influential of these societies. Our position on psalmody has become a reproach to us because of the known violation of it practically by so many of our people. It is manifest that unless we work vigorously, prosecute the ends of our distinct organization, we will soon become purely a schism in the body of Christ."

—The Germans, says the Herald of this city, are distinguished for their love of titles. The climax in this direction was reached a few days ago in Darmstadt, when the grand duke created a man "court sauerkraut cutter." Hereafter he must be addressed, according to custom, as "Mr. Court Sauerkraut Cutter," and he will be offended unless the title is used. Possibly the large infusion of Germanic sentiment by immigration accounts for the wonderful prevalence of secret orders in America. There are several Masonic lodges in Chicago with hardly any other than German names, and they have, beside exclusive ownership of several societies, as much as the Irish have of the Hibernians, Fenians and Clann-Gael. All our "grand," "supreme" and "most worshipful" flunkeyism is the direct product of foreign monarchical nations, and should be sent back to the original abode of such nonsense with the maledictions of all Americans.

—The reply of a county commissioner in Galesburg, Ill., to a gentleman who protested to him against a Masonic corner-stone laying for a public building, is worth repeating for the benefit of Chicago gentlemen who like to see the lodge perform over corner-stones and cope-stones. Said he: "As a member of the Building Committee I have not had anything to do with the corner-stone matter, and I do not know that any member of the Board of Supervisors was consulted. I think the contractor has a perfect right to let any man or set of men he may choose lay the corner-stone or any other stone in the building, provided it is done decently and in order. You know the Masons claim to be old hands at the business, probably laid the corner-stone of the Pyramids and the Tower of Babel, and did all the stone-work on Noah's ark. All I could say is, if the Masons wish to monkey around and lay the corner-stone let them do it. And then if they wish, let those who are opposed to Masonry take it up and lay it over again. As a member of the committee I was not in favor of any demonstration. To me personally it always seemed like 'Tomfoolery.' I will take your protest to the election Monday and let all who may choose sign it and then send it to you."

PERSONAL NOTES.

—Rev. F. M. Spencer, D.D., late president of the Ohio State Association, and also president of Muskingum College, was inaugurated president of Cooper Memorial College, at Sterling, Kansas, September 4th.

—Rev. Byron Gunner, who has been living in New Orleans since driven from his church at New Iberia by desperadoes, is now in the North, and expects to soon visit Chicago. He is now in Cleveland, where he has been giving several addresses. He also speaks in Oberlin this week on the Race Problem. His last address at Wheaton touched upon this subject and was of thrilling interest.

—Bishop Becker of the United Brethren church called at the Cynosure office last week on his way to his California field, from his home in Akron, Ohio. He speaks hopefully of the prospect before the church which he represents. In 1881, when residing in California, he addressed the Congregational ministers' meeting of San Francisco on the subject of secret societies. His paper was very cordially received, all but one of those present voting for it. Prof. Dwinell, who preached the sermon before the National Council last Sabbath evening, was then a pastor in the city and heartily approved the sentiments of the address.

—George Muller, at the orphanages at Bristol, England, though about eighty years of age, is still actively engaged in evangelistic work. His has been a life noted for its trust in the promises of God. His entire career is a standing verification of the promise, "All things are possible to him that believeth." The total amount received by him from various sources, for his orphanages since their establishment in 1834, is estimated to be about $5,765,000. There have been taught in his schools, and entirely supported by this fund, 107,000 persons. During this fifty-five years five large houses have been erected at a cost of $575,000. All this has been accomplished without asking an individual for a single dollar. This is surely one of the standing miracles of the nineteenth century.—Free Methodist.

REFORM NEWS.

WELCOME TO MICHIGAN.

GRAND LEDGE, Mich., Oct. 11, 1889.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—There are no United Brethren in this place, and, though in the same latitude, I seem to be in a colder climate. I see some reason for the remark of George Eliot, "That the greatest part of our faith in ourselves consists in our belief that somebody else has faith in us." Wendell Phillips said that if the Abolitionists hadn't prepared readers, "Uncle Tom's Cabin" would have fallen flat. Standing place is as necessary to moving the world as a lever.

I spoke seven times in Barry county. The United Brethren gave me fair audiences at each of the three churches where I addressed them. The warmer reception one gets the better he can speak. In every case among the U. B.'s I have made friends. The N. C. A. workers will find no people more hospitable than the United Brethren of Barry and Ionia counties.

I met Bro. Hampe, presiding elder at the West Odessa church, and was much encouraged by his kindness and fatherly counsel. Though suffering with rheumatism, he preached two powerful sermons on the Sabbath. He invited me to "preach a little" on Saturday night, which I did. It was somewhat of a cross, but I felt it was the thing to do, and the congregation seemed to appreciate what I said. I lectured at the same place on Monday night to about a hundred persons. One lady told me she went to sleep, but I was very well satisfied with the general attention, for it was close.

From West Odessa I came to Sunfield. I could not get the church in the village for lectures. The trustees whom I talked with subscribed for the Cynosure, but seemed to me somewhat timid. I was directed by them to a school-house four miles from town, but I was denied admission to that also. But in this case I thought the reason was quite sufficient. After distributing some tracts, and taking what subscriptions I could, I left Sunfield and came to Grand Ledge.

E. W. SHAW.

IOWA CAMPAIGNING.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Leaving Taintor, I came to Oskaloosa, and did some canvassing, and passed on to Avery, in Monroe county. Here I preached in the new M. E. church, and also spent a little time in canvassing in the adjacent country. I then went to Albia, the county-seat of Monroe county, and called upon the United Presbyterian and Seceder pastors, and upon Rev. Mr. Acheson, the Seceder pastor of Hickory Grove, who has lately been elected theological professor by his church.

From there I went to Ringgold county, where I preached, and then went to Wayne county. Here I preached in the United Brethren church at Big Springs, and preached and lectured in the U. P. church near Lewisburg. The pastor of the Seceder church, Rev. Kasson, in whose church I lectured when I was in this county before, was present.

From Wayne county I returned to Ringgold, and spent a day at the Iowa Conference of the Wesleyan Methodist church, convened at Beaconsfield. The conference named an hour when they would hear me, and I spoke for half or three-quarters of an hour on the atheistical, deistical and Jesuitical character of the secret lodge system, and pointed out some of the dangers to be apprehended in each of these departments of this monster evil.

Bro. Isaiah Ogier of Beaconsfield had undertaken to arrange for me to lecture at Kellerton, in Ringgold county, a place made shamefully notorious by the brutal mobbing of Rev. D. P. Rathbun. He failed to secure a church for me to lecture in, and thought not best to hire a hall. This I regretted, as I wished to demonstrate before the Kellerton churches that the Freemason, and Odd-fellow, and Knights of Pythias, and kindred lodges, are synagogues of Satan, where devils are worshiped, instead of worshiping God as he is manifest in Christ. It may be said of the Kellerton church officially that he certainly would not have stood guard over the false worship of the lodge, and refused to allow me to defend the Gospel of Christ against the conspiracy of Satan, if he had known what he was doing. If he had understood the matter, he certainly would have decided, as did the trustees of the M. E. church of Geneva Lake, Wis., when I applied to them for the use of their church, that I might plead for Christ against the Baal of the lodge. When the fact that Satan is conspiring through the secret lodge system to supplant Christ and subvert Christianity was set before them, they promptly decided that such a conspiracy ought to be exposed, and that the church is the place in which to do it. As the trustees of that M. E. church decided, so will men everywhere decide who know the facts and are loyal to Christ.

From Beaconsfield I went to Smith county in Kansas, and preached once, and once in the adjoining county of Phillips. I then went to Furnas county, Neb., and spent the Sabbath at Beaver City, the county-seat, and preached morning and evening in the M. E. church. From there I returned to Page county, Iowa, and preached the Gospel in its antagonism to the lodge in the Congregational church of College Springs on the morning of the Sabbath, and in the U. P. church, of which Dr. William Johnston, the president of the Iowa Christian Association, is pastor, in the evening.

I will be busy now for the next four weeks in working up the State annual meeting.

C. F. HAWLEY.

—The late Iowa Wesleyan Conference adopted the following minute on secretism:

"We view, with much alarm, the encroachments of this monster upon the domains of the Christian church. And in view of its recent invasion of the United Brethren church, and its stealthy maneuvers to despoil our own loved Zion of its strength and purity, it behooves us to avert a similar disaster by standing firmly upon our principles as laid down in our book of Discipline. Therefore,

"Resolved, That, as ministers, we will unflinchingly enforce our laws on this question, and, as ministers and laymen, will do all we can to disseminate knowledge and secure appropriate action upon the matters of anti-secret reform."

—The Protestant Church of Spain numbers at present 112 chapels and school-houses, 111 parochial schools, with 61 male and 78 female teachers, 2,545 boys and 2,095 girls. There are 80 Sunday-schools, with 183 helpers and 3,231 scholars. The churches are ministered to by 56 pastors and 35 evangelists. The number of regular attendants is 9,164; of communicants, 3,442.

THE HOME.

LIFT ME UP.

Out of myself, dear Lord,
O lift me up!

No more I trust myself in life's dim maze,
Sufficient to myself in all its devious ways;
I trust no more, but humbly at Thy throne
Pray, "Lead me, for I cannot go alone."

Out of my weary self,
O lift me up!

I faint—the road winds upward all the way;
Each night but ends another weary day.
Give me Thy strength, and may I be so blest,
As on "the heights" I find the longed-for rest.

Out of my selfish self,
O lift me up!

To live for others, and in living so
To bear a blessing wheresoe'er I go;
To give the sunshine, and the clouds conceal,
Or let them but the silver sides reveal.

Out of my lonely self,
O lift me up!

Though our hearts with love is running o'er,
Though dear ones fill my lonely home no more,
Though every day I miss the fond caress,
Help me to join in others' happiness.

Out of my doubting self,
O lift me up!

Help me to feel that Thou art always near,
E'en though 'tis night, and all around seems drear,
Help me to know that, though I cannot see,
It is my Father's hand that leadeth me.

ABIDING IN CHRIST.

One afternoon, in an inland city in China, feeling almost in spiritual despair, I was reading my Greek Testament, and in the sixth chapter of St. John's Gospel, reading in course, I came across a verse which struck me as it had never done before. I was reading from the fifty-second verse onward; and if you will just turn to that passage, perhaps the train of thought that was such a help to me may help some one else here.

In the fifty-sixth verse: "He that eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, abideth in me, and I in him." I had read the verse in the Authorized Version, "dwelleth in me, and I in him," a hundred times, and never connected it in my mind with this fifteenth chapter, where the word happened to be rendered in that version, "abide in me." But, of course, reading it in the original, my mind was carried on by the verb from the sixth to the fifteenth chapter, and I saw at once—why! here is a little light on this great and difficult problem. I have evidently been making a mistake about this subject of "abiding in Christ."

I had thought that abiding in Christ meant keeping our hearts so fixed upon Christ, so constantly meditating upon him and dwelling in him, that we never lost the consciousness of his presence. I thought we were continually, so to speak, to realize his presence, and continually to look to him for blessing and help and guidance. Now, what I thought was abiding I have since seen was feeding upon Christ. Feeding is a voluntary act. We go to the table and sit down, and partake of what is there. That is a voluntary act. But the man who wanted to feed all the day, and wanted to feed all the night, too, wouldn't be a desirable member of any community. That was what I was trying to do, and because I couldn't manage it, I would get into a sort of almost religious dyspepsia.

I had a little hospital and dispensary work that kept me busy. Perhaps a man would be brought into the place with an artery cut and in imminent danger; within half an hour the question whether he would live or die would be settled, and one's whole attention would be wrapped up in the patient, and one wouldn't think of a thing else until the result was known; and then the thought would steal over me, "Why, for two hours I haven't thought about Jesus!" and I would go off into my closet almost in despair and confess this sin. I was in very great distress, indeed. I wanted to be feeding at the table all the time. Now, if a man has two or three square meals every day, and perhaps a lunch or two between, he ought to be able to go to work.

Abiding in Jesus isn't fixing our attention on Christ, but it is being one with him. And it doesn't make any difference what we are doing, or whether we are asleep or awake. A man is abiding just as much when he is sleeping for Jesus as when he is awake and working for Jesus. O, it is a very sweet thing to have one's mind just resting there!—Rev. J. Hudson Taylor.

THREE "SHALLS."

I want you, Christian worker, to put them in your knapsack. If you are registered, rejoicing, and at rest, then "the peace of God which passeth all understanding shall keep your hearts and minds," (Phil. 4: 7). It is a certainty. It is not the peace of earth that may be broken up so quickly; it is the peace of God. I believe it is possible for the child of God to have this unbroken peace, year by year. Every true worker ought to seek to possess, by the grace of God, the consciousness of this peace permanent in his soul.

Pass on to another "shall" in verse 9: "The God of peace shall be with you." We have spoken of the peace of God, but here we have the God of peace, which is still better. To have a cheque out of a cheque-book is good; but it is better to have the banker himself. Do we know anything of this continual presence of God with us? Mr. F. Arnot, the African traveler, who has been with us for some time, lately told me that he was sustained amid all the difficulty, disease, and danger of his long journeys by the consciousness of the presence of the living God with him. That is what we all want.

Yet one other "shall," (verse 19): "My God shall supply all your need," etc. The apostle in writing to the Philippians says they were the only church that had supplied his need and ministered to him. Child of God, minister, wherever you go, to the Lord and to his people. Give away Jesus; give away some word of his; some blessed promise, something which is of Christ—a kind word, a shake of the hand, a look, a song for him; give what you can, if it is only the widow's farthing. We have had the "shall" of peace, the "shall" of the presence, and now we have the "shall" of supply. My God shall supply; there is no doubt about it. This is what I call "the armchair promise"—like the luxurious armchairs they make nowadays, with cushions all around it. Wherever you turn you lean on a great promise.—Rev. C. A. Fox in The Christian.

THE STORY OF ANOTHER SAMUEL WHOSE MOTHER WAS HANNAH.

ADJAI, THE SLAVE BOY.

A long time ago, in the rude African village of Oshugun, in the kingdom of Yoruba, there lived a family consisting of a father and mother, two little daughters, and a son about 11 years old, named Adjai. This little family was prosperous and happy, until, in 1821, came a most dreadful day. One morning the awful cry rang through the village from one end to the other: "The men-stealers are coming! The men-stealers are coming!" Alas! it was too true. On they came, a company of cruel, heartless men, from a hostile tribe, who had come to capture as many as possible, to sell them to the Portuguese slave-traders. There had been trouble between the tribes, and this was their revenge.

The brave little village made a noble fight for freedom, but in the terrible struggle the town was captured, its homes burned to the ground, and its people—men, women and children—dragged away to be sold. And what became of our little family? The father fell in the struggle, and the rest were all captured, and their necks bound together with strong cords. Very soon they were separated; the mother and baby sister were allotted to a warrior, while Adjai and the other sisters became the property of a chief, who soon bartered them away for a horse. But the horse did not suit him, so he insisted on having Adjai back again, and sent the child away in chains to the slave market to be sold. Within a few months this little lad of 11 years was sold four times, the price being much rum and tobacco.

All this time his fear was terrible lest he should be sold to white men, and carried away to some foreign land. He often planned to strangle himself, and once went so far as to try to throw himself into the river. But he was prevented and his life was spared. God had a great use to make of him, and was watching over him, and causing "all things to work together for good" for him.

At last his worst fears were realized, and he was actually sold to a white master, who put him, with many others, into the slave barracoons. After lying there four weary months, they were all—187—marched to the beach and crowded into the hold of a slave-ship.

But the slave trade was hateful to all human people, and a British vessel happened to be on the outlook along the African coast for these very slave-ships. So it captured the vessel and set the slaves free. They were all taken on board the British man-of-war. Adjai and five others, all quite young, were kept together, dreading all sorts of horrible things, from the stories the Portuguese had told them. When these poor children saw a pile of cannon-balls on the deck, they thought they were roasted heads of human beings, and they were sure the pieces of salt pork were the remains of a cannibal feast, and they expected every minute that it would be their turn to be butchered! But they soon found they were among friends.

FINDING HIS LIFE-WORK.

The children freed by the British man-of-war were taken to Sierra Leone, and placed in the mission school at Freetown—blessed name!—under the care of Mr. and Mrs. Weeks. Among them were Adjai and a little girl from the same tribe, named Asano. Our hero was so eager to learn that when his first day at school was over he begged a half-penny, and bought a card for himself. In three days he had mastered the entire alphabet, and in six months could read the New Testament.

Three years after entering the school he became a Christian, and on December 11, 1825, at the age of 15 years, he was baptized and given the name Samuel Crowther, after an English clergyman. Henceforth we know him, not as "Adjai, the slave boy," but as "Samuel Crowther, the free man in Jesus Christ." Next came his earnest desire to preach to his own people, and he proceeded to prepare himself for it. At last he secured a good education and began his life-work. He was married to Asano, the little girl who had shared with him the terrors of the slave-ship, and they taught in a Christian school at Regent's Town for a number of years.

SAMUEL CROWTHER, THE BISHOP.

Samuel Crowther was doing good work in Regent's Town, but God meant that, in his own good time, the little slave-boy should go back to his old home and win souls for Christ. Once more we see "all things working together for good" and for the accomplishment of God's purpose. In 1841 the English Government undertook to explore the Niger, and Samuel was invited to accompany them. Many of the party died, and the whole thing was a failure; but Samuel lived, and made a firm resolve to go as a missionary to that region. So he went to England and was formally ordained in London as a missionary. Just twenty-one years after he was put on board the slave-ship he was preaching to his own people, who marveled as they heard one of their own race preaching in their native Yoruba, and the whole church rang with the cry, "Ke oh sheh! Ke oh sheh!" (So let it be.)

After a while a new city was built by the tribes that had suffered so terribly from men-stealers, and many of the slaves made their way back from all over Africa to their own native land. They called the city Abeokuta, and Samuel Crowther was sent to labor there. And now comes the most romantic and touching part of the story. Just three weeks after he reached the city he found his mother and sisters! It was twenty-five long years since the cruel men-stealers had dragged them apart, and now God has united them again, and restored them to each other. The meeting can be better imagined than described. To his great joy he had the privilege of receiving all three into the Christian church of which he was pastor. Surely God has blessed him richly, and honored him greatly. His mother was baptized. "Hannah, mother of Samuel."

For twenty years he and his faithful wife labored here. He translated the Scriptures, the prayer-book and the school-books into the native Yoruba, and gave himself up to the elevation of his people.

When the English bishop died Samuel Crowther was found to be better fitted for the place than any one else; so he was called to England, and on June 29, 1864, he was consecrated in the Cathedral of Canterbury, by the Archbishop of Canterbury, as the "first black bishop of Africa since the disappearance of the Christian church from Africa more than twelve hundred years ago." His wife, Asano, and Mrs. Weeks, wife of his first teacher, came to England to be present at the consecration.

And now we know him as Dr. Samuel Crowther, missionary bishop of Africa. For another twenty-five years God has used him for service among his people. His wife, the noble Asano, died only a few years ago, after over fifty years of married life, but the good bishop still lives, an earnest, whole-souled man, thoroughly devoted to his chosen work, and very successful in it. Long may he be spared to his missionary field on the banks of the Niger!

And this is the story of another Samuel—surely he, too, was called by God, and hearkened unto the call. His mother, too, was Hannah—only he brought her to God, instead of her bringing him, as the first Hannah did. Both Samuels have done glorious service for God, and both shall have their reward.—Belle M. Brain, in the Herald and Presbyter.

A LITTLE SUNBEAM.

A little sunbeam in the sky

Said to itself one day:

"I'm very small, but why should I

Do nothing else but play?

I'll go down to the earth and see

If there is any use for me."

The violet beds were wet with dew,

Which filled each heavy cup;

The little sunbeam darted through,

And raised their blue heads up.

They smiled to see it, and they lent

The morning breeze their sweetest scent.

A mother 'neath a shady tree

It woke and cried, but when it spied

The little sunbeam peep

So slyly in, with glance so bright.

It laughed and chuckled with delight.

On, on it went, it might not stay;

Now through a window small

It poured its glad but tiny ray,

And danced upon the wall.

A pale young face looked up to meet

The sunbeam she had watched to greet.

And so it traveled to and fro,

And glanced and danced about;

And not a door was shut, I know,

To keep that sunbeam out;

But ever as it touched the earth,

It woke up happiness and mirth.

For loving words, like sunbeams, will

Dry up a fallen tear,

And loving deeds will often help

A broken heart to cheer.

So loving and so living, you

Will be a little sunbeam too.

TEMPERANCE.

LEGISLATIVE PROHIBITION THE ONLY PREVENTIVE TO DRUNKENNESS IN THE PEOPLE'S POWER.

This principle of the right and duty of legal legislative prohibition, that is of defence by law and constitution AGAINST the liquor traffic, is simply the Christian and moral life of the church, of embodied Christianity, taking on its legitimate and providential form. It is the Christian prayers and labors of the last sixty years coming to a head and becoming realized. It is enthusiasm for humanity and moral reform condensed and formulated into constitution and law.

The prohibitory law, constitutional prohibition, is no foundling, without father or mother. But it is the normal birth, the legitimate offspring of the Christian life and principle of New England. That spiritual life—that solid principle—virtually overthrew and abolished American slavery. Strongly entrenched in the constitution, entwined with the laws and usages of the land, thousands of good men under the prejudice of their proslavery training, thought it to be right, pleaded for it as a divine institution, and would neither pray nor vote against it.

But the life of Christ in men wrought on and developed. The eyes of the understanding were opened. Ears that had been deaf became sensitive to the sighs of suffering. The motto and the picture of Garrison's Liberator, a kneeling slave in chains and saying: "Am I not a man and a brother?" touched the sensibility. Conscience was quickened. Remembrance was had of them that were in bonds as bound with them. The churches of the North were urged to refuse fellowship with slave-holders. The Church Anti-Slavery Society was instituted on that foundation, and did its work in educating public sentiment, even as Prohibitionists are now helping to make the public opinion of the nation upon the question of prohibition.

Torrey and Lovejoy, John Brown and others came and were crucified by the scribes and Pharisees of the Slavocracy and the Pilates of power. The touching appeal to universal humanity in the inspired story of Uncle Tom's Cabin* told upon the heart of the nation, while it drew upon our Republic, boasting of its freedom, the lightning of scorn and indignation from other lands.

The metropolitan pulpit of the Puritans on Union Square, New York, with an uncompromising Elijah for its mouth-piece, let loose the resistless thunderbolts of God's Word against slavery. In the fullness of time divine providence interposed by a civil war waged by slaveholding secessionists in behalf of their so-called domestic institution.

National emancipation came, in the course of events, an absolute necessity to the continued life of the nation. The voice of God was, Either American slavery or the great American Republic must die the death. The immortal decree went forth, wrested only by ultimate necessity, that made Lincoln the liberator. The monster abomination was slain forever, by war, by law, by constitution; and all the world said amen.

So now, in the moral war with intemperance, after years of unavailing yet preparatory skirmishing with argument, moral suasion only, and regulation for our weapons, but all the while getting into closer quarters with the detestable rum traffic and manufacturing itself, we have at length reached the conclusion which Lincoln so slowly reached in regard to slavery, that our war must be a Christian war of annihilation. To abolish liquor-selling by law, constitution, and by public opinion, as we have abolished slavery by the same means, must henceforth be our determined effort and aim.

To that great end our moral and religious principle, so far from being laid aside at the ballot-box, is to go with and guide us in all our political actions. We have found that politics are corrupt because Christian men have not carried Christian leadership, Christian principles, Christian methods, and Christian usages into them; because they have not infused the saving salt of religion into the pool of politics. Hence its impurity, hence its offensiveness.

But now henceforth and forever, is it too much to say? Principle is to prevail over policy. Should I not rather put it, principle is to become policy? Temperance in its double right as a political and moral question planting itself at the polls, is there to stay till it controls every man's political action.

The true Christian life, swelling full and strong in the temperance reform, is to impregnate the conscience, inform the judgment, energize the will, control the conduct, till men are ready to become martyrs to principle, enthusiasts for humanity, as John Brown was martyr to his Christian hatred of slavery; as honest John Bright was martyr to his Christian hatred of war, so as to abjure office with all its high honors and emoluments, and break with the Premier of Great Britain himself, and his dearest friend, Gladstone, rather than countenance for a moment England's part in the Crimean war, or England's bombardment of Alexandria.

So will this enthusiasm for a principle necessitate with us the breaking of old party ties and friendships. This will cast off the fear of the party lash when political parties have become recreant to right and purity. This will lead its possessors in solid phalanx to stand and be counted, to speak and to vote constitutional and statutory prohibition against the traffic in rum, as they once did against the traffic in slaves.

Thanks be to God, that time has now come, and let no manly voter in old Connecticut miss his opportunity. But let him know that only by and through political voting action at the polls can the cause of reform gain any substantial success. Let us therefore join with patriotic enthusiasm to raise an effective break-water against the high license tidal wave that is rolling in from the doomed distilleries and breweries of Massachusetts, Pennsylvania and New York; those potent producers of distilled death and liquid damnation, that are fast passing into the hands of foreign un-American syndicates, and are becoming the most perilous political menace to this American Republic.

*Lord Palmerston said, "I have not read a novel for thirty years, but I have read Uncle Tom's Cabin three times, not for the story, but its statesmanship."

Nay, more, is it too much to say that this self-same liquor traffic, now commanded so largely by foreign capital, and the secret combinations in the land, have in them the pregnant elements of a possible Reign of Terror, more dreadful than France or any nation has yet known? A Reign of Terror that may prove to be the Almighty's way of punishing us for licensing so long the pernicious traffic in rum as the Rebellion was his way of punishing us for the toleration of slavery.

Let us then cease tempting God to let fall such a dire disaster, that will be a historic horror incomparably worse than the late fall of the millionaire pleasure pond upon the Valley of the Conemaugh! Let us make haste while it is in our power to preclude such a catastrophe, by a popular vote for the legislative constitutional prohibition of the manufacture and sale of strong drink!—Tract for the times by Rev. Henry T. Cheever.

TOBACCO BLINDNESS.

This infirmity, it is said, is becoming a common affliction. At present there are several persons under treatment for it at one London hospital. It first takes the form of color blindness, the sufferers, who have smoked themselves into this condition, being quite unable to distinguish the color of a piece of red cloth held up before them. Sometimes the victim loses his eyesight altogether. Tobacco being a narcotic, naturally benumbs the nerves. When the nerves are thus benumbed people do not see as distinctly, and this defectiveness of vision tends to increase and become permanent.

FIGHTING THE SALOONS SINGLE-HANDED.

Mrs. Thomas Woods of Warsaw, Ind., has begun an active war against the saloons of that place. Some time ago she served notice upon the proprietors of several saloons forbidding them to sell liquor to her husband, who is an ex-county clerk and prominent in the business world. These notices were uniformly disregarded, and a few days ago she entered one of the drinking places and smashed a costly mirror. Next day she went into Rosseau's saloon, threw a hammer through a large mirror, and broke the front windows of the place. She was not arrested, and public sentiment is in her favor. She says she means to keep up her peculiar style of warfare till the sale of liquor to her husband is discontinued.

FOURTEEN DAYS IN A DRUNKEN STUPOR.

A Hungarian at Rock Glen, Pa., lately awoke from a fourteen days' sleep. About eight weeks ago he started on a spree, and drank eight gallons of the worst liquor in the coal region. He then dropped into a stupor, and for seven days laid in the bush. At the end of that time he was found by the overseer of the poor and carried into a shanty near the railroad. Here the fellow slept. He was visited by the people in the neighborhood, but all efforts to awake him failed. A physician examined him and found that his circulation was all right and that his pulse registered 64. He finally awoke and walked down to the hotel, where he took his morning "bracer."

No dying man ever endorsed the saloon. Why, then, should the living?

A sepulchre at midnight in winter is as a palace to the life of the wife of a drunkard.

The son of a dram drinker is born with the odds of life against him at the start.

The butcher's slaughter pen is much less a public nuisance than the saloon-keeper's slaughter house.

NOTICES.

IOWA.

Notice is hereby given, that, in accordance with arrangements made by the State Agent and approved by members of the Executive Committee, the annual meeting of the Iowa Christian Association, opposed to secret societies, will be held in Blanchard, Page county, Iowa, commencing Wednesday evening, November 6th, and continuing through the following day. OHIO.

Dear brethren in Christ, together with all who desire the purity of the church and the maintenance of justice and civil equality: Recent developments in Chicago and elsewhere of the inherent nature and tendency of the secret lodge system to promote and conceal crime, to pervert justice and corrupt public morals, and, above all, to subvert and destroy the religion of our Lord Jesus Christ, makes it more than ever important that we renew and press forward our warfare with the "unfruitful works of darkness."

It has been determined to call our annual meeting at Senecaville. Our meeting will, D. V., be held in the Wesleyan Methodist church, and be opened Tuesday, Oct. 22, at 7:30 P. M., and continue, if thought best, during the 23rd and 24th. Let there be a full attendance. By request.

H. H. HINMAN,
Agent of N. C. A.

Persons attending the Ohio Annual Meeting should come by the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad to Morgan Junction (near Cambridge, Guernsey county), and there they will find trains at 11 A. M. and at 4 P. M. which will take them (four miles) to Senecaville. Arrangements will be made for entertainment. Persons expecting to be present and desiring entertainment will write to Rev. E. Thompson, Senecaville, Ohio.

ILLINOIS STATE CONVENTION.

The annual Convention of the Illinois Christian Association will be held in Elgin, November 5th and 6th, opening on the evening of the 5th. The work of this Association in saving men from the secret orders, should command the attention and secure the co-operation of all Christian churches and patriotic citizens. Among the interesting features of this convention will be an oratorical contest by the College students of Northern Illinois, and addresses by Col. George R. Clarke of the Pacific Garden Mission, Chicago; and Miss E. E. Flagg, New England agent of the N. C. A. Other addresses are expected from Mrs. Gleason, one of the most popular of the W. C. T. U. speakers of New England, Rev. L. A. Johnston of Rockford, President C. A. Blanchard, and Prof. J. N. Bedford. The business of the convention will have an important bearing on the work during the year to come, and every sympathizer with the objects of the Association is most cordially invited to be present. The Executive Committee also make a special request of all Christian churches to be represented by a delegation appointed for the purpose.

All desiring entertainment will please write to Mrs. C. W. Crabtree, 331 Center St., Elgin, Ill.

NEW YORK.

To the friends of the anti-secrecy cause in New York, greeting.

DEAR FRIENDS:—We believe the time has come when we should again assemble in convention to further the interests of our cause in this State. As the lodge has but recently asserted its right to try, condemn and execute its offending members, as evinced in the case of Dr. Cronin, we deem it an opportune time to again rally our forces and join our protest with those proclaimed in thunder tones through the land. You are therefore requested to meet in Houghton, Alleghany county, N. Y., at two o'clock Wednesday, October 23rd, to elect officers for the ensuing year, discuss questions pertaining to the furtherance of the cause, and such business as may properly come before you. All churches in sympathy are requested to send delegates. The convention will continue through the following day and evening, and longer if the interests of the cause demand. Able speakers will be present and address the convention. The editor of the Cynosure, ex-President Blanchard; the General Agent, J. P. Stoddard; and the Washington Agent, W. B. Stoddard, are expected. Rev. N. Wardner and others are invited. Will not everyone who feels interested make a special effort to be present, and come praying that this may be the grandest convention we have ever held in the State, and greatly further the cause it represents?

Houghton is on the Rochester branch of the Western N. Y. and Penn. R. R., seventy-two miles south of Rochester. For further information address, W. B. Stoddard, Dale, N. Y.

COMMENTS ON THE S. S. LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The blessedness of the forgiven sinner, vs. 1, 2. The reason why the Psalms of David have been such a storehouse of comfort and strength for Christians in all ages is because they voice David's own experience. They are not the expression of what he thought he ought to feel, or what he tried to feel, but of what he actually did feel. He had sinned most deeply and repented most bitterly, and so he could sing of the blessedness of forgiveness from a full heart. It is not the mere getting rid of the consequences of sin which constitutes this blessedness. The results of David's terrible crime followed him all his life. It is the getting rid of sin itself. He is blessed "in whose spirit there is no guile." This forgiveness is not a Romish indulgence. It is not a license to commit further sin, but it eradicates from the heart the desire of sinning. All man-invented ways, though they may throw a veil of priestly absolution over guilt, never touch its root in that evil heart of unbelief which prefers sin to holiness.

2. The need of confession, vs. 3-5. Psalm 51 contains David's confession, which has been for ages so dear to the repentant sinner. "He that confesseth and forsaketh his sins shall find mercy." The mere forsaking of sin is not enough, though, as a matter of fact, a sin is never really forsaken until it is confessed. God's love requires confession. He knows that the sinner can neither be cleansed nor have a mind at peace until the poison is expelled, as it were, by this act of humble contrition. A sore must be laid bare to the surgeon before he can apply either the knife or the healing balm. When a man has injured others by his bad example a penitent confession of his sin goes far towards repairing the evil he has done. Some think it is enough to forsake the lodge without exposing and denouncing it, but a true Christian will not feel at peace till he has confessed his sin in taking such oaths and obligations upon him, and exposed their iniquity.

3. The joy of forgiveness, vs. 6-11. A forgiven sinner ought to be full of joy. A despondent, morose, unhappy Christian stultifies his own testimony. The world will not believe that it is such a blessed thing to be pardoned of God if no beatitude shines in the face or rings in the voice. A forgiven sinner should be joyful for many reasons. (1) Because he is safe. "The floods of great waters shall not come nigh him." Temptation has lost its power. In the very act of humbly confessing himself a sinner, ruined and undone, he has crept beneath Jehovah's protecting wings,

"Where he can smile at Satan's rage,
And face a frowning world."

(2) He has surrendered his own will, and in so doing has secured a divine Teacher and Guide. Though all the wisdom of the world be at fault, he need not err, or mistake the path of duty. (3) He is saved from worldly perplexities and cares. Having given himself to the Lord, he can trust all his temporal concerns in the same Almighty hands. There is a sense in which God guides the affairs of all, but they who have no thought nor care for his providential dealings he guides as with bit and bridle, like the horse or mule; but the Christian has the privilege of being guided like a child, by his Father's eye. It follows that we should be very sensitive to the least indications of God's will; that we should not take part in doubtful amusements or worldly pleasures, or do or say anything on which we are not absolutely sure of God's blessing. Let us not be like unintelligent brute beasts, which must be forced by bit or bridle to take the right way. The Christian should not be afraid "to let his joys be known," and if he is as happy as he ought to be he will be very likely to overleap the limits of conventional propriety. The duty of praising God for pardoned sin is as imperative as the duty of confessing it.

HELPEFUL THOUGHTS FROM PELOUBET'S QUARTERLY.

WHY DAVID'S SIN IS RECORDED.—Two chapters of Samuel and two Psalms are given to the sin and repentance of David, while his whole life of victories and conquests is briefly narrated in one chapter of Samuel and one of Chronicles. (1) The Bible would give a true picture of its saints.

The book of truth must be true in its history. (2) The record brings hope and comfort to true penitents in all ages. Who would dare to hope if only good things were recorded of Bible saints? (3) The record shows us the way out of sin into a holier and better life.

THREE WAYS OF EXPRESSING FORGIVENESS.—(1) By FORGIVEN, implying atonement; and reception back into God's family as if we had never sinned. The conscience relieved. (2) COVERED, blotted out of remembrance; hidden by the marvellous love of God; and the sinner treated as if he had no sins. The memory relieved. (3) Not imputed, as a debt is no longer recorded. The record is made right.

DAYS OF PRAYER FOR SUNDAY-SCHOOLS.

For seventeen years the London Sunday-school Union has issued an annual call for universal prayer for Sunday-schools. This year they set apart Sunday and Monday, October 20 and 21.

The following arrangements are suggested by the Committee of the Sunday-school Union for observance as far as practicable:

That on Lord's Day morning, October 20, from 7 to 8 o'clock, private intercessory prayer be offered on behalf of Sunday-schools.

That the opening engagements of the morning school be preceded by a meeting of the teachers for prayer, or that, instead of the usual morning school exercises, a prayer-meeting of the teachers, scholars, and congregation be held.

That ministers be asked to preach special sermons on the claims of the Sunday-school, and the necessity for increased preparation and consecration on the part of teachers.

That in the afternoon, the ordinary engagements of each school be shortened, and the scholars unite in a devotional service, interspersed with singing and appropriate addresses. To this service the parents of the scholars might be invited.

That at the close of the afternoon or evening service, the teachers, in unison with other Christians, meet for thanksgiving and prayer.

That on Monday morning, October 21, teachers again bring their scholars, one by one, in private prayer before God.

That in the course of the day the female teachers of each school hold a meeting for united prayer and thanksgiving, and that, in the evening, each church or congregation be invited to hold a meeting, at which the interest of the Sunday-school should be the theme of the prayers and addresses.

That on the evenings of one or more of the following days, special services for young people be held where practicable.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—The first anniversary of the Iowa Sabbath Association will be held in the Central Presbyterian church of Des Moines, Nov. 12 and 13. Among the speakers announced are Gov. Wm. Larrabee, Pres. Chas. A. Blanchard, Victor F. Lawson of the Chicago News, Pres. Stetson of Des Moines, Hon. L. S. Coffin, and Hon. John Mahin. All churches, Y. M. C. A., W. C. T. U. and other organizations in sympathy with this movement, by contributing the small sum of $2 are entitled to send two delegates, and any person paying $1 to assist in this work is entitled to take part in the deliberations.

—We find the following in the Christian Worker: "Jesse George, a brother of Naomi George, one of the lady missionaries in Jamaica, has been employed by Iowa Yearly Meeting's Foreign Missionary Committee to take the place of Josiah Dillon in the work on that island. He sailed from Boston on the steamer Marmion, on the 28th ult." Josiah Dillon has very earnestly combated the lodge evil in Jamaica by the distribution of judicious literature sent him by means of the foreign fund of the N. C. A.

—The Department of State, at Washington, has been informed of the recent generous gift by the King of Siam, for the use of the American Presbyterian Mission, of one of the royal palaces, together with extensive grounds and buildings.

—There are now twenty-seven vessels engaged in missionary work in different parts of the world under the auspices of sixteen societies; of these missionary vessels sixteen are running on the coasts or rivers of Africa and six among the islands of the Pacific ocean.

—The National Meeting of the Evangelical Alliance at Boston, December 4th to 6th, will consider the following among other topics: From Washington to Boston (a historical statement), The Needs of the City, The Needs of the Rural Districts, The Mountain Whites of the South, Needs of the Times and the Alliance Methods, Christian Co-operation in Awakening and Directing the Moral Sentiment of the Community, Christian Co-operation in Relation to Moral Legislation, The Need of Permeating our Developing Civilization with the Spirit of Christ, Christianity and the State, Our Debt and Duty to the Immigrant Population, French Canadians in the United States, Slavonic Populations in the United States, Arousing and Training the Activity of the Laity, Need of an Enthusiasm for Humanity on the Part of the Churches, Need of Personal Contact between Christians and Non-church-goers. The invitation to attend is extended to all who are interested, Ministerial Associations, Colleges, and Theological Seminaries are especially invited to send representatives, as to the Washington Conference.

LODGE NOTES.

The visiting Knights Templars at Washington complain that the hotel bar-keepers watered the whisky. If those dispensers of wet goods dare to do such a thing after Congress assembles the national capital will be speedily removed to Kentucky. It is significant, by the way, that the Knights Templars committee on location has recommended that the organization meet next time in Louisville.—Daily News.

The Grand Lodge of Scotland has jurisdiction over subordinate bodies in the following countries, where no Grand Lodge exists: In India, 37 lodges; Australia, 18; New Zealand, 51; Africa, 16; Egypt, 2; the West Indies, 21; North American (Newfoundland), 2; Central America, 2; China, 4; Japan, 3; Gibraltar, 2; Fiji Islands, 1; Syria, 1. Also in India, Queensland, Chili, Peru and Bermuda, or about 166 of its 757 lodges are scattered to the four quarters of the globe.

A convention of the Clan-na-Gael is to be held in this city in November, upon the result of which depends largely the future of that infamous secret organization. Luke Dillon, M. Scanlon, Dr. McCahy, P. Stanton, and J. Casey, constituting the executive board, have issued a circular in which they ask that all camps of the United Brotherhood of the Clan-na-Gael at their next meeting elect delegates to a convention to be held in Chicago some time in November. The main object of the convention is to reorganize the Clan-na-Gael, according to the call.

Delegates from nine States of the order of Pythian Sisters, the woman's rank of the Knights of Pythias, met in Indianapolis, Ind., Oct. 10, and organized a "Supreme Temple of the World" by electing officers, who were installed by the founder of the order, J. A. Hill of Green Castle, Ind. The titles of these ladies are Oriental in magniloquence, thus: Past supreme chief of temple, supreme chief, supreme senior, supreme junior, supreme manager supreme mistress of records and correspondence, supreme mistress of finance, supreme protector, supreme guard.

In response to a call issued by the Pennsylvania Masonic Veterans' Association representatives from New York, Illinois, the Pacific coast, Pennsylvania, and the District of Columbia met and organized the Masonic Veterans' Association, to be composed of Masons of twenty-one years' or more standing. Resolutions were adopted asking all Masons eligible to membership to organize and send delegates to the next meeting, which will be held at the time and place selected for the next triennial conclave. Albert Pike was elected president, but he declined, and the honorary title of past president was conferred upon him.

October in Chicago this year will be a great month for Masons. Besides the Grand Lodge, on Tuesday, Oct. 22, will be held the thirty-third annual conclave of the Grand Commandery of Knights Templar of Illinois, the place of assembly being the asylum of Apollo Commandery No. 1, in the American Express Company's building. The forty-seventh annual assembly of the grand council of royal and select masters of the State of Illinois will convene in the Masonic temple, also in the Express Company's building Oct. 23. The fortieth annual convocation of the Grand Chapter of Royal Arch Masons, of the State of Illinois, will be held in the Masonic rooms, same building, Oct. 24.

The reports show that there are 78,347 Knights Templar in the United States. The first general Grand Encampment in the United States was held in New York, June 20, 1816, when there were only 500 Sir Knights in the Union. De Witt Clinton was Grand Master from that date until his death in 1828. The progress of the order was slow up to 1840, and as late as 1859 there were only 5,743 members. There were 70,000 in 1886, 75,313 in 1888, and 78,349 in May, 1889. The Grand Encampment is composed of its own officers, all past grand masters, deputy grand masters, grand generalissimos and grand captains general of the Grand Encampment, all grand commanders, past grand commanders, deputy grand commanders, grand generalissimos, and all captains general acknowledging the jurisdiction of the Grand Encampment of the United States and also the first three officers of each commandery that holds its charter immediately from the Grand Encampment. There are now thirty-six Grand Commanderies in the United States.—Inter-Ocean.

News comes from Wilson county, Tenn., that the Mormon elders have been driven out by the White Caps. The elders disappeared some time ago when the agitation was hot against them, but a few days ago returned believing the storm to have blown over. Their incendiary utterances were not forgotten, however, and the people who warned them proposed to make their threats good. Forty or fifty men masked and robed in white visited the houses where the elders had been, searching for them. Some one, however, had given warning and not an elder was to be found. The experience of a lady of the neighborhood, now in Bowles, Ky., has had a beneficial effect. She went to Utah as a convert expecting to find the garden of Eden, but is back in her old home wiser and warning others. She gives sickening pictures of the sin and suffering there.

FARM NOTES.OCTOBER LABORS AND DUTIES.

October is not usually a very busy season on the farm, yet there are some important labors to be performed. The gathering and storing or marketing of fall crops—the fruits of the season's outdoor operations and investments—require careful attention in order that the work may be done properly, without waste or damage. The wise husbandman will exercise both brains and brawn in harvesting and securing or selling what has cost him much time, thought and labor. For what has been planted and cultivated with care and at more or less expense is so valuable that the producer cannot afford to allow a material percentage to be wasted or damaged in digging, picking, storing or marketing. Therefore the prudent farmer will be wide-awake and personally superintend the manipulations involved in securing his corn, potato, apple and other crops, that nothing may be unnecessarily lost or injured through neglect or procrastination. The provident and systematic cultivator will not only avoid all wastes but see that his crops are secured in season and in the best condition for use or sale, unless the weather prove exceptionally unfavorable.

Preparing for winter is one of the imperative duties of the farmer which should be performed in this latitude before the close of October. The dwelling should first be put in order to assure the comfort of the family, and then provision be made for the shelter and warmth of live stock. Economy and comfort alike demand the exclusion of biting frost from the habitation of man, and the due protection of his domestic animals in winter. As we printed many years ago, a warm, comfortable house, a good wood-shed well filled with seasoned fuel, a cellar frost-proof and well stored with garden vegetables, choice winter apples, meat, butter and lard, are things to be thought of in October. Thus prepared the farmer and his family ought to enjoy the long evenings and comparatively leisure days of the hibernating season—the season for recreation and mental improvement. An ample supply of good books and periodicals should be provided for the entertainment and instruction of the various members of the household, while all fathers of families should watch the district schools and see to the education of the children.—N. Y. Witness.

FALL CARE OF SHRUBS.

It is a mistake to let shrubs go without attention during the summer, and growing season. Then it is, that they should be brought into good shape, for, by watching them as growth is made, one can see where pruning and training is required, and the necessary work can be done at just the time when it will do most good, for shrubs are more tractable while forming branches than they are afterward. If you allow a shrub to grow to suit itself all summer, and attempt to rectify what you consider its mistake in fall, you will find that a great deal of its summer growth may have to be removed to secure anything like symmetrical shape, and of course these surplus branches indicate a good deal of growth which has been wasted. So much of the vitality of the plant as was taken to produce them been expended uselessly; proper attention at the proper time would have thrown this energy into the shrub.

But we must take things as we find them, and fall finds most shrubs in need of a judicious pruning, if we would have them take on a shapely form. Therefore when getting ready to give them the winter protection, which most of them require to a greater or lesser extent, give them a good pruning, and make them symmetrical. It is well to do this before the coming of very cold weather, so that the fresh cuts on the limbs will have a little chance to heal or at least dry over before they are laid down and covered.—Eben E. Rexford in October Ladies' Home Journal.

"Like Magic,"

THE effect produced by Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. Colds, Coughs, Croup, and Sore Throat are, in most cases, immediately relieved by the use of this wonderful remedy.

It strengthens the vocal organs, allays irritation, and prevents the inroads of Consumption; in every stage of that dread disease, Ayer's Cherry Pectoral relieves coughing and induces refreshing rest.

"I have used Ayer's Cherry Pectoral in my family for thirty years and have always found it the best remedy for croup, to which complaint my children have been subject."—Capt. U. Carley, Brooklyn, N. Y.

"From an experience of over thirty years in the sale of proprietary medicines, I feel justified in recommending Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. One of the best recommendations of the Pectoral is the enduring quality of its popularity, it being more salable now than it was twenty-five years ago, when its great success was considered marvelous."—R. S. Drake, M. D., Beloit, Kans.

"My little sister, four years of age, was so ill from bronchitis that we had almost given up hope of her recovery. Our family physician, a skilful man and of large experience, pronounced it useless to give her any more medicine; saying that he had done all it was possible to do, and we must prepare for the worst. As a last resort, we determined to try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and I can truly say, with the most happy results. After taking a few doses she seemed to breathe easier, and, within a week, was out of danger. We continued giving the Pectoral until satisfied she was entirely well. This has given me unbounded faith in the preparation, and I recommend it confidently to my customers."—C. O. Lepper, Druggist, Fort Wayne, Ind.

Wonderful and Startling!
HAVE YOU READ IT?

It will create a sensation and "open" the eyes of every true American to see the "Danger Ahead," and expose the secret of Rome's attack upon our Public Schools. This wonderful book is none other than

THE SECRET INSTRUCTIONS

OF THE

JESUITS.

Published by an ex-Romanist.

This work is a translation from the Latin of the "Secret Instructions of the Jesuit Society." Its revelations are startling, showing to what depths of deceit the Jesuit priest and all connected with this Order of "Spies" and "Traitors" will descend to accomplish their unholy aims. It is printed in the original Latin with the English translation parallel thus doing away with the anticipated charge of forgery by those who set a premium on murder and treason.

A history of the Order of Jesuits and their expulsion from every Catholic country is given; also, the reason why the Public Schools must go.

IN THE

Christian Church.

A pamphlet of 52 pages, by Chas. A. S. Temple.

The following from Rev. H. H. Hinman shows his estimate of its contents:

"I have read with great interest 'Pagan Counterfeits in the Christian Church' by Chas. A. S. Temple. I regard the subject discussed as important, and its presentation both able and timely. There is a most manifest drift in all our Protestant denominations towards unauthorized ritualism and the substitution of human inventions in place of the simplicity of the Gospel, as given by Christ and his apostles. In calling attention to this tidal wave of formalism, the author has conferred a lasting benefit on the churches of Protestantism."

HOME AND HEALTH.

HOW TO ROAST MEAT.

Mrs. Emma P. Ewing, of the school of domestic economy at the Iowa Agricultural College, says:

In roasting meats of all kinds the method adopted should be the one that in the most perfect manner preserves the juices inside the meat. To roast beef in the best possible manner, place the clean-cut side of the meat upon a smoking-hot pan, which must be over a quick fire. Press it close to the pan until seared and slightly browned. Reverse and let the opposite side become similarly seared and brown. Then put it at once in the oven, the heat of which should be firm and steady, but not too intense, and leave it undisturbed until cooked. The time that should be allowed for cooking beef in this manner is twenty minutes to the pound, if it is to be rare, less half an hour deducted from the aggregate time on account of searing. In other words, a five pound roast of beef will require an hour and a quarter, a six pound roast an hour and a half, and so on.

If the oven is not too hot the beef requires no basting, and is better without it. When the oven is at the proper temperature, and the cooking is going on all right, the meat will keep up a gentle spluttering in the pan. If, upon opening the oven door, this spluttering is not perceptible, more heat is required. But if in addition to the spluttering any smoke is discernible in the oven, the heat is too intense, and should be lessened. Unless the heat of the oven is too great, the drippings in the pan will not burn and smoke, and when the meat is cooked there will be a thin coating of brown jelly in the pan where the meat rested, which by the addition of stock or water will make a delicious gravy.

A roast of beef should never be washed, and if it has accidentally been wet or moistened, it should be carefully wiped dry before it is seared or put to cook. Searing almost instantly coats the outside of a piece of meat and prevents the escape of juices in the after-process of roasting, while firm, steady heat gently but thoroughly cooks it, and thus both juices and flavor are preserved. Basting is a troublesome as well as damaging process. And as salt and water have a tendency to toughen and extract the juices of meat, they should not be used on it while roasting, if it is desired to have the meat sweet, juicy and tender.

VENTILATION IN SICK ROOMS.

The sick room should always, and in all weathers, be ventilated with outside air. An excellent plan is to keep open a door into an adjoining room, where a window is up, or a board may be fitted into the top of the upper sash so that this may be kept lowered, allowing the fresh air to enter through the space thus created between the sashes; and if all other ways fail, simply lower the upper sash of the window farthest from the bed, and keep it down two inches night and day. Important as this matter of ventilation is, especially in lung trouble—it may be over-done, and care must continually be exercised and extremes guarded against.

Unless the physician orders otherwise, the above suggestions will be found sufficient, except in the warmest weather. Some doctors treat scarlet fever most successfully, with wide-open windows even in mid-winter, and your duty is to carry out such orders as long as the physician is in charge of the case.

In this connection I may say that two people in the room with the patient, at one time, are all that should be permitted. This number can do all that is required, and every pair of lungs helps to use up the oxygen the patient needs so sadly.—Annie R. Ramsey in October Ladies' Home Journal.

CATARRH.

Catarrhal Deafness—Hay Fever.

A NEW HOME TREATMENT.

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membrane of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact, and the result of this discovery is that a simple remedy has been formulated whereby catarrh, catarrhal deafness, and hay fever are permanently cured in from one to three simple applications made at home by the patient once in two weeks. N.B.—This treatment is not a snuff or an ointment; both have been discarded by reputable physicians as injurious. A pamphlet explaining this new treatment is sent free by A. H. DIXON & SON, 337 and 339 West King Street, Toronto, Canada.—Scientific American.

Sufferers from Catarrhal troubles should carefully read the above.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

CHICAGO.

As a result of the vigorous investigation instituted Friday by State's Attorney Longenecker and his associates in the Cronin case a great conspiracy has been unearthed, and Alexander L. Hanks, Mark Salomon, Fred W. Smith, Thomas Kavanaugh, Jeremiah O'Donnell, and Joseph Koen have been indicted for jury bribing, and are now in the county jail, a special grand jury, headed by ex-Mayor John A. Roche, having considered the evidence and returned the indictments. Bailiffs Hanks and Salomon, the chief conspirators in the jury-bribing case, offered veniemen as much as $1,000 if they would hang the jury in the Cronin case.

Recital Hall, in the great Auditorium Building, was dedicated by the Humane Society, Saturday evening, it being the twentieth anniversary of the organization, and addresses were made by Mr. John G. Shortall, Mr. Ferd W. Peck, Prof. David Swing, and others.

The highest price ever paid for a horse was given by Colonel Conley, of Chicago, Friday, for the wonderful trotter Axtell. Colonel Conley, who, it is thought, represents a syndicate, paid $105,000 for the stallion.

Master Mechanic Twombly, of the Rock Island Road, in jail as responsible for the recent fatal disaster at South Englewood, resigned his position. He was afterward released on bail.

COUNTRY.

The full official returns of the recent election in North Dakota show a total vote of 39,500. Hansborough (Republican) for Congress, received a majority of 15,000, while Miller (Republican) for governor, has 12,000 majority. The majority in favor of prohibition is 1,100.

Andrew Carnegie has appointed a citizens' committee of his own to select a suitable site, that he may erect thereon, at a cost of $750,000, not only a free library building, but one with quarters in it for Pittsburg's newly organizing academy of sciences. The building is to eclipse anything of the kind in America except the Smithsonian Institution.

The State forces have quit their work at Johnstown, Pa. An average of three or four dead bodies have been recovered every day since the forces began working in the river, and the people feel that it is wrong to quit at this time.

Ex-Senator Lorenzo D. Whiting died at his home in Tiskilwa, Ill., Thursday after a long illness. He was in many respects a remarkable man, and for many years was prominent in Illinois politics as a Republican legislator and a champion in the anti-monopoly ranks.

The famous Brooklyn tabernacle, of which the Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage, D. D., is pastor, was for the second time in its history totally destroyed by fire, at 2 o'clock Sunday morning. The origin of the fire is unknown, but it is thought that it may have been caused by lightning. The loss on the church building, including the organ, which was one of the finest in the country, is $150,000. It is said to be covered by insurance in a number of companies. The building was of fourteenth-century Gothic architecture and was dedicated Feb. 22, 1874.

Laborers engaged in digging a sewer in one of the principle streets of Ticonderoga, N. Y., struck a tomb-stone and below it found a coffin containing the bones of a human being. The stone was washed off and found to contain the inscription and date of the death of Lord Howe. The skull was intact, but the rest of the bones were disjointed and considerably decayed.

Gustav Lindenthal, a prominent engineer of Pittsburg, is preparing a model of a bridge to span the Hudson from Jersey City to New York. The structure is to be a suspension bridge, 7,000 feet in length. The river span will be 2,850 feet, and the other two spans over 2,000 feet. The height of the bridge from the floor to the river will be 140 feet, and the roadway 85 feet wide, sufficient to accommodate six railroad tracks. It is estimated that the cost of the structure will be $40,000,000.

A careful estimate made by Commissioner of Immigration Hagerty shows that the yield of wheat in Dakota this year is 44,009,092 bushels.

The electric railway in Baltimore, which has been in operation for nearly three years, has proven a failure, and the company has gone back to horse cars as cheaper and more reliable. This will check the enthusiasm over electric railways.

The jury, which has been investigating the accident on the New York Central & Hudson River Railroad, near Palatine bridge, on the night of Sept. 27, resulting in the death of four persons and the injury of several others, has rendered a verdict censuring the railroad company for gross negligence in running the sections of their trains so close together.

Reports from Mason City, Iowa, say that a prairie fire nearly destroyed the town of Estherville Sunday. A number of farm residences were destroyed, but citizens turned out and by their support the town was saved.

At Davis Switch, Pa., Thursday evening, an explosion of natural gas set fire to the house of Patrick Daily, and the latter's wife and three sons, aged 13, 11 and 9, perished in the flames.

Pickpockets went through a train on the Panhandle Road near Newark, Ohio, Friday, and obtained nearly $1,700.

Near Bridgeport, Ohio, Friday morning, a miners' train and a freight train were in collision, both locomotives, two coaches, and eight freight cars being wrecked. One man was killed, three were fatally injured, and a dozen others badly wounded.

As workmen were sinking a well for natural gas near Pueblo, Col., a vein was suddenly struck and the gas ignited from a lamp at the mouth of the well, causing a terrific explosion. One man was cremated and two others and one woman were burned so badly that recovery is doubtful.

The Rock river is lower than ever before known at Rockford, Ill., and nearly all of the twenty or thirty factories there depending upon water power have had to shut down.

FOREIGN.

A great equal-rights and anti-Jesuit meeting was held at Toronto, Oct. 10, at which the report of the committee appointed to consider the governor-general's reply to the Equal-Rights association's petition for the disallowance of the Jesuits' estates act was presented. The report set forth that the reply was merely a repetition of the views of the minister of justice, and that "justice not being obtainable from the Canadian government" it would have to be sought on the lines already laid down by the association. Dalton McCarthy, M. P., announced that at the next session of the dominion parliament he would introduce a measure to abolish French as an official language in Canada.

The Czar of Russia visited Berlin officially last week, departing on a Sunday train. His relations with the Emperor and Bismarck were very cordial, but there was no popular enthusiasm.

Mr. Parnell's health continues to grow worse instead of becoming better, and grave fears are entertained for his condition. He will spend the winter at Bournemouth, and it is not likely that he will be able to reappear in the House of Commons at all. There is serious doubt of his ever being able to resume his active political career.

It is reported that at a private meeting of members of the old French colony at Montreal Wednesday night it was decided to invite General Boulanger to take up his residence in Canada for the present.

A number of cloistered nuns who were subpoenaed to appear in court in a case at Montreal refused, and the result is awaited with great interest.

The Cronin case developed several sensations last week. The greatest was that a conspiracy had been unearthed to stampede the court and run off the prisoners. This was only a sensation, but the discoveries that gave rise to it, of the communication of Clan-na-Gael members from other parts of the country with the prisoners will be watched with great care. But one juror was lacking Saturday night. The panel may be filled before we go to press. Everything indicates that this will be one of the greatest trials known to the American bar. Over two hundred witnesses will be called by the state, and nearly that many, probably, by the defense. Many of the points upon which the state depends to make out its case will occupy days, even weeks, in their development and elucidation.

The pastor of a colored Baptist church, having proposed a meeting to organize a colored Y. M. C. A. in this city, was astonished last week to read in the Appeal, a journal for the colored people, an editorial strenuously opposing the movement. The Y. M. C. A. of Chicago opens its doors to all respectable young men, black or white, and so long as their accommodations are ample there is no economy or wisdom in starting another organization. "Colored people are continually howling about the drawing of the color line and are constantly drawing it themselves," says the Appeal. "We do not wish the color line drawn by colored men where it does not already exist." These views seem to be wise. If the color line should not be tolerated in the Christian church, there should be no effort to make one in the undenominational societies of Christian workers.

The convention of street railway presidents in Minneapolis last week proclaimed a war of extermination on the Knights of Labor lodge. The past year has seen, says their executive committee, an almost total collapse of this lodge so far as street railways are concerned. A strike, begun in Brooklyn, accompanied by riot, bloodshed and murder, extended across the country. The report continues: "The death-knell of the organization of the Knights of Labor has been sounded, because it has shown its unworthiness to live by reason of the crime committed in its name under the direction of its leaders. It is our earnest desire that there should be established in the street railway business such a community of interest between labor and capital, the employer and employed, that perfect harmony should reign throughout the length and breadth of this great industry." The people, who have made the city railways the most profitable of transportation companies, are often inclined to sympathize with the employees in a strike, but if the managers of this business shall deal justly by their men there will be no pity wasted upon secret lodges that provoke strikes and interfere with public travel. We hope to see these sham Knights scattered, and sensible men who live by the better law of the Golden Rule in their places.

The meeting of the theological students from all the seminaries of this country, to consider foreign missions, closed in this city Sabbath evening. It was a gathering of extraordinary interest and promise. For three evenings they filled the main floor of Central Music Hall, and formed a beautiful and inspiring sight. Dr. John Hall, of New York, addressed them in a most practical and scriptural manner. He insisted that the Gospel of Jesus Christ should be the theme of our pulpits, and not philosophy or sensational topics. Dr. Pierson came in from the Moody Institute to give them a rousing missionary address, in which he made an eloquent plea for more direct work of the churches in the mission field. He would they should have two pastors, one at home, one abroad. Several missionaries addressed the convention, and the discussions of the young men themselves were practical and earnest. The rekindling zeal of the young men and women of America in mission work is an unmistakable token of its great expansion. The discussions of the American Board in New York show this none the less. They point to a recasting of our plans and a new era when the contact of the foreign field with the home church shall be more immediate, and the centralization of boards shall not interfere to cool the zeal and formalize the prayers of the churches.

On the 13th of November occurs the dedication and opening of the new Catholic University at Washington, and invitations have been issued to all the bishops of the Catholic church in the United States, Canada, England, Ireland and Scotland, together with the heads of European and American educational institutions, the President of the United States, the members of his Cabinet, Congress, the Judiciary, etc. Cardinal Gibbons will conduct the dedicatory ceremonies. We dare not say President Harrison will refuse to accept this invitation. It will be said that he lately attended a Presbyterian celebration at the old Log College, and he cannot afford to be partial toward a part of his fellow citizens. But for the very reason that he could be invited to a Presbyterian festival and enter heartily into its spirit, is just the reason he should refuse to decorate a Catholic performance.

One of the Baptist pastors lately created a local sensation by presenting to his brother preachers some unusual views about the personality of the devil. Dr. Thomas, who has lately figured so prominently as Grand Chaplain of Masons, took up the theme before the assembly which he maliciously calls his church. The papers said he put "to flight orthodoxy's personal devil," claimed that the idea of a devil was a monstrous belief, and that to preach it made infidels. In the Masonic procession through our streets lately, there were a number of men with a solemn leer on their faces and a board suspended from their necks, on which was supposed to be a copy of the Holy Bible. Now, although the book was not so borne about for any good purpose, yet Masons make great profession of believing in this one of their three "great lights." And if this book teaches anything it is the very thing our Past Grand Chaplain denies. The Methodist church cut off this man for his heresies, but as a Mason he is at liberty to not only preach against the devil, but against God and his Bible as well. The Grand Lodge of Illinois has so decided in the case of the infidel lodge at Vienna, Ill. Since also lodge theology makes no account of a devil, or sin, or forgiveness, aside from violations of its own rules, Thomas may safely publish, so far as Masonry is concerned, his belief that Satan is a myth.

THE SKY-ROCKET AND LAMP:

A FABLE

BY REV. SAMUEL F. PORTER.

A rocket rose in pride on high,
Athwart a starless, midnight sky,
And saw a street-lamp on its way;
And hissing, thus it seemed to say:
"Poor, low-lived thing! poor, glim'ring spark!
Content to grovel in the dark,
So near the earth; unnoticed quite;
'Twere better far to die outright.
See how I soar, and flame, and shine!
All eyes are on me, I opine.
I rival stars, I shame the moon,
I emulate the sun at noon;
Give me some kindred souls, and we Will light the world, and all may see."

The modest lamp, without disguise,
Lengthens its flame, and thus replies:
"I cannot fly like you, dear brother,
Gleaming from one place to another,
To catch the loud huzzahs and gaze
Of stupid stargers with my blaze.
But, true to duty, still I may
Light this dark street till break of day,
Make evil doers manifest,
And the benighted guide to rest."

It ceased. The other, with a sneer,
Rushed madly on his wild career,
With fiery train and brilliant flash;
When lo! it burst, and with a crash
In darkness fell with headlong speed,
A blackened, scorched and worthless reed;
And, by the street-lamp's steady light,
The city urchins found that night
The spent sky-rocket, where it lay,
And bore its corpse with shouts away.

MORAL.

How few, alas! with tranquil light
Shine on each day more clear and bright;
In church or state, turn where you will,
The empty rocket meets you still.
Hence, reader, learn, if you are wise,
All rocket-boasters to despise;
But give each cool, firm vet'ran true
A brother's love and honor due.

THE NEGRO FROM A PRESBYTERIAN VIEW.

BY REV. J. D. GEHRING.

The Presbyterian Synod of Kansas met in Lawrence Oct. 3. Perhaps the most interesting feature was the union meeting in the Congregational church on Sabbath evening.

The object of the meeting was to hear the address on the work among the freedmen of the South. Rev. Dr. Allen is secretary of the Board which carries on this work under the auspices of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian church. He entertained the large and enthusiastic audience for over an hour. Of the many good things said by him I will endeavor to mention two or three.

The race problem, he said, is upon us. We cannot put it down, nor will it do to ignore it. Various remedies and solutions are proposed. There are many, North and South, who would solve the problem by dumping the whole black race into the Atlantic ocean. Others are in favor of sending them over into Africa and colonizing them there; but they fail to tell us how this can be done. Evidently the advocates of this plan have not looked at the arithmetical problem involved. Look at the figures: There are to-day not less than 8,000,000 of these people in our land! They are increasing at the rate of 600 a day, or over 219,000 in a year, and this increase keeps on increasing. How many ships would the government need to build to carry them over to Africa? How long would it take to finish the work? These figures need only to be given and these questions asked to show that this plan will not work.

What, then, he continued, can be done to dispose of this great and growing question? The black man is here, and he is here to stay. We have made him a citizen, and as such he has certain rights which it behooves the white race not to ignore or violate. They have 1,420,000 voters, 1,118,000 of whom cannot read a name on the ticket they carry to the ballot-box. They now represent 76 of the 401 electoral votes, 65 of the members of Congress, and 16 of the U. S. Senators.

Moreover, he said, consider what they were. For over 250 years a friendless, nameless, countryless race, without personal rights, even to a limited degree. They knew no ties which the master could not cancel. Their ideas of morality were formed on the slave code, and executed according to the caprice and passion of their masters.

And, consider what they have done to entitle them to the respect of the white race. During the war for the Union the government enlisted 186,640 black men and organized them into regiments. People of the North and of the South declared they would not fight. They would certainly not fight their former masters. But the 28,942 who fell in 163 battles in which they took part attest the patriotism and courage of the freed slave. There is no stain of dishonor on the bravery of colored troops. And, what have they done since? We have been told repeatedly that the Negro will not work, except under the lash, and that he cannot be educated. What are the facts? Up to 1880 they had accumulated $101,000,000 worth of property, and they own in Georgia and South Carolina alone 436,000 acres of land.

That they can be educated I need only refer you to the statistics of the Presbyterian Board for freedmen for part of the answer. Of course our aim is to give the Negro a religious education, including the secular. There are to-day 239 Presbyterian churches among the colored people of the South, with a membership of 18,000; 240 Sabbath-schools, with 17,000 pupils, and 89 day-schools, with 11,000 pupils. Eighty-nine educated preachers are in the field—and, when I say educated, I mean exactly what I say.

The speaker said he was not long ago present when a class of five candidates for the Gospel ministry were examined before a presbytery "down South." The examination was so thorough that it lasted over four hours, and not one item mentioned in the list of necessary qualifications by our form of church government was omitted—not even Hebrew. Yes, sir, these black men, two of whom had been slaves, read a Psalm in Hebrew, and portions of two chapters in the New Testament in Greek; and yet so many shake their heads when we ask them to help us in this great, necessary work of educating the black race. But this work of education is not fully done by putting well-trained men into the ministry and into the school house; the women (3,000,000 of them) must be educated, in order that they may become good, virtuous, intelligent and patriotic mothers, faithful wives, and enlightened Christians; otherwise the task is not half done.

To educate these people we must evangelize them; to teach them religion we must teach them the rudiments of knowledge. Here lies the solution of the great problem.

The speaker dwelt quite forcibly upon the fact that among all the 8,000,000 of the colored race he had not yet found, or heard of the existence of, a single secret society having for its object the subversion of society, or the destruction of the government. Not one socialist or anarchist or communist had he yet found. That probably is the truth, and it speaks well for the patriotism and Americanism of the Negro race. But, I was sorry that he failed to improve the splendid opportunity which this fact gave him to speak of the fearful danger to the colored people, and through them to the nation, of their bondage to other secret societies, especially that of Freemasonry. He also omitted to speak of the tendency of the black race to become victims of intemperance.

The speaker closed by a most pathetic incident portraying the intense religious nature of the Negro as a race; and, deeply moved himself, he pleaded for help to save the colored race of America.

REMINISCENCES OF ANTI-SLAVERY DAYS.

JOSEPH C. HATHAWAY, REV. WM. GOODELL, FRED DOUGLASS, J. C. JACKSON—THE EFFECT OF THE DISCUSSIONS TO UNITE CHRISTIANS, ETC.

[Letter to George W. Clark.]

I do not remember the date of Friend Hathaway's death. I call to mind some of the incidents connected with it that interested me very much at the time. You say you were with him at his death-bed, and followed him to his burial at Farmington; all of which I learned from a touching description of the event, which fell under my eye; but you omit to say that you sung over his remains on the occasion of their removal from the Sanitarium at Dansville. Understanding the tenets of the Society of Friends to be opposed to music on such occasions, it gave me a pleasurable surprise that such a thing was permissible. Yet it seemed to me we need not go far to account for that and other departures from that very straight way in which that good people were wont to hold their feet.

Did it never occur to you that the anti-slavery agitation had a tendency to promote union of sentiment among its advocates and adherents on questions that before separated Christian people? With us, you know, opposition to slavery was the dominant issue in religion as well as in politics, and minor differences were all merged into that. Would it do to call it a leveling and cementing process? Whatever it may be called it had the effect to bring into unity what before were incongruous elements.

As to Fred Douglass, we are all of us glad we have known him; but Fred has been spoiled by prosperity, and I am disposed to "lay him down tenderly, and handle with care." I presume I, too, have seen his present wife, for at one time I lived in Naples, Ontario county, N. Y., and often went to the Pitts settlement at Honeoye to church, and I think there was not a Pitts family there that did not at one time or another have my wife and myself at dinner at such times.

In 1840 I lived in Naples. I was elected one of the ruling elders of the Presbyterian church of that place a year or two later. Not long after this the relations of the General Assembly to the question of slave-holding began to disquiet me, but I did not formally sever my relations with the church. In 1844, with my then small family, I moved to Prattsburg, Steuben county. I remained there six years, and returned to Naples. I had taken no letter from the church at Naples, but attended regularly the Presbyterian church at Prattsburg, without becoming a member. On my return to Naples I resumed my place in the congregation, but not the duties of an elder, nor the privileges of a member of the church. I was palpably derelict and subject to discipline. Should have been dealt with. I hoped to be, that I might have opportunity to define my position, and arraign the entire Presbyterian church of this country for its disgraceful supine attitude toward the down-trodden. I was not cited to answer to a charge, nor spoken to on the subject. I think the session preferred to bring on no commotion, as they well knew there would be if I was given an opportunity. The friendliness between the church and myself was not interrupted. I was chosen superintendent of their Sabbath-school, and served to the limit of my pleasure. When I got to going to the Honeoye church my connection with the Sabbath-school necessarily ceased. The unfaithfulness of Christians, individually or organized, did not, however, drive me into skepticism; nor, in respect to accepted orthodoxy, into heresy. I have the same implicit faith in God, in his Son and Spirit, as ever, and that it was through his own chosen instrumentality that slavery was abolished, and by the same every evil under the sun will be overcome.

You remember the intense solicitude of the old line churches of that day lest Abolitionists should all go to the bad. Goodell was set down as a preacher of infidelity, and of course not recognized as a minister of the Gospel. Dr. Jackson was many times consigned to the lower regions with all that ventured to speak in defence of his work as exemplifying a true faith, and the same with any and every one at all prominent in the cause. The rank and file were dupes, and accorded the possibility of being saved so as by fire. Mr. Goodell, however, put to shame the orthodoxy of his defamers by the consistency of his Puritanical life officiating in the church. Dr. Jackson must have survived what was at that time in their mildest sense termed heretical tendencies, or he could not have penned those deeply-devotional lines which you sent me, entitled "An Evening Prayer." I am very sorry to hear of his great bodily affliction. If my sympathy could avail he would be healed this moment to continue his usefulness yet many years. c. w.

MASONIC AND CHRISTIAN PRAYER.

The prayers which sinners offer up to God are founded, or should be founded, on the dispensation of grace. The important question whether God is placable, upon which the religion of the guilty depends, is answered by the Gospel, which declares that he is not only willing to be appeased, but that he is actually reconciled to us by the atonement of his Son. The obstacle to the reception of fallen men, and the communication of blessings to them, is removed. The demands of justice have been satisfied; the law which they had broken has been honored by the fulfillment of its precepts, and the establishment of its authority; and consistently with the holiness and righteousness of his character and administration, God may extend his favor to those who in themselves deserved condemnation and wrath. Spiritual and heavenly blessings have been obtained for them, and exhibited in the promises, and these are ratified with the blood of our Saviour.

Hence, you perceive that all our prayers should have a respect to his mediation. God should be contemplated as manifested in him, and the displays of his perfections in creation and providence can give encouragement to us only when they are viewed in connection with the work of redemption, in which they assume an aspect of benevolence to man, and are engaged, if I may so speak, to co-operate for our good. The Maker of heaven and earth will appear to the person who is apprised of his natural condition, to be an object of confidence and hope only when he is considered at the same time as the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, and in him the Father of mercies and the God of all grace and consolation. The mediation of Christ furnishes the sole ground on which we can expect success; it supplies the arguments with which we should enforce our petitions; and when we do receive a favorable answer it is granted in consideration not of our sincerity and fervor, but of his merit and intercession.

Hence, you perceive for what reason our Saviour has commanded us to ask all things in his name, and also hears us when we do comply with this injunction. The mere mention of his name is not sufficient; for it is introduced into many a prayer which breathes a spirit most adverse to the Gospel, into the prayers of the self-righteous who trust much more to themselves than to him. They alone pray in his name who, fully convinced of their own unworthiness, depend on him alone for acceptance. "We are the circumcision, who worship God in the spirit, rejoice in Christ Jesus, and have no confidence in the flesh." (Phil. 3: 3.)

There is then an essential difference between the prayers of a Christian and those of the professor of any other religion. The latter addresses God as the Creator; but the former as the Redeemer of the human race. Both may appeal to the divine mercy; but the one contemplates it under the vague and general notion of benevolence, awakened by the spectacle of misery, leaving the idea of justice or moral rectitude out of sight; while the other fixes his attention upon these specific manifestations of it in harmony with all the attributes of the Deity. The Christian approaches God by an Intercessor whose merit will secure the acceptance of his requests, but the Mahomedan and the Freemason appears for himself, and trusts that the naked representation of his case will prevail upon the Almighty to regard him with a propitious eye.

We are not left in doubt which of these modes of prayer is pleasing to God, and will draw down his blessing upon us. "I am the way, and the truth, and the life, and no man cometh to the Father but by me.

The ordinary mode of worship which is established by the Christian dispensation, is to address the Father in the name of the Son, and by the assistance of the Holy Ghost, and it is pointed out by the Apostle in the following words: "Through him (that is Christ) we both have access by one Spirit unto the Father." Eph. 2: 18. Prayer offered not in the name of Christ is solemn mockery, and is calculated to bring down a curse instead of a blessing. E. T. B.

SECRET BALLOTS.

Different States are providing for voting according to what is called the Austrian system of secret ballots. This measure is defended as a means of securing the employe from the petty domineering and persecution of his employer. It is designed to enable every voter to keep his expression of opinion absolutely a secret. There may be some shadow of reason for this in the actual state of things in our land. But is there not in it a humiliating confession that we are not a free people? He is not a free man who dare not express his real sentiments without the fear of his employer's wrath. That is not a free government which permits one man to lord it over the sentiments of the most humble of his servants. The secret ballot will not remedy the evil. The more secrecy about it the more fraud will be found to result from it. What is wanted in our government is open, honest, fearless expression of opinion by all the people on all public questions. If the employe does not cast an open ballot, he will not dare openly advocate his convictions. He has a right to do both without fear or favor, and the government that fails to maintain such liberty of speech in its citizens is not a free government.

The habit of secrecy is undermining the best interests of society. Men are being trained in the "legion" of secret societies among us to such skill in the concealment of their doings, that we can scarce know when a man is uttering his real mind, or acting a true part. Christ teaches us that "men love darkness rather than light, because their deeds are evil." When they must conspire in secret to prepare their ballots under fear of the wrath of a fellow citizen, it takes away the ground of our boasting of our freedom. The patriots who framed our form of government assumed that every man would be protected in his right to cast an honest ballot, however it might differ from others.

It should be understood that to maintain this liberty is one of the chief ends of government, and that all terrorizing, or interference with this right shall be adequately and certainly punished. Instead of sneaking up to the polls like a thief ashamed of his real purpose, let every man openly come forward as an independent sovereign and publicly express his mind at the polls and bear the responsibility.—Christian Instructor.

THE AMERICAN REPUBLIC OF HEAVENLY BIRTH.

Shall we, with great historians like Bancroft, find her germinal form in the compact made in the Mayflower? Shall we, with others, seek her origin in the pulpit of John Knox in Edinburgh? Shall we, with the great German historian, declare that John Calvin at Geneva was the "virtual founder of the United States of America?" Were the roots of our nationality fastened, as many believe, in the soil of Marston Moor, where Cromwell's Ironsides broke in pieces the army of King Charles? Or shall we rather not look back of all these, to the holy fields of the New Testament which the sixteenth century opened up again to mankind? The eloquent voice of the Honorable William C. P. Breckinridge, of Kentucky, has shown us that liberty is the child of that interpretation of the Bible which became general with the Protestant Reformation. We may say with truth that "free America was born of the Bible." From the Bible came the simpler forms of self-government, in town and church, that have gone with our civilization in its westward march. Hence came the observance of the Lord's Day, the bulwark of our freedom, and hence the teaching of Biblical truth to the young, which Webster declared "has done more to preserve our liberties than grave statesmen and armed soldiers." Hence came our public schools and the long line of Christian colleges that stretch from the elms of Harvard and Dartmouth to the shores of the Brazos and Sabine, and on the Pacific coast. Hence came also the separation of church and state, and the soul liberty which Roger Williams learned from Him who said, "My kingdom is not of this world." From the Bible came, as Edward Everett declared, "the better elements of our national institutions." It was an echo from the Scriptures which Jefferson sounded in the great declaration. From the Bible came the moral forces that carried through our first Revolution, and which have withstood the wastings of corruption in succeeding years. From the same source have sprung the moral reformatations that have preserved our nationality and our freedom. The American Republic is of heavenly birth. It is no mud-giant—O shade of Thomas Carlyle! It does not represent to the world "merely dollars and cotton." Its fountain-head, at least, is far up among the shining hills of God. Remembering the origin of our nationality, and recalling what precious interests and celestial truths it enshrines, we would not doubt its continuance. But it must meet the new perils as it met and conquered the old.—From Dr. Barrow's Thanksgiving service in the October number of the Treasury.

ADOPTED HEATHENISM.

"By thy words thou shalt be justified, and by thy words thou shalt be condemned."—Matt. 12: 37.

"Out of thine own mouth will I judge thee."—Luke 19: 22.

What is Masonry? "Oh, you know nothing about it; it is a secret order." The answer will not do; we do know something about it. The Philadelphia Public Ledger contains the following:

"The Masonic ceremonies incident to the completion of the interior decoration of the Egyptian Hall, in the Masonic Temple, were held last evening, the occasion being considered of such importance as to warrant the holding of an 'emergent communication' of the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania.

"The Grand Master explained briefly the occasion of the emergent communication of the Grand Lodge. A great work has been accomplished here, transforming the old hall, so that it is practically a new place. We do not re-dedicate it; a building once dedicated to Masonic uses is forever dedicated; but it is proper that the Grand Lodge should thus formally take possession. And in these solemn ceremonies we should remember that these are not merely so many forms and combinations of color, copied aimlessly from Egyptian monuments, but contain Masonic teachings which should be a subject for study and source of interest for all the brethren who may meet here in the future.

"Grand Master MacCalla then went on to speak of some of the leading symbols and their significance, urging his hearers never to lose sight of the thing signified by the type or sign. The massive style of the Egyptian architecture, representing the omnipotence of Deity; the cruz ansata, or winged Tau, the emblem of immortality; the winged globe, scarabæi; the hawk, etc., the varied emblems of the central luminary, the sun, Osiris; the pyramids, the embalmed bodies within, showing the ancient faith in the resurrection from the dead, and the various features of the Egyptian mythology were pointed out and their parallels in Freemasonry indicated.

"Samuel W. Wray then, on behalf of the Temple committee, formally accepted the trust. The Grand Lodge may well feel proud that it owns such a grand and majestic edifice, capable of such high adornment, and also that it has brethren who have the heads to conceive and the means to execute, to such a high degree, the teachings of Freemasonry. Go on in the glorious work so well begun. Let us push forward this noble enterprise, and not rest until it is a temple indeed and in truth. May the Grand Architect of the Universe look down upon us and bless us in all our undertakings."

Who does not know that this Egyptian worship was idolatry? "What say I then? that the idol is anything, or that which is offered in sacrifice to idols is anything? But I say, that the things which the Gentiles sacrifice, they sacrifice to devils and not to God; and I would not that ye should have fellowship with devils."—1 Cor. 10: 19, 20.

"Be it known unto you all, that by the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, even by him doth this man stand before you whole. Neither is there salvation by any other: for there is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved."—Acts 4: 10.—Reformed Presbyterian.

NOTES FROM THE PRESS.

That infamous opinion which justifies the most dastardly crimes against society at the behest of a secret, partisan, and irresponsible tribunal will never be tolerated by Americans, and if executions of men high in places of influence are necessary to stop such crimes the sooner they come the better.—New York Tribune.

Ever since Powderly assumed the role of eldest son of the church, and offered to revise the rules of the order to suit the views of the Catholic hierarchy, the Knights of Labor has been affected with dry rot and paralysis. Mene, mene, tekell, upharsin is written upon its banners. Thank God, American workmen will not be run as a side show to the Roman corporation.—Western British American.

The doubt existing in many minds as to whether the obligation taken by members of the Clan-na-Gael is consistent with the duty of citizens, might be solved if the court would demand the books or papers of the society, or at least a copy of the oath as it is administered. The right of the state to look into such things can scarcely be questioned; or rather the right of a set of men to organize in such a way and for such a purpose that the state cannot know its principles and aims, is most seriously questioned.—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

Of the forming of "orders" there is no end. The chief end of man, now-a-days, seems to be to join a secret society and sport a big title. The English language is exhausted of its superlative adjectives to adorn the high mightinesses of these secret orders. The list of Grands, Nobles, and Supremes is humiliating to common people. The latest gathering of these superlative orders is that of the 'Imperial Council of the Ancient Arabian Order of Nobles of the Mystic Shrine,' at which, it is said, 400 Nobles were in attendance. Who would have thought we had so many noblemen among us! If this thing goes on a new language will have to be invented to give fitting designations to those grandiose people.—Portland (Ore.) Transcript.

Senator Dawes of Massachusetts was a visitor in Judge McConnell's court yesterday, where he listened with interest to the rather dull proceedings. Doubtless he regretted that testimony concerning the great Cronin conspiracy was not the feature of the occasion instead of the slow process of unfolding and scrutinizing the contents of the minds of inoffensive citizens brought in by a special venire. Yet what he saw and heard should assist him in dealing with the Clan-na-Gael and similar dangerous societies when the matter comes up in Congress. He must have been impressed particularly with the strong aversion for that secret organization expressed by various reputable men whom he heard questioned in the jury-box.—Daily News.

As the latest disclosure respecting the desperate nature of the Clan-na-Gael defence of Cronin's murderers rests on the authority of the officers of the Government, it is probably accurate. It implies an insolent boldness which almost passes comprehension. These conspirators must put a pitifully low estimate on the integrity or courage of the American people, or they would never attempt to corrupt jurymen at such a stage in the case as this, and even to employ sworn officials as their instruments. What mysterious influence do the conspirators possess that they are enabled to bend the very bailiffs of the court to do their bidding? How far does this oath-bound secret organization extend? Has it the same amazing power in other cities that it has wielded in Chicago? These are reflections which will occur to thoughtful people as the startling developments of this case one after another unfold themselves. One thing is certain, and that is that the investigation of the affair must be pushed to its conclusion, if it takes the whole power of the State of Illinois to bring the criminals and their guilty friends to justice.—Boston Journal, Oct. 14.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

The effect of License in Providence—Mr. Moody on Prohibition—The Defeat of the Amendment in Connecticut—Some items from the Washington Post—The G. A. R. in Boston—Woman's work in the Anti-secret reform.

The Outlook does not give a cheering view of the temperance cause in Providence, under the workings of the new system in Rhode Island. Houses are being changed into rum shops, old shops made over and enlarged, new screens put up; while the streets are becoming more and more dangerous from the increasing numbers of drunken men who reel about the sidewalks. In the face of such facts as these, Mr. Moody's recent utterance that "he believed in prohibition but not in the third party," and also "believed that there was no use in having a law until there was a public sentiment that could secure its enforcement," is to be regretted; for every such utterance is sure to be seized upon by the rum party and twisted into an argument for license. If Hooker was right, and "Law has her seat in the bosom of God," she ought to lead public sentiment instead of being dragged behind it. However, Mr. Moody may not have been correctly reported, and as he carried the town of Northfield for no license a few years ago by personally visiting every voter, and plying him with arguments, he has certainly put himself on record as a prohibitionist of a very practical sort.

While the readers of the Cynosure are not supposed to be greatly interested in reports from the base ball field, the cause which led to the recent defeat of the Boston nine, namely, liquor, is a sermon in favor of prohibition adapted to reach that class which is not usually accessible to high moral arguments. The club has a rule prohibiting its members from drinking, and now there is a loud call to enforce the law, and with curious inconsistency it is joined in by many who would not concede for a moment the possibility that prohibition, state or national, would ever prohibit.

The friends of temperance in Connecticut are not surprised at the 26,000 majority against the amendment. That the measure would fail has seemed to be a foregone conclusion from the start, but these numerous and crushing defeats are not arbitrary acts of the divine will; still less do they come at haphazard—effects without a cause. As the third party has increased in strength and become a political power, the sense of personal reliance on God alone has been proportionately weakened, and it is very possible that these humiliating lessons are needed to make us "lean harder" on the divine Arm. They may also learn us to push out more boldly and concentrate all our forces by putting the labor which has been expended in local effort into one grand movement for national prohibition. And more than all we shall be stirred up to search for the subtle, unseen causes which underlie the present "set back;" why along with the great increase of secret temperance societies there has been a falling off in the prohibition vote, and whether the lodge as a whole is as neutral on moral questions as it professes to be.

In one single issue of the Washington Post of Oct. 9th, I find two liquor advertisements, headed respectively, Willige's Knights Templar Brand, and Knights Templar's Tonic. In connection therewith it is not surprising to see in the same paper such items as the following:

"Grand Master (Roome) retired to the rear of the stand, where he seated himself in a rather exhausted and nervous condition. He was benefited by partaking of some of the contents of a little black bottle which his son carried conveniently. It was whisky of the very first quality, and wasn't overlooked by the Deputy Grand Master (Gobin) when he had become chilled by standing in the chilly atmosphere to see the Knights of his State encampment pass by. Notwithstanding the elegant costumes they wore, they showed their love of simplicity by taking their portion of the animating liquid direct from the little black bottle, with head back and bottle up."

"Oakland and Los Angeles Knights kept open house last night at the Cochrane, 1,325 F street, and dispensed California punch and cigars to all that called with the lavish hospitality for which the Golden State is so justly famous. It is needless to add that their quarters were crowded throughout the evening. They brought thirty cases of Los Angeles wines, and receive forty cases more to-day."

The political power possessed by the Knight Templars is seen in the same way that the political power of Rome is gauged—by the extraordinary honors showed them at the seat of government. When we consider how largely the pillars of the rum traffic, the brewers and wholesale dealers, are represented in this order whose Grand Master, to again quote the Post, "is the most absolute autocrat of the world," it is easy to understand one source of the saloon's strength.

The G. A. R. has voted to hold the next National Encampment in Boston. It behooves them to remember that the W. C. T. U. will have its eyes on them, and "for the good of the order" they had better hoist their colors for temperance and against Sabbath desecration.

"The Loyal Women," says the British American, "are doing a grand work. They have done in New York what the women have never been able to do—arouse public sentiment." Now this is precisely what will be accomplished for the N. C. A. as soon as the consecrated Christian womanhood of the country can be made to see the close connection which the secret society question has with vital religion, and the future weal and woe of our beloved land. One of these women writes to me thus: "It is not talk that is wanted, but some settled definite plan of work for the reform."

To this the writer and every friend of our cause would say Amen. Our literature is doing much to enlighten thinking women, and a mutually attracting power will bring them together when the time is ripe for a formulated plan. Let every anti-secret sister pray and labor to this end.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Oct. 18, 1889.

The maritime conference being held here this week is an event of far-reaching importance to the navies and merchant marine of all the world, twenty-one governments being represented by specially accredited officials. The objects, as set forth by Secretary Blaine in his brief speech opening the Congress, is to make navigation safer by devising a universal code of signals. Other matters of like nature will come before the convention, and it is hoped that the result of the deliberations will be of universal value to humanity. The personnel of the conference is far above the average. Every nation has sent men of marked ability. England, which has the largest interest at stake, is represented by a half dozen of her most noted naval experts, together with representatives of her merchant marine. Our share of foreign commerce is so small that we might give to ourselves credit for a magnificent and disinterested regard for the welfare of others.

The hand-shaking and receiving done by the President during one day is enough to entitle him to his salary without further work of any sort. On yesterday he granted private and special interviews to Senator Quay, U. S. Treasurer Huston, Collector Brady, of Virginia, Gen. Dan Sickles, Justice Miller, of the Supreme Court, Commodore Walker, Rear Admiral Walker, and Congressman Kinsey. At noon the Marine Congress was received, and at 1 o'clock there was a public reception, all the members of a big Pennsylvania excursion being in the throng. As he was about to escape from this duty, the President was called out on the portico to review a procession of colored Odd-fellows, who, by zealous mismanagement, were enabled to prolong the torture to an unendurable length. The President finally escaped to his private apartments to lunch, and just as he was vigorously wiping Baby McKee's face with his bib, the committee representing the Newsboys' National Association were announced. The ringleader had an address concealed on his person, which, after reading, he carefully handed to Mr. Harrison, as being a choice bit of good penmanship and bad English that he might like to place on his private files. After this amount of receiving the President is supposed to return to his study, and there in the silent watches of the night help Halford write the message to Congress. In the meantime, should a committee of Kickapoo Indians or the representatives of the United Female base-ballists drop around after supper, he will find pleasure in placing his good right hand on exhibition, and allowing people to shake it in a vice or between their teeth or otherwise, as may occur to them as desirable.

Senator Quay is not pleased at dropping out of sight in this Administration, and is said to have so told President Harrison in no measured terms on Wednesday. Mr. Quay has other grievances besides the Philadelphia postoffice appointment—in fact he has dozens of them. The latest is the appointment of a revenue inspector at the request of Russell Harrison, and in the face of Mr. Quay's earnest opposition. Mr. Quay is said to have told the President that if he persisted in ignoring the friends who had elected him he would go before no convention for a second term. He added that he would withdraw his support in such an event.

The Pan-American visitors, as might have been expected, and as is made evident in the reports of Mr. Curtis to Secretary Blaine, are already surfeited with banquets and displays. Already they are unanimous in their resolve to see no more factories. The high-living, easy-going South Americans are easily satisfied, not to say wearied, by the display they saw in New England. Mr. Blaine favors an almost entire withdrawal from banquets for two weeks, in order to give the guests a chance to recuperate. He thinks that a sad mistake has been made in supposing that the affair was properly a gigantic wining and dining.

Postmaster-General Wannamaker's forthcoming report will make several recommendations of importance. He will ask that the telegraph system of the country be absorbed by the postoffice department; that the free delivery system be extended to all cities doing a business of $8,000 per annum; and that the construction of government buildings in all cities of the second class be undertaken.

Earl of Beaconsfield (Disraeli) said: "Let us terminate this disastrous system of wild expenditure by mutually agreeing with no hypocrisy, but in a manner and under circumstances which admit of no doubt, by the reduction of armaments, that peace is really our policy; and then the Chancellor of the Exchequer may look forward with no apprehension to his next budget and England may then witness the termination of the income-tax."—Speech, July 2, 1859.

EDUCATIONAL NOTES.

—There are fifty thousand college students in America.

—America has had twenty-five great donors to colleges, ranging in their gifts from $342,000 to $8,000,000.

—A wealthy man whose name remains unknown, has given $350,000 for a Christian university in Pekin, China.

—In sixty-nine cities, each employing more than a hundred teachers, more than ninety-one per cent are women.

—Amherst College claims the honorable distinction of supplying from its graduates a larger number of ministers than any other American college—twice as many as either Yale or Oberlin, three times as many as Williams, four times as many as Dartmouth, and nine times as many as Harvard.

—The reports from the theological seminaries show that the enrollment this year will be much larger than last. Hamilton (Baptist) has 20 new students, with a total of 51. Rochester (Baptist) reports twenty-five new students and a total of 61 in the English department; also 9 additions and 40 in all in the German department. McCormick (Presbyterian) in Chicago opened with 141 students, 62 of them new men. Andover (Congregational) reports a total of 60, one-half new men. San Francisco (Presbyterian) reports an increase of 50 per cent. Union (Presbyterian), New York City, reports marked increase.

—The report of the Commissioner of Education for 1886-7 shows some interesting figures. There are enrolled in the common schools of the United States 11,805,660 pupils, with an average daily attendance of 7,571,416, while 8.56 per cent of our children attend private schools. There was expended during that year for salaries of teachers and superintendents $79,531,925, which with other expenditures brought the sum total up to $115,103,886, an increase of $3,698,659 over the preceding year. There were 544 kindergartens in the United States, public and private, and 49 kindergarten training schools. Women have 7 separate colleges, and 152 higher schools. The number of other colleges and universities is 361, with grounds and plant valued at $45,948,778, productive funds $44,416,188, and an income (including tuition fees and State appropriations), of $7,475,200. We have 145 schools of theology, 50 of law; of medicine, "regular," 89, and 13 homoeopathic. Manual training schools numbered 13; unclassified industrial schools 23, and in 32 schools industries were taught in addition to the regular branches. We have 217 business colleges, 31 training schools for nurses, 65 institutions for the deaf, 54 for the blind, 19 for feeble-minded children, and 56 reform schools. The United States has 424 libraries, with a total of 3,721,191 volumes. These are indeed great figures, and they have a profound interest to the student of social science in America.

REFORM NEWS.

AMONG THE BUCKEYES.

CAMBRIDGE, O., Oct. 16, 1889.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—The pendency of a political campaign is not the most favorable time for the consideration of questions not directly involved in the matters to which the public mind is specially directed. Nevertheless I have found comparatively little difficulty in getting a hearing, and none in securing excellent attention. Saturday, Sept. 28, I lectured to a full house in the United Brethren church near Johnstown. In this, as in many other parts of the State, the same house of worship is claimed and occupied by both the liberal and the radical brethren. Of course it was the radical pastor, Rev. Tuttle, who invited me to that field. Our meeting was a success, but the fact that the lamp chimneys had been carried off by probably the other party came near making it a failure.

From here I went to Alexandria, where I preached on the evening of the 29th, in the Congregational church, to a union service. I was most kindly entertained by the pastor, who is a Freemason, but who discussed the subject with much more than usual candor. If he does not give up his relations to the order I shall be greatly disappointed.

From here I went to New Albany, in Franklin county, where I had expected to speak on the 1st inst., but instead listened to an able prohibition address by Rev. Olmstead, the Free Methodist chairman of the district. By request I spoke briefly. The town hall was full, and I think a good impression was made.

Next night I met a full house in the same hall, and spoke for an hour on the lodge system. A good many Odd-fellows were present, but the majority were in cordial sympathy. I was here entertained by some radical United Brethren, who seemed determined to "hold the fort." On Saturday, the 5th, I spoke to a fair audience in the Mt. Pleasant church, near Albany, and on Sabbath, the 6th, preached at Franklin U. B. church in the morning, and in the Free Methodist church at night.

From there I went to Baltimore, in Fairfield county, near which place I lectured on the lodge in a U. B. church on the 11th. On the 13th I preached in the morning in the Pleasant Valley U. B. church, and at night lectured to a good congregation. I had excellent attention and no visible dissent, except from some Good Templars who feared their craft was in danger.

From here I went to New Concord, Muskingum county, where I was most kindly received and entertained by Rev. J. M. Fariš. I also formed the acquaintance of Rev. J. P. Lytle, Pres. Irons, of Muskingum University, and Rev. Dr. Paul, pastor of the U. P. church. All expressed their sympathy with my work. On Tuesday night I met a good congregation in the college chapel, made up of faculty, students and citizens, and spoke for more than an hour. Much labor and many able addresses have been bestowed here, and nearly all the Christian people are in sympathy with our reform. Still there is a strong lodge of Odd-fellows, and their influence is manifestly against the cause of Christianity. Yet, if this adverse influence can be kept out of the churches; if it can be distinctly understood that all forms of organized secretism are out of harmony with the religion of Christ, there will be a vast gain to true religion.

Leaving Concord I came here to-day, and have had a pleasant interview with Dr. McFarland, of the U. P. church, and have just attended an interesting prayer meeting with his people. I go on to our State meeting. H. H. HINMAN.

A representative Catholic paper, the Church Progress, recently said editorially: "While our clergy hitherto had but to keep their people in the faith, and protect them from the attacks of non-Catholics, now they have to labor to extend our faith, to make the land Catholic." The italics are mine. This land can become a Catholic state only by overwhelming Catholic political authorities! This ecclesiastical intolerance of Romanism was unmasked in an address delivered in Philadelphia a little while ago by a Catholic bishop (Ryan). It proclaims the intention of the church. The Bishop says: "The church of Rome is intolerant. She alone has the right to be intolerant, because she alone has the truth. The church tolerates her enemies because she is obliged to do so, but uses all her power to annihilate them. If ever the Catholics should become a considerable majority, which in time will surely be the case, then will religious freedom in the United States come to an end. Our enemies know how she treated heretics in the middle ages, and how she treats them to-day where she has the power. We no more think of denying these historic facts than we do of blaming the holy Pope and the princes of the church for what they have thought fit to do." Here is the expressed purpose of Romanism to exercise political power in our country so soon as political majorities can be gained.—Washington Letter to the Midland.

CORRESPONDENCE.

ANTI-MASONS, WRITE FOR YOUR PAPER.

YORK, Pa., Oct. 14, 1889.

EDITORS CYNOSURE:—I hear occasionally of lectures that have been delivered, and also of other anti-secret work that has been done in Pennsylvania and New Jersey, without being reported in Cynosure. This state of affairs leads some of our friends to suppose that very little is being done in these two States, which is not the truth.

Now, it is highly important to report all anti-secret work promptly, for the good of the cause. It is very encouraging to those who are fighting the battles of anti-secrecy to hear good news frequently. If one greenhorn is hoodwinked and haltered in any little village of Pennsylvania or New Jersey, all the lodge geese and ganders cackle over it for weeks. But, if the foolish lodgeites can make so much fuss over a very silly performance, it seems to me that we reformers can not be censured for rejoicing when we do something to give the insiders and outsiders "more light" on the dark subjects relating to secret societies, rings, monopolies, murder-mills, etc.

So, let all anti-secret readers of the Cynosure do something for the advancement of the cause; and then let us have a fair report of all the work that has been done. Don't let us have too much modesty; we are anxious to hear "who killed Cock-Robin," and who is helping to wash the paint away from the ugly face of the old "hand-maid." Yours, etc., EDWARD J. CHALFANT.

NO TOBACCO FOR STUDENTS.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, Ind., Oct. 14, 1889.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—Last Saturday I interviewed the editor of the Crawfordsville Evening Journal, a young man who graduated in Wabash College last year. Mr. McCain very readily accepted of a brief article stating the object and methods of the National Reform Association. The editor of the Star, a weekly paper, received an article. Mr. Bodell, the secretary of the Y. M. C. A., very kindly showed me through their new building. It cost $28,000. This brother traveled in every State in the Union as representative of a book concern. He visited the Y. M. C. A. buildings in all the principal cities and took items. This building was planned by him and combines the good points in all he has seen. He invited me to make an address in this hall.

Sabbath morning I preached in the Central Presbyterian church, Rev. J. R. Cunningham, D. D., pastor. He has a beautiful church and fine congregation. He was educated at Princeton College. His theological course was taken in the U. P. Seminary at Allegheny. He was pastor of a U. P. congregation near Troy, N. Y., until two years and a half ago, when he was called here. The president and professors and most of the students of Wabash College and his members make an audience of no ordinary type. The recommendation of the session of this church is necessary for any student in their presbytery getting aid from the Board of Education. And they refuse to recommend any one who uses tobacco. The doctor thinks the example of Dr. Skinner in McCormick Seminary, smoking as he does, is injurious to the students. At 3:15 I lectured in the college chapel. President Tuttle conducted the devotional services. They have 250 students, an unusual number for the fall term. They all have books and do a little better singing than I have heard anywhere else. They are good listeners.

Dr. Tuttle thinks "they make the best audience in the State." The doctor was away in Ohio last week visiting the grave of his father and the old church where he preached his first sermon forty-six years ago. Introducing me to his wife he said, "Mrs. Tuttle and I have been tabernacling together now for forty-four years." Though so long in the service, his eye is not dim or his natural force abated. He is the same genial, great-hearted, strong man still.

At 7 P. M. I preached in the M. E. church, Rev. Mr. Switzer, pastor. The students were out in force, and Bro. Switzer said, "This is an unusual audience for us at night."

The great stand-pipe over on the hill reminds me of Dr. William Ashmore's saying: "Whisky is the stand-pipe in our comparative expenditures," and the whisky level is $900,000,000 annually. J. M. FOSTER.

SOME OPINIONS WORTH NOTING.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—By your permission, I would like to inform your many readers:

1. That my address for the present is, Crandon, Forest county, Wis.

2. That I have worked hard for about fifty years for national prohibition, and now have the great satisfaction of living in a radical prohibition town, where there never was a saloon; and we now say, there never shall be one! I think the saloons, like their founder the devil, have gone about "seeking whom they may destroy" long enough.

3. It is my opinion that the uniting of the powers of the strong drink fiend in the many States, and their success in the past year, is a sign upon which we can rely, that this, the most prominent and ruinous of Satan's works, is soon to be destroyed. See 1 John 3: 8.

4. That the secret powers themselves are helping (in more ways than one) God's ordained agencies in the exposure and extermination of a great foe of the family, the nation and the church.

5. As Bro. H. H. Hinman well declares in your paper of Sept. 19, that "denominational zeal is one of the greatest obstacles to all true reforms." Bro. Hinman, for twenty-five years I have sought its abolishment. Blessed be the name of the Lord.

6. I not only think and believe, but I know I am free and clear from the great evil of schism. If any man of God in the world can see any "ism" about me, or any lack of boldness in exposing any or all kinds of evil doings, if he will show me wherein I lack, or in what I fail, if I do not at once reform upon seeing my fault or faults, I will compensate him all that he may ask for his trouble, so that "his labor shall not be in vain in the Lord."

7. I am happy to say that at the Fourth convention of Christian Workers of the United States and Canada to be held at Buffalo, N. Y., Oct. 24 to 29, 1889, the subject of secrecy is to come before the convention. Yours in all true reforms, R. SMITH.

The school-books used in the Victorian (Australian) public schools are carefully revised in order to exclude all religious allusions, and it will scarcely be believed, but it is nevertheless true, that the revisers of school-books recently cut out of Longfellow's well-known poem, the "Wreck of the Hesperus," the lines in which the poet tells how the skipper's "little daughter," as the storm drove the doomed ship towards the rocks:

"Thought of Christ who stilled the wave
On the Lake of Galilee."

The name of the Saviour, the allusion to the Gospel narrative, was too much for the reviser. And yet, apart from the intolerant impiety of this piece of literary vandalism, is it not, to take even the lowest view, a piece of folly? Apart from all belief or unbelief, the poet might have used the expression as representing the state of the girl's mind, whether he approved of it or not. But our reviser appears to have had as little literary taste as religious feeling, and in the name of the undenominational [secular or Masonic, rather,] fetish he strikes the very name of Christ out of the book. The school children are not supposed to be Christians from the educationalist's standpoint, and he carefully guards them from any temptation to be Christians. If all the children of the colony were in the hands of such teachers, the outlook for Victoria would be a very black one.—Catholic Review.

QUESTION THE CANDIDATES.

THE AMERICAN ANTI-SECRECY LEAGUE AT WORK.

REPLIES FROM REPUBLICAN CANDIDATES.

For State Treasurer, Washington: I am not connected with any secret society. I heartily disapprove of all secret societies having any political ends in view. I think there are societies that have no such ends, whose chief objects are benevolent and suppose that they do some good.—A. A. LINDSLEY.

For Superintendent of Public Instruction, Washington: I am a member of the Masonic fraternity, and have been a member of the I. O. O. F. and I. O. G. T. I think I understand the principles of those orders perfectly; and if so, I must say that they are entirely non-political, and that there is nothing in either Masonry or Odd-fellowship that can cause any true Mason or Odd-fellow to swerve from his political, social or official duty in the least. Those who do so are not true men, and consequently can not be true Masons or Odd-fellows.—R. B. BRYAN.

FROM PROHIBITION CANDIDATES.

For Supreme Judge, Iowa: I have never been a member of any secret society; am, and ever have been, opposed to all secret associations; believing them wrong in principle and not only useless for good, but gravely dangerous to the peace, security, liberty, happiness and lives of the people. The instinct of human selfishness is too strong to be safely re-inforced by the selfish aims and narrow sympathies of such associations, with their wicked and illegal oath-bound pledges and penalties. My opposition has been notorious.—JACOB W. ROGERS.

For Treasurer, Pennsylvania: Secret societies have their advantages and disadvantages. While I condemn with all my strength of mind and purpose secret societies that tend to encourage lawlessness or to carry on conspiracies that in any way affect the public peace, health or happiness, yet I do not think it wise to condemn all secret societies because some of them happen to be bad and controlled by bad men for vicious purposes. J. R. JOHNSTON.

For Attorney-General, Massachusetts: I do not now claim membership in any secret society. For many years I have ceased to hold communion with any oath-bound organization, and I know of many others who have put in their last appearance with an assemblage to whose presence a pass-word, sign, and mummery was necessary. Undoubtedly many orders have come into existence from laudable and pure motives on the part of their founders, who honestly believed that the principles sought to be disseminated could be more effectively done through secret association than otherwise; and the success of some organizations, such as "Patrons of Husbandry," "Sovereigns of Industry," "Knights of Labor," etc., has tended to keep alive the "lodge-room" idea, as a medium of social and economic advantage. And just here it will be discovered that the innate selfishness of the human mind is the great incentive to secret compacts, and the "secret tie that binds." I have been led to believe that the "brotherly" and "fraternal" regard of members of secret associations has perverted the ends of justice in our courts; that witnesses have been constrained to tell less than the whole truth; that juries have returned verdicts not in accord with the law and the facts developed at the trial; that official records have been tampered with, and false entries made, in the interest of the "craft." And, further, that good men having knowledge of such wrong doing are prevented from exposing the same because of their oaths, taken in the presence of the wrong doer. I have never had valued friends, in whom great confidence was reposed, join the secret societies, but my confidence in them did not become lessened. And I recall many such cases. Whenever the processions of members turn out on gala days and on funeral occasions, I am impressed with the demoralizing influence of the order which compels some of the associates to commingle with some of the others. And the general hobnob of the orders has a deteriorating plane. Political caucuses and conventions have been influenced and controlled through the corrupting influence of self-imposed secret obligations. There is one green spot, however, on the great oasis of secret convocations. The members are all human, subject to the rivalries, jealousies, ambitions, and disappointments of the race. In the providence of God the mysticism and hollow mockeries of the secret orders will be unveiled to the sunlight, and reason and righteousness supplant the lodge-room dictum in all concerns of life. There can be no necessity now for orders of chivalry if there ever was, and it is time for the secret orders to depart.—ALLEN COFFIN.

For State Senator, New Jersey: I am not a member of any of the so-called popular secret societies, and while I know good men who belong to all of them, I am afraid that some of them at some times are, in their workings and influence, inimical to the highest interests and best good of our common country. I am not considering my "interests as a candidate" in this writing, for if I was I am sure the best plan would be to say nothing about it. But I always answer any courteous letters which may be sent to me, and apart from any political honors, immediate or remote, to impartially, without prejudice and to the best of my ability, do what I think is my duty as a citizen, in behalf of pure homes, a clean manhood, and an improved condition for our country.—HENRY W. WILBUR.

For Judge Supreme Court, Ohio: I do not belong to any secret society or fraternal organization other than the Sons of Temperance.—G. T. STEWART.

For Regent State University, Nebraska: The subject of secret societies is one that I have not studied carefully, but have always felt that the world would be better off without them. I have never joined but one society that could in any sense be called a secret one, and that is the W. R. C., whose only secret is that it has none. Personally secret societies have never caused me any trouble, but I can see how their members would find it very hard to act at all times in an impartial manner.—JENNIE F. HOLMES.

For Superintendent Public Instruction, Iowa: As to secret societies I am always ready to express my opposition to them, both as to the principle of secrecy, and the expediency of their existence, and give my testimony to that effect whenever occasion or opportunity offers.—MRS. M. H. DUNHAM.

For Secretary of State, New York: I have never had any connection with an oath-bound organization, and in common with the religious Society of Friends, of which I am a member, have testified against such, as being adverse to the recognition of a universal brotherhood, which lies at the foundation of the Christian religion. Whatever justification there may have been under despotic governments for such organizations for mutual protection, they are out of harmony with, and dangerous to, a republic, which is a social compact of itself, in which each individual tacitly covenants with the whole community, and the whole community with each individual, to be governed by a common law, for the common good.—JESSE H. GRIFFIN.

For Comptroller, New York: I do not belong to any secret society outside of the church of Christ and Royal Templars and Sons of Temperance. I do not believe in secret societies outside of the temperance organization.—BENJ. D. RAND.

For Member Board of Public Works, Ohio: I am as much opposed to secret political societies as any one can be. But, gentlemen, if you will unite with me in putting down the saloons and the saloon curse is abolished, we will not be troubled with secret political parties.—HARRY CLARK.

For Member of Assembly, New Jersey: I have never joined any secret society, except Sons of Temperance, which I hardly suppose would be termed as such. I have always felt that there was some question as to their being any good in general for our country at large, certainly not for a judge or jury, yet I never gave it serious thought or declared very emphatically against it. Think that I may in the future.—JOHN E. BLAKE.

For Regent State University, Nebraska: I make a vast difference in what is termed "secret orders." I belong to the I. O. G. T., and I think it one of the grandest institutions ever organized to benefit humanity! There are no oaths taken, only a promise to abstain themselves, and do all they can to get others to, from all intoxicants!

We have a password to keep our enemies and the enemies of mankind out of our meetings. I also belong to the A. O. U. Workmen, a mutual insurance company with no oath; simply a promise to pay assessments promptly to help our fellow man. I do not belong to the Masons or Odd-fellows. I would not. I know enough of their workings to know I could not take them up without affecting my Christian principles. I have been solicited many times to join, but will not give up my freedom and independence. I think these orders are a detriment to our American institutions.—L. B. PALMER.

For Governor, New Jersey: I have given the subject mentioned almost no attention, and at present cannot command time to give it sufficient thought to make even an expression of opinion of any value to you.—GEO. LAMONTE.

For Clerk of Supreme Court, Ohio: I am a Master Mason, Royal Arch Mason and Knight Templar, and am proud of it.—H. D. MCKNIGHT.

For Attorney General, Ohio: I do not recognize any right that you have to inquire as to my private relations. I can't see how men, not citizens of Ohio, have any interest in candidates in Ohio. But I have nothing to conceal. I do not believe that any of these societies teach any such principles as your letter intimates. I have no doubt that there are members in these societies (as there are in churches) who allow their fraternal feelings to influence them more than they ought. I belong to no secret society but the Good Templars.—E. J. PINNEY.

LITERATURE.

The current number of Our Day is a grand document against the aggressions of Romanism in this country. Joseph Cook's Boston Monday lecture on the "Reverses and Resources of Romanism," Bishop A. Cleveland Coxe on "National Defense against Ultramontaniam" and "French Canadian Romanists in New England," by President C. E. Amaron of the French Protestant College, Springfield, Mass. These are all documents of great interest, we might say of intense interest. It is manifest that the Protestant churches need to be aroused from a deathly stupor upon a question so momentous and threatening, and it is also evident that a grand revival of genuine Christian activity and spiritual life must come on us before there can be much accomplished. We would that this number of Our Day could be read in every Christian family in the land. Beside these articles Miss K. S. Woodward writes upon the life of the late Miss Brigham, who was last year chosen to preside over the fortunes of Mt. Holyoke Seminary, and who was not long after killed in a railway accident. Rev. J. T. Ise, a young Japanese pastor now traveling and speaking in this country, writes on the "Prospects of Unitarianism in Japan." Our Day is published at 28 Beacon street, Boston, at $2.50 a year.

The October Statesman opens with a symposium by C. C. Bonney, Judge L. D. Thoman, Rev. David Swing, E. Nelson Blake, Thomas B. Bryan, Rev. P. S. Henson and Rev. John H. Barrows on a World's Congress at the World's Fair. Their advocacy of the suggestion for holding such a congress of statesmen, jurists, scientists, educators and others is tantamount to its adoption. The other features of the October number are a discussion of "Municipal Gas Works" by Jesse Cox, a paper which will produce a stir on the gas question. Albert Griffin attacks "The International Revenue System," Rev. Charles F. Goss, pastor of the Moody church in Chicago, defends Christian Socialism, Gen. W. F. Singleton continues his discussion of Life Insurance, Ada Jean Mackay answers the question whether the "Coming Woman shall Propose," and Charles DeWitt Warner replies to the attack of Judge F. T. Fox on "The Single Tax."

Shoppell's Modern Houses is one of the most handsome and original of the architectural publications. Issued quarterly, it puts into the hand of every man who contemplates building a fine selection of plans, enlarges his views of the arrangement of a convenient dwelling, enables him to plan accurately and build with economy. This number contains plans for nineteen buildings, and complete working plans are furnished for each at a moderate price. It is published by the Co-operative Building Plan Association, New York.

Bulletin No. 6 from the University of Illinois Agricultural Experiment Station discusses a "Bacterial Disease of Corn," which has been discovered in several Illinois districts. The experiments of scientists may be of incalculable value to the farmers in probing into these mysteries of nature and providing remedies for destructive agencies.

"October in the Garden" is the opening editorial in Vick's Magazine for the month. The number discusses practical topics which every gardener can appreciate, as "Grapes at the South," "Door Yard Trees," "Meadow Sod," etc.

OBITUARY.

FRANKLIN W. CAPWELL was born in the town of Middlebury, Wyoming county, N. Y., May 21st, 1823, and died in the same town, October 9th, 1889.

He was united in marriage to Ellen Cory, January 1st, 1850. To them were born eight children, five of whom, with the mother, remain. Born of pious parents (his father being for many years deacon in the Baptist church), he was guided in the path of rectitude and righteousness. When but a youth he entered the service of the Saviour, for the advancement of whose kingdom he labored and prayed to the end. A strong constitution, a resolute will, an adaptability to circumstances, and a zeal born of God contributed largely to his successes in life.

He was eminently a man of independent thought and action, a natural born leader. Once convinced a cause was right, he would stand for it regardless of what others said or did. The earlier part of his religious work was with the church of his choice, the latter for the reforms he learned to love. As Sabbath-school superintendent for sixteen years he did much. A pledge prepared by him requiring total abstinence from the use of profanity, narcotics and intoxicating liquors was widely circulated through Sabbath-schools, receiving hundreds of signatures.

Though opposed to the lodge from childhood he has felt a special interest in our work of later years, and has given liberally of time and means to its support. "Pleasant Dale" farm is well known to our reform workers who have passed this way. It has been the privilege of the writer to make his home here while laboring in this State. That he was the nominee at the time of decease for State Senator by the Prohibition party in the district where he resided, shows his neighbors' appreciation of his merits as a leader.

Having been the respected and loved president of the N. C. A., his life and noble, self-sacrificing spirit is too well known to need comment. His final sickness was the result of a cold contracted while at work; though short and severe, not once did he complain, but cheered all around him. He died as he lived, an honor to his family, to the state, and the truth he dearly loved, a true man of God.

Elder Razmussen of the Middlebury Baptist church preached his funeral discourse from the very appropriate words, "For the faithful fail from among the children of men." Psalm 12: 1, last clause. Let us emulate his example as he followed Christ. W. B. STODDARD.

IN BRIEF.

A Bohemian stone-cutter of St. Paul, Minn., named August Boorfried, has discovered a combination of chemicals by the use of which the hardest stone can be dissolved and cast into any desired shape, the casting being as hard as flint, translucent and capable of taking on a brilliant luster. It varies in color according to the stone used, and can be had from a bright red to a beautiful azure blue. While in the fluid form it can be used for coating anything having a stone or glassy surface. Mr. Boorfried claims that car wheels and rails can be made in this way.

One of the oldest engineering projects in the world is now gradually approaching completion, and the work will probably be finished during the present year. This is the canal through the Isthmus of Corinth, in Greece. Work was actually begun on the canal under the Emperor Nero, so that over seventeen hundred years will have passed between its beginning and its final completion. As finally excavated, the canal will be four miles long, with a depth of eight meters, or sufficient for the largest vessels which usually navigate the adjacent seas.

Lake View, in the northern part of Chicago, is the home of the finest trees within the limits of the new city. In the lowlands the elm and the ash predominate, and in the highlands the various kinds of oak. At the intersection of Evanston and Sheffield avenues and Sulzer street there has recently been transplanted the noblest monarch of them all. A magnificent elm of the white or water species towers seventy-five feet high. It is nine feet in circumference above the roots. This lordly tree is supposed to be about a century old, and had its birthplace on the eighty-acre tract of the Hale estate, a few hundred yards from where it now stands. The oldest inhabitant fails to remember a time when this great elm did not lift its spreading branches above the surrounding pigmies of the forest. Last spring it was dedicated to public use by Mr. Hall, the agent of the Hale estate. The property-owners in the vicinity of the intersection of Evanston and Sheffield avenues raised a purse to defray the expense of transplanting the tree. It took between $300 and $400 to make the removal. The first contractor, a regular tree mover, abandoned the job after the wind had toppled the elm to a horizontal position, where it lay for three weeks. Then a house mover was employed, and the giant tree was at last brought into position with the aid of rollers. It was raised in its present location after no ordinary labor had been expended. The roots were given a supply of suitable soil, and although but two months have elapsed since the removal there are indications that the giant has become firmly attached to its new home.

Secretary Noble has transmitted to the director of the geological survey a report by Special Agent Morrison on the condition of the Casa Grande [Great house] ruins in Pinal county, Arizona, with instructions that the necessary steps be immediately taken to repair and protect the ruins, under the authority granted in the act of March 2, 1889, appropriating $2,000 for that purpose. Special Agent Morrison, who was sent out to examine the condition of the ruins, in his report states that these venerable relics of prehistoric America stand in a great undulating plain about midway between the station of Casa Grande and Florence, seven or eight miles from the Gila River. He says that the front of the main building measures 60 feet and the width 43 feet. The height of the first story is 13 feet, the second 9 feet, and the third and fourth stories are 8 feet respectively. The greater part of the upper story has disappeared. The walls are between 4 and 5 feet thick and the material of which they are constructed is almost indestructible concrete, made of fine gravel, sand, and cement, closely resembling the granolithic now used in Washington. This was laid in the walls in great blocks; one of these measured 7 feet 3 inches in length, 4 feet 3 inches in width, and 2 feet 6 inches in height. The walls, both inside and out, were plastered with cement, which yet clings to them with wonderful tenacity; that on the inside being as smooth and glossy as the best hard-finished interiors of the present day. All of the rooms, of which there are four now intact, are of a uniform buff color which is very pleasing to the eye. The largest of these rooms is 34 by 9 feet. The extreme height of the building is nearly forty feet. The lower story is nearly filled up with crumbling debris and the drifting sand of the plain. The holes in which the ceiling timbers were placed are plainly visible, but every particle of wood has been carried away by relic hunters, and the disintegration of the walls has been so rapid of late years that if measures are not immediately taken to strengthen them the entire mass will soon fall into a shapeless ruin.

The confidence of people who have tried Hood's Sarsaparilla, in this preparation, is remarkable. It has cured many who have failed to derive any good whatever from other articles. For diseases caused by impure blood or low state of the system it is unsurpassed.

Veni, Vidi, Vici! This is true of Hall's Hair Renewer, for it is the great conqueror of gray or faded hair, making it look the same even color of youth.

THE N. C. A. FUNDS.

The General Fund is that from which the running expenses of the Association are paid. From it the agents on the field are supported.

The Foreign Fund is that from which the foreign demand for literature against the lodge is supplied to missionaries.

The Free Tract Fund clearly states by its name the object for which contributions are solicited. Millions of pages have been distributed by means of this fund.

The Cynosure Ministers' Fund. The donations to this fund have enabled the Association to send many copies of the Cynosure to the ministers of the South, especially to pastors of colored churches. The result has been a blessing to them and their churches.

Contributions to any or all these funds are urgently solicited.

J. BLANCHARD, EDITOR.

HENRY L. KELLOGG, ASSOCIATE EDITOR.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, OCTOBER 24, 1889.

The Susquehanna Free Methodist Conference met lately at Binghamton, N. Y. The rank and file all vote prohibition, and ordered to be printed a very powerful anti-papery report, by Rev. Mr. Owens of Utica. The pamphlet should be widely circulated.

Rev. Mr. Fish is sent to the Free Methodist church, Saratoga, N. Y. This church building is newly painted, and his work opens finely. Bro. Fish hopes to attend the Conference of Churches in Tremont Temple, Boston, December 11th, and move others to go if possible. Supt. B. T. Roberts should be there by all means.

The Salvation Army is split: "English" and "American." The English wish to make "soldiers of Christ," and let them join or not join the churches. The American wing baptize and administer the communion, i. e., start a new sect. The Americans put up posters in villages thus: "The American Salvation Army has not surrendered, and will not to the English," and appeal for help. Both wings are getting the people "saved"; but not "saved" from the lodge, or the Democratic and Republican license parties.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

POLITICS.

SARATOGA, Oct. 17, 1889.

DEAR CYNOSURE READERS:—We have heretofore published that Dr. Funk of the Voice (as did Miss Willard) declared himself personally with the platform of the American party opposed to secret societies, and when I requested him to say so in the Voice, he said he would do so. He has, however, failed to do so; and a few weeks since, the Voice answered one of its correspondents that the Prohibitionists "take no ground for or against secret societies."

While in New York, I called on Gen. Fisk, but he was in New Jersey. I wrote him whether we could in any way be assured that the candidates of the Prohibition party in 1892 would be, as he was, opposed to secret societies? I violate no law of personal correspondence by saying that, in his courteous and complimentary letter (he can write no other), he gives us no ground to hope that the Prohibition candidate for President in 1892 may not be a Freemason. I heard Rev. I. J. Lansing and Chairman Dickie address a large and enthusiastic crowd in Worcester last week on prohibition. I never heard more forcible speaking. They showed that the Republican and Democratic parties were both license parties, and never could or would be anything else. The loss of the saloon-liquor vote would be fatal to either. The crowd cheered them to the echo. But neither speaker hinted that a party, one part secret and the other open, was a certain failure, which is as obvious a truth as the other, though I have reason to know that both those gentlemen loathe secret lodges. Since the Cronin murder some ten or twelve large dailies have condemned lodges which claim the power of life and death over their members in contempt of the law of the land—and the people are ahead of the press. In Worcester the daily which handles Masonry without mittens is fast running ahead of its contemporaries.

The Cynosure has given its chief attention to the religious aspect of the question. But it strikes us that it is now high time we were getting ready to put an American candidate into the field in 1892, unless the leaders of the Prohibition party will give us assurance that they will declare for open organizations; in short, "an open field and fair play." All the Good Templars I have met say their "secrecy is but trivial." Then they have but a trifle to give up, while it is a serious matter for us to give up the example of our Saviour who, in his reform work, "in secret said nothing."

I have found one talented minister here in Saratoga who will try to attend the Congress in Tremont Temple, Boston, Dec. 11; and, after traveling somewhat widely in New England, the situation here seems to me to be as it was in the Conemaugh valley before the Johnstown dam broke. At least ninety per cent of the New England Baptist and Congregational ministers are averse to the lodge. But it would be fatal to most of their present position if they should come out against the Republican and Democratic parties without a strong American party to back them. If the ten or twelve strong dailies which have shown symptoms of feeling their way out into open opposition to secret lodges could be brought to each other's acquaintance and confidence they would confirm and encourage each other. Cannot the Boston meeting be used to promote such an end?

The state is as much God's ordinance as the church, though their spheres are different, and each should strengthen the hands of the other by their separate appropriate action.

The National Board of Directors have voted to send four issues of the Cynosure to the New England pastors before the December Congress. Our readers will receive a thorough discussion of the Congregational Council in those four numbers. But the lodge is haughty, contemptuous and cunning; and its god "deceiveth the whole world." Our leader must be Christ, and our effectual weapon, prayer.

LODGE AND LIQUOR IN THE SUPERLATIVE DEGREE.

The Telegram, a brilliant daily of Worcester, Mass., was the only paper in the city which was named by the great Congregational Council in its vote of thanks to the press. The editor, a young Mr. Christie, is considered by good judges the raciest writer in the city, and fearless as racy. Like Gough, he is reputed to have been intemperate. If so, it may be said of him, "The devil made a mistake when he made him a drunkard." Henry T. Cheever, who knows him well, says Mr. Christie is a sincere respecter of the religion of Christ, and the article which we give below speaks for itself on temperance and lodgery. It is to be hoped that the Telegram will be furnished with a full report of the Boston Conference. The "Mighty Lord" editorial below appeared in February last in its columns. Secretary Stoddard supplied the whole city with it in tract form. We shall put Telegram extracts in the Cynosure issue ordered by the directors to all the pastors of New England.

[From the Daily Telegram, Worcester, Mass., Feb. 10, 1889.]

MEN IN NIGHT SHIRTS, AND SOBER, PERHAPS, THUS HAIL HEWETT.

"Installation of George F. Hewett, 32° T. P. Gr. Master."
"Mighty Lord! Heavenly King."—Choir.

The above appeared in the order of ceremonies at the installation of the recently appointed officers of the Masonic Lodge of Perfection, which occurred Thursday night.

It makes funny reading, doesn't it? George F. Hewett, "thrice potent grand master," T. P. Gr. M., with three fly specks in pyramid form, hailed as "Mighty Lord, Heavenly King." Of course, it's all right. If the city contains a "Mighty Lord and Heavenly King," he cannot be hailed any too quickly. It is probably safe to say that the majority of people, if it was left to them to hail a "Mighty Lord and Heavenly King," would not hail as above. A good many people would demur if they imagined their "Mighty Lord and Heavenly King" ran a wholesale liquor establishment at the corner of Foster and Waldo streets. This is the first instance, probably, in which a "Mighty Lord and Heavenly King" has been in the rum business.

This "Mighty Lord" part of the title every one will understand, for Mr. Hewett to-day is by far the most powerful of all rum lords in this city. The "Heavenly King" is a trifle obscure. The two don't appear to dovetail together. There may be some potent influence in the three fly specks in pyramid form (T. P. Gr. Master) between the letters following Mr. Hewett's name, which harmonizes the "Mighty Lord and Heavenly King."

In the way of remarkable things, probably nothing has been quite so striking since Morgan disappeared, as that a gathering of gentlemen clothed in their right minds should stand up in night shirts and hail George F. Hewett as a "Mighty Lord, Heavenly King." It is a peculiar proceeding for such gentlemen to choose for their "thrice potent grand master" and "Mighty Lord and Heavenly King," a man who through the rum traffic is squeezing every cent he can out of the city, and who climbs up the ladder of Masonry that he may get a still more potent grip for his business. When Mr. Hewett can go Rev. J. F. Lovering 14° better, and be hailed as "Mighty Lord and Heavenly King," it looks a little queer to people who do not understand the mysteries of Masonry, and if there is any inference to be drawn from it, it is that Rev.

Mr. Lovering, if he wishes to advance in the order, should resign his pastorate to-day and start a wholesale liquor store. 32° must, of course, indicate greater perfection than 18°. Give the Gospel a chance! The gentleman who preaches peace is apparently of little account, relatively, while the man who is the main stay of the unlicensed rum-sellers, and who has reduced to a science the study of how to get the last possible cent out of Worcester in exchange for rum, is hailed by men in sober senses, perhaps, by such salutations as "Mighty Lord! Heavenly King!"

If he could fix it so that he could rob twice the number of families of food and clothing, would these people who sang to him the other night put a crown on him? Perhaps that is why nature or rum usually keeps his visage decorated with most strangely mottled colors; royal purple, the brightest yellow and heavy green being often scattered about his face in irregular spots. These, it seems, are kingly emblems.

THE ILLINOIS CONVENTION.—The program committee preparing for the State convention at Elgin has secured the promise of addresses from Revs. G. A. Milton of Elgin; S. H. Swartz of St. Paul's M. E. church, Chicago; Rev. Dr. William Wishart of Monmouth; Col. George R. Clarke of the Pacific Garden Mission, Chicago, and Mrs. M. E. R. Gleason of the Massachusetts W. C. T. U. Prof. J. N. Bedford of Wheaton Theological Seminary and the pastor of the Free Methodist church of Elgin, whose name escapes us, are also expected to speak. The convention will be held in the Free Methodist church, opening on Tuesday evening with the College Contest. Four students from Wheaton College and the Northwestern University have engaged to enter the lists for the prize. This will be a feature of unusual interest and will attract to the meeting numerous friends of the young men.

—An urgent request has been sent to President J. Blanchard and Secretary Stoddard, now attending the New York convention at Houghton, to attend the National Convention of Christian Workers especially engaged in city missions, to meet in Buffalo Oct. 24 to 29. The invitation comes from a prominent member of the convention, and is accompanied with the assurance that they and the cause they represent will be made welcome.

—A late number of Puck illustrates the G. A. R. situation respecting the pension office. Gen. Alger of Michigan, the present commander-in-chief of the order, was candidate for the nomination which Mr. Harrison secured last year. Puck represents him as sitting in the Presidential chair, President Harrison sprawling and half-crushed under him. The explanation is that he has secured practically the power of the President through his position in the Grand Army order.

—It is with great regret that we announce that Miss E. E. Flagg, our New England agent, whom our readers in every part of the country have learned to esteem, through her entertaining and instructive letters and Sabbath-school notes, will not come West this fall to attend the National W. C. T. U. Union meeting in this city November 8th to 12th. Illinois friends were also expecting to greet her in the Elgin convention. She writes that she will not be able to take so long a journey at present.

—All our W. C. T. U. friends in Illinois who expect to attend their National Convention in Battery D, this city, on the 8th of November, should start a day or two sooner and come to the Elgin meeting on the 5th. The additional expense of travel will not be great, and for all who can inform this office a considerable reduction can be obtained. A train leaves for Elgin at 5:15 p. m. on the Northwestern road. We can think of a score or two of noble women who would be greatly profited by meeting with the Illinois Christian Association. It is proposed to hold a ladies' meeting at some time during the Elgin convention.

—At the late meeting of the executive committee of the National Reform Association secretaries were appointed for various departments of inquiry to which the work of the Association extends. They were as follows: Rev. Dr. Morrow on Immigrant Population. Rev. Irwin P. McCurdy, D. D., the department of the Press. Rev. S. L. Baldwin, D. D., of New York, on the Chinese question. President Charles A. Blanchard on the Labor question. Rev. I. N. Hays, D. D., on the acknowledgment of Christ in Thanksgiving proclamations. Rev. Herrick Johnson, D. D., declines the department touching Marriage and Di-voice Laws, for lack of time, also President S. F. Scovel declines work in behalf of the Sabbath for the same reason. Miss E. J. Crothers accepts the position of secretary for the formation of King's Daughters' National Reform Circles.

PERSONAL NOTES.

—Pres. J. Blanchard and Secretary Stoddard are expected home the last of the present week. The latter will probably return soon to the East to provide yet further for the Boston conference.

—A younger brother of Rev. M. A. Gault, now studying in Allegheny Theological Seminary, was attending the Inter-seminary Missionary Alliance held in this city last week as a delegate from his institution.

—Miss Lucia Arnold, daughter of Bro. I. R. B. Arnold, now residing in Wheeling, West Virginia, lately read an essay before the Sigourney Society of the Female College of that city, on the subject of secret societies. The young lady acquitted herself ably. The Wesleyan Methodist publishes the essay.

—Rev. T. P. Robb of Linton, Iowa, spent a day in Chicago last week on his return from an Ohio visit, during which he assisted Rev. J. S. Thompson of Utica in administering the communion. He made the Cynosure a welcome call and attended a lecture by Dr. A. T. Pierson before the Institute in the Moody church.

—Rev. S. H. Swartz, who is one of the speakers at the State convention at Elgin, Ill., preached his first sermon last Sabbath at St. Paul's M. E. church on the North Side in this city. At the last meeting of Rock River conference he was transferred from Austin where he has been an esteemed pastor for two years.

—Rev. W. J. Gladwin called on the Cynosure last week on his way to Cassopolis, Michigan, where he was to preach on the Sabbath. He has projected a missionary lecture tour to California for which we pray there be opened a wide and effectual door. Our churches are much in need of such instruction as Bro. Gladwin gives, and all would profit by a personal acquaintance with him.

—Rev. Samuel F. Porter expects to return to this city from North Dakota about Nov. 1st, ready for a Southern campaign. The atmosphere of Dakota must be better than Dr. Brown-Sequard's "elixir of life" since it can inspire our aged brother to write poetry with such grace and point as our first page manifests. He says prohibition is popular and gaining in the esteem of all right-minded people in the new State.

—Frederick Douglass, United States Minister to the Haytian Republic, has gone to his post in a United States war-ship, leaving the harbor of New York under a salute of fifteen guns. Mrs. Douglass, his accomplished wife, goes with him. The honors paid to Mr. Douglass, the fact that he, a colored man and once a slave, has been entrusted with this important mission, is an encouraging omen to all well-wishers of the colored race.

—Col. George R. Clarke, of the Pacific Garden Mission, preached for the College Church, Wheaton, Sabbath morning, in the absence of the pastor, Rev. A. J. Chittenden. In the evening he addressed a crowded union meeting in the Methodist church, which was much moved by his account of the wonderful power of salvation through Christ exhibited in the Mission. A collection of $41 was taken up, and a unanimous vote was given for Col. Clarke to come again. His testimony against the lodge was most effective.

The National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, the largest society ever composed exclusively of women and entirely conducted by them, is to hold its sixteenth annual convention in Battery D, Nov. 8 to 12. Delegates are expected from every State and Territory in the Union. Reports will be read of forty departments of work. The Sunday and evening meetings will be of varied and general interest. A popular attraction will be a diamond contest for the Demorest Diamond Medal, in which representatives from different States who have already won gold medals for superior temperance recitations will take part. Another and still more notable feature, says the Inter Ocean, will be the laying of the corner-stone of the already famous Woman's Temperance Temple, the plans for which have been before the public so long. The undertaking was a great one, but success seems now assured. The recent subscription of Marshall Field for $200,000 worth of stock has brought the total amount of stock taken up to the necessary amount, $500,000, and the building will now be erected at once. The location is the corner of LaSalle and Monroe streets, and the building will probably cost $1,000,000, or nearly that.

THE AMERICAN ANTI-SECRECY LEAGUE.

The membership of the American Anti-Secrecy League have received recently tracts which will be helpful in enlisting new members. The objects of the League are reprinted so that you can cut them out and use them in adding to the membership roll.

Your co-operation is needed in questioning candidates and in circulating "pasters" furnished you for elections from this office when requested. While this League is not a political party, it proposes to furnish a way for every voter to cast his ballot for a man unpledged to a secret society; and that not only in State, but in general elections.

Politically, prohibition is the prominent reform question before the country, and while we aid it so far as we can, until it has carried the day, we then will not only have antagonized and minified the influence of the secretist in that party, but spread abroad a knowledge of our own principles, and have the foundation for an anti-secret party that will be a power as well as a name.

W. I. PHILLIPS,
Superintendent A. A. S. L.

When, in conversion, we leave the world and renounce all its pomp and show, we also renounce the beggarly elements of this world, the manner in which unbelieving men assert to worship God. The worship conducted in the lodges is of this world. Therefore they set up a self-made idol, which they call a Supreme Being, and pay their homage to this Being, in such a manner as to let Gentile and Jew, heathens and Christians partake of this worship. And to conduct their worship they appoint chaplains. These do not conduct Christian worship, for such is excluded, but lodge-worship, wherein all the members of the lodge may participate. But just this so-called worship we renounce when we become Christians. We pledge ourselves against such denial of Christ in the worship of the world. How can we then enter or remain in the lodge! The mere fact that the lodge appoints its own chaplains, ought to set our face against the lodge, because we can impossibly adore the Baal of the lodge and Christ too.—Lutheran Witness.

A letter from John Bright, the veteran British statesman, to a deputy of Paris, has been published. It expresses opinions which are more or less disturbing the most enlightened minds in Europe. Mr. Bright says: "If European nations would accept commercial liberty—that is, moderate or abolish customs—Europe might soon tend to an era of perpetual peace. At present all resources are swallowed up by military exigencies. The people's interests are sacrificed to the most miserable and culpable fantasies of foreign politics. The real interests of the masses are trodden under foot in deference to false notions of glory and national honor. I cannot help thinking that Europe is marching toward some great catastrophe of crushing weight. The military system cannot indefinitely be supported with patience, and the populations, driven to despair, may possibly before long sweep away the royalties and pretended statesmen who govern in their names. I hope your country and mine will remain at peace."

CHARLES P. SUMNER, father of the Senator, and a renouncing Mason: "Masonic engagements, whether they are called oaths, obligations, or promises, ought never to be made. They are not sanctioned by law and are not obligatory. They make it a Masonic crime to divulge that which the good of the community requires should not be concealed."

THURLOW WEED: "I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the Anti-masonic excitement by a sincere desire, first to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of secret societies."

INDIA MISSION LECTURES IN THE WEST.

It was my intention to return to India this autumn, but the great need of spreading information regarding mission work calls me to spend some months longer in the United States. I am contemplating a tour in the West in November and December. Parties in Nebraska, Colorado, California, etc., who may wish mission lectures, may inform me at an early date. I only ask traveling expenses. All contributions over that amount go to mission work. I wish to hear from a few who are zealous for mission work, and who will gladly give several hours weekly to correspondence upon it.

WALLACE J. GLADWIN, Miles, Iowa.

HON. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Speech in the Senate: "Secret societies, sir? Before I would place my hand between the hands of other men, in a secret lodge, order, class or council, and bending on my knee before them, enter into combination with them for any object, personal or political, good or bad, I would pray to God that that hand and that knee might be paralyzed, and that I might become an object of pity and even the mockery of my fellow men. Swear, sir! I, a man, an American citizen, a Christian, swear to submit myself to the guidance and direction of other men, surrendering my own judgment to their judgments, and my own conscience to their keeping! No. No, sir. I know quite well the fallibility of my own judgment, and my liability to fall into error and temptation. But my life has been spent in breaking the bonds of the slavery of men. I, therefore, know too well the danger of confiding power to irresponsible hands, to make myself a willing slave."

THE HOME.

THY WILL BE DONE.

We see not, know not. All the way
Is night. With Thee alone is day.
From out the torrent's troubled rift
Above the storm, one prayer we lift:
Thy will be done!

The flesh may fail, the heart may faint;
But who are we to make complaint,
Or dare to plead in times like these,
The weakness of our love of ease?
Thy will be done!

We take with solemn thankfulness
Our burden up, nor ask it less;
And count it joy that even we May suffer, serve, or wait for Thee.
Thy will be done!

Though dim, as yet, in tint and line,
We trace thy picture's wise design,
And thank Thee that our age supplies
Its dark relief of sacrifice,—
Thy will be done!

And if, in our unworthiness,
Thy sacrificial wine we press;
If from thy ordeal's heated bars
Our feet are seamed with heated scars,—
Thy will be done!

Strike—Thou the Master, we thy keys—
The anthem of the destinies!
The minor of the loftier strain,
Our hearts shall breathe the old refrain.
Thy will be done!

A TRIAL OF FAITH.

DR. RAINSFORD'S STORY.

It is a trial of faith I am going to tell you about, and it came to me after I went up to London. The beginning of it was a letter I got from a strange lady telling me of a gentleman who was lying near death—slowly approaching it, but surely—with no hope of recovery, and the man was an atheist, a rank unbeliever and hater of religion. The lady requested me to see this gentleman and tell him of salvation.

Now that is no easy thing to be managed in England; to get access to strangers is a different thing from what it is in America—they manage things differently over there. I did not, for the life of me, see how I was to do it. But I could not get rid of thinking about it. So I wrote him a note saying that it had come to my notice that he was ill and somewhat alone in the city, and if it would be agreeable to him I would like to call upon him.

Well, I took the note and carried it to the door and sent it up with my card, and then I cut sticks and ran as fast as I could go, feeling very queer and uncomfortable.

After three days I got an answer giving me permission to call. I was let in by the housekeeper, who was red with weeping and full of distress. A word of inquiry—"You are in trouble, I see"—and the waters of her grief burst forth, and the tears hailed fast down over her face.

"Oh, it is my son! A soldier he was, but he is dead, and the news has come—shot down in the battle. Oh, oh, sir, with no one to read him a verse or to say him a prayer, to tell him the way to go! Oh, the heart of me, it is broken entirely! Oh, oh!" and the poor soul became speechless with sobbing.

So, you see, the Lord was opening the way for me by softening her heart toward me, and I passed on up stairs. I entered the room. The poor gentleman lay on his back, his poor body tormented with abscesses that were draining his strength and racking him with sore pain.

We had a few minutes' talk in the line of inquiry and condolence. The poor fellow did not deny the pain and isolation of his condition. He couldn't, you see.

"Aye, there is nothing can reach you but the promises of God. I have come to speak them to you—the sweet words from his Book."

"Are you a parson?" he interrupted, and no words can paint the look of contempt and scorn that swept over his pale face. He leveled that look full at me—a look of unutterable detestation—then he turned in the bed, his face to the wall and his back to me.

So he stayed, no movement or sound from him. I repeated a few texts, and then I stole out of the room, down the stairs, and out of the house, feeling—oh, I can't tell how mean I felt—but that is no matter. I could not keep him out of my mind, and I could do nothing but go again to see him in a few days.

"Oh, sir, go away! Go away!" cried the housekeeper, pushing me off with both hands. "Go away! Never come here again! It is raging mad he was entirely. Oh, nothing like it was ever! You can't go by me. I won't risk it."

"What if it was your own boy that was dying without a word of Jesus? Oh, you know what that is! Let me go by."

And the end of it was that she did let me go by, and I went into the sick chamber. The minute the gentleman saw me, the same look of contempt came upon him; he turned to the wall without a word. But I sat down by the bedside and repeated the blessed words: "Come, now, let us reason together, saith the Lord: though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool."

And other verses of the same tenor I said to him. But there was no movement or sound from the back of the man—not a stir of the bedclothes even to show that he heard me, and after a while I got up and went out of the room. But there was a wonderful drawing of my heart to that man. I could not get away from him, and in two or three days I was back again; and so I kept at it till I had made four or five visits, each one exactly like the one I have told you about. He never ordered me out of the room—he was too much of a gentleman for that—but each time there was the same look of bitter contempt, the same turning to the wall, the same immobility and silence.

But I had to keep on coming and reading the verses for the easing of my heart that was yearning for him; and each time when I had done, I used to slink away feeling very small. One day I was reading the sweet words of our Lord, and I'd told him who said them, and when and how. "In my Father's house are many mansions: if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you." I had got to that, and the gentleman suddenly lurched over in the bed and faced me.

"Are you like the rest of them?" he asked savagely.

"What do you mean?"

"Are you like the rest of them? I want to know."

"But I don't know what you mean. Who is 'them'?"

"The parsons," he answered in a tone of fierce contempt. "I have known a dozen or so of parsons, and they ate my dinners and drank my wine—all I offered them. But there was not one of them ever hinted that I had a soul!"

"Oh, well, you met a bad lot, you see," said I. "If you had invited me, I'd have been glad to eat your dinners, though I wouldn't have drunk your wines. But eating or drinking, or letting it alone, I should have tried to save your soul!"

"I believe you would! I believe you!" he burst forth. "Now tell me something," he demanded with fierce energy. "You believe there is a God, and that you are going to stand at his judgment?"

"Yes."

"And that God Almighty will damn you if you lie to me?"

"He surely will."

"Tell me, then, as you hope for your soul in that day—those things you have been reading to me—are those things true?"

"They are true."

"Are they unlimited?"

"They are the word of God."

"Unlimited? No reservation?" he demanded.

"The word of the living God to every living soul."

"Are they so true that a man like me can take them in a minute without getting ready for it? I have lived—well, no matter what kind of a life—it is no use to talk of it, but it would not commend me to the society of heaven. I've never thought of God—I have said there was no God. Are those words so true that I can take them—I, now?"

"Yes."

The man struck out his arm straight from the shoulder and brought home a mighty blow upon his forehead.

"God Almighty, I believe!" he shouted.

And he did believe; there was no "help my unbelief" about it. He had no unbelief; never a doubt or a shadow of a doubt dimmed his faith. It was complete, triumphant, unchanging, like the God he trusted in, not like the man who trusted.

The gentleman lingered along five or six weeks after this. Oh, wonderful weeks they were to us, for I used to go very often to see him.

"I should like to read the words—myself," he said shortly after. "When you are not here—I don't remember them all."

So I got him a little book of selected texts—we have them in London, give four pence for them; I suppose you have them here—for the poor fellow had no idea how to find anything in the Bible. He did not know how to hold one, and he didn't have the strength to do it. And then he used to read over his texts, and live on them, and feed—eat and drink of them—the blessed words of God.

I went there one last day; the breath had just stopped in the poor body. He lay there, a wonderful light on the pallid dead face. The little book of texts lay on the bed beside him, and on its open page the dead hand was placed. "Fear thou not; for I am with thee; be not dismayed; for I am thy God: I will strengthen thee; yea, I will help thee; yea, I will uphold thee with the right hand of my righteousness."

"They are very pretty words, aren't they, Mr. Edward?" I was a saying to him, sir," said the housekeeper to me. "I don't wonder you like them, Mr. Edward," says I to him; "they are very pretty words indeed!" Oh, but you never heard the voice of him, solemn-like and sweet, as he answered me: "The words of the living God are my hope." And with that he was dead."—Margaret E. Ditto, in The Congregationalist.

STANLEY.

It is now well known that his original name was John Rowlands, and that his parents had so little means that he was sent, when 3 years old, to the poor-house of St. Asaph to be brought up, whence at the age of 13 he was turned loose on the world to shift for himself. He was born near Denbigh, Wales, in 1840, the very year that Livingstone, aged 23, first entered Africa as a missionary. When about 14, he found his way to New Orleans from Liverpool as cabin-boy of a sailing vessel, and there a kindly merchant, named Stanley, little knowing what he did, adopted him. But Mr. Stanley died before Henry became of age, leaving no will, and the lad was again thrown on his own resources.

On the breaking out of the rebellion, in 1861, young Stanley went into the Confederate army. He was taken prisoner by the Federal forces, and, being allowed his liberty, he volunteered in the Federal navy, being already fond of seafaring and adventure. In course of time he was promoted to be acting ensign on the ironclad Ticonderoga. When the war was over his love of adventure led him to travel, and he went to Asia Minor, saw many strange countries, wrote letters to the American newspapers, and even then was making for himself a name and fame. Returning to the United States, he was sent by Mr. Bennett, of the New York Herald, to Abyssinia, in 1868, a war having broken out between the British and the king of that country. Here Stanley got his first taste of African adventure. It was not a long war; for the British soon shut King Theodore in his fortress of Magdala, where he perished by his own hand; but it was a strange campaign, and Stanley wrote an account of it, with its cruelties and its wild adventure, that reads like a romance. The very next year a great rebellion broke out in Spain, and Stanley went again in the service of the New York Herald to report the scenes of battle and siege.

When the war in Spain was over, in the autumn of 1869, the world was beginning to wonder whether Dr. Livingstone, the devoted Christian missionary and African explorer, were alive or dead. More than twenty months had passed since his last letter was written, and the world began to believe that he had died in the heart of the Dark Continent. James Gordon Bennett, editor of the New York Herald, was at this time in Paris, and telegraphed Stanley to meet him there, which, with his customary promptitude, he immediately did. On his arrival he was confronted with the startling and wholly unexpected question: "Will you go to Africa and find Livingstone?" After a moment's reflection he answered, "I will;" and the agreement was at once concluded.

The 21st of March, 1871, found Stanley at Zanzibar, with a caravan of 192 followers, ready for the great expedition. On the 24th of October, at Ujiji, on the shores of Lake Tanganyika, he first met the famous missionary who was so powerfully to influence all of his after-life. They remained together till March 14th, 1872, the younger man drinking in the spirit of the elder and becoming, as he often declares, converted by him. At the London Missionary Conference, the Rev. David Charters, of the Congo Mission, referring to a conversation between himself and Stanley, reported the latter as saying, "If Dr. Livingstone were alive to-day I would take all the honors, all the praise that men have showered upon me, I would lay them at his feet and say, 'Here you are, old man; they are all yours!'"

On Stanley's return to Zanzibar he sent back to the lone missionary, who refused to leave his work, though so sorely needing rest, abundant supplies of whatever he needed. Two years later, in the spring of 1874, when the remains of Livingstone were carried back to England in one of the queen's ships, for burial in Westminster Abbey, Stanley was one of those who bore him to his grave. It was then, he tells us, that he vowed he would clear up the mystery of the Dark Continent, find the real course of the great river, or, if God should so will, be the next martyr to the cause of geographical science.

The outlet of Lake Tanganyika was as yet undiscovered; the secret sources of the Nile were unknown, and even then the famous Victoria Nyanza was only imperfectly sketched on the maps. Discussing such matters one day with the editor of the London Daily Telegraph, Stanley was asked whether he could settle these questions if commissioned to go to Africa. He said: "While I live there will be something done. If I survive the time required to perform the work, all shall be done. The proprietor of the Telegraph cabled Bennett, asking if he would join the new expedition. "Yes. Bennett," was the answer speedily flashed back under the sea, and the thing was determined. Stanley left England in August, 1874, attended by only three white men, and at Zanzibar the party was increased by porters and others, mostly Arabs and blacks, to the number of 224 persons, some of the men taking their wives with them; and on the 13th of November the column boldly advanced into the heart of the Dark Continent, having for its two-fold object to explore the great Nile lakes, and, striking the great Lualaba where Livingstone left it, to follow wherever it might lead." It has been rightly called "an undertaking which, for grandeur of conception, and for sagacity, vigor and completeness of execution, must ever rank among the marches of the greatest generals, and the triumphs of the greatest discoverers of history."

Into the details of that wonderful expedition of one thousand days, so thrillingly heroic, we cannot enter. August 9, 1877, Stanley emerged at the Congo's mouth, and "a new world had been discovered by a new Columbus in a canoe."

On his return to England he found an embassy from the king of the Belgians, who had been planning an expedition to open up the Congo country to the trade, and who wanted Stanley to take command. With great reluctance he undertook the management of the International Association, as the new organization was called, and returned to Africa in 1879, where he remained nearly six years, hard at work on the Congo, making roads, establishing stations, opening the way for commerce, and doing more than any other man to found the Congo Free State south of the great bend of the Congo river, having an area of 1,508,000 square miles, and a population of probably fifty millions.

The work accomplished for civilization and Christianity here during this period were enough, had he done nothing else, to immortalize any man. In obtaining the concessions of over 400 native chiefs not one shot was fired. It was a grand victory over barbarism without the guilt of bloodshed that too often has stained such triumphs.

While Stanley was in this country, during the winter of 1886-87, he was called back to Europe once more to take command of an African expedition, the one for the rescue of Emin Pasha. This expedition was organized at Zanzibar in January, 1887, and supplies were shipped from there directly to the Congo, and carried up the stream in steamers. June 28, with 389 officers and men, Stanley started from Yambungo, below Falls Station, not far from the mouth of the Aruwimi, and marched east at the rate of ten or twelve miles a day, amid great opposition from the natives and terrible sufferings due to the nature of the country, which consisted of gloomy and almost impenetrable forests. When they reached Ibwiri, 126 miles from the Albert Nyanza, Nov. 12, the party had become reduced, by desertion and death, to 174, and the most of those that survived were mere skeletons. Here, finding food and rest, they started on again Nov. 24, and in another week had emerged from the deadly forest which came so near swallowing them all up. Dec. 13 they sighted the Nyanza, and were soon encamped upon its banks; but Emin was not there, as they had hoped he might be. They were too weak to march to Wadelai, his capital, far to the north, the natives would not let them have a boat, Stanley's conscience would not permit him to seize one by force, there were no trees of sufficient size to make one, and his own boat had been left 190 miles in the rear, at Kilimo Longa, through the inability of the men to bring it. So there was nothing to do but to go back for the boat. This was done, and in spite of Stanley's severe illness, which required a month's careful nursing, the force, or what was left of it, was back again in the vicinity of the lake by the last of April. Here they were rejoiced to find a note awaiting them from Emin, to whom rumors of their arrival had penetrated, and who begged them to tarry till he could make further communications. April 28 Emin himself arrived in his steamer, and great was the rejoicing. The two heroes remained together until May 25, when Stanley, rested and re-inforced, started back to Fort Bodo, where he had left men and supplies. From this he pushed still farther back, hoping to meet the other half of the expedition under Major Bartelott. But alas! the major had been shot, and the rear column, thoroughly demoralized, had gone to pieces, believing that Stanley himself was dead, as had been reported. Stanley, though sorely disappointed and crippled by these untoward events, determined to go back again to the Nyanza by a shorter route and again unite with Emin.—Gospel in all Lands.

NOTE.—Stanley and Emin Bey with all their company are now expected soon to reach the east coast near Zanzibar from the Victoria Nyanza, and thus conclude one of the most remarkable expeditions of modern times.—ED. CYNOSURE.

TEMPERANCE.

A WORD

TO A PROFFESSED CHRISTIAN WHO VOTES FOR LICENSE LAWS AND LICENSE PARTIES.

Brother, can a man who has once known our Lord Jesus Christ and the grace that makes him free, vote to make his fellow creatures slaves to sin without becoming by so doing himself a sinner? All laws that license the open sale of intoxicants make very many men, women and children slaves to sin, who, but for such laws, never would have become victims to that bondage. Over the gates of death whereinto such go is written, "No drunkard can enter into the kingdom of heaven." If drunkards cannot enter heaven, can drunkard-makers go there? In voting for and with a political party that licenses drunkard-making, are not you a drunkard-maker? When you voted with and for a party that gives to one man the legal right and special privilege to hunt his fellow man with a drag-net, called a license law, framed to make his victim a drunkard, did you not sanction and approve those license laws? And are not those laws framed for making drunkards? Think. Is not that their sole and only result? But for those laws there would not be one drunkard where there are now an hundred such. You cannot justly deny this. When, therefore, you voted for a party that enacts such laws, which laws have ever made men drunkards, not sober citizens, did you not vote to make men drunkards? It is an axiom in law that a man is responsible for all the results that naturally grow out of his conduct. Was not this making drunkards the natural result of your party vote? And in so doing did you not sin against your fellow-man by voting to make him a probable slave to the sin of drunkenness? Nay, did you not sin against God, whose child he was?

Brother, is conscience only a worn-out, useless, worm-eaten rag? Do you say that drunkard-making will go on whether you vote your license party ticket or not? But is it any justification of wrong-doing on your part that similar wrongs are being committed by others? Should a Christian go with the multitude to do evil? Do you tell me that you only voted with your license party on the general issue of officers for government, and not for its license policy, and that you also greatly deplore and denounce the awful sin and crime of drunkard-making? But, my brother, they who are either actively or silently parties to such wrong-doing by voting their political party's license ticket, most certainly have forfeited all right, title, claim or privilege to complain against either the sin or the sin-makers. For when one willingly and publicly sits down with the scorners in his seat, he openly sanctions both the scorners and his occupation, and has thereafter no moral right to complain of the rogue or of his doings.

Is it replied that "License is the only practical method of dealing with the drink evil in the present state of public opinion?" Brother, righteousness is practical, and has been ever since the Creator announced it as the law of his universe. They who seek to substitute aught else for it are, in his sight, no wise men, but fools. All license laws are, in practice, evil-making laws, drunkard-making laws, and not righteousness-making laws, and so they are in reality the most impractical of all laws. No laws are so insane as those whose sole product is sin. And all laws that license drunkard-making are sinful laws.

Laws are to be judged of by their effects, and so judging, I say again all license laws are sinful laws. They never have produced anything else but sin. Be candid. Can you think of aught else they have produced? Then, in voting for such laws, or for a party producing such laws, you voted for sin. You sanctioned sin; you aided sin; you fostered and abetted sin. Are you not, therefore, in the sight of God, a sinner?

Do you tell me that the business cannot now be prohibited? What! Do you tell me that this business of publicly debauching men and women in dens called saloons, that are foul and reeking with the ruined bodies and souls of the helpless and hapless hosts that have gone before them, and having depraved and criminalized these innocents, therefore sends them forth to fester and starve and riot and rot, heaps on heaps, in this fair land of heaven-crowned abundance, that such a legalized business of sin and woe and death and damnation cannot be prohibited? In God's name, then, what can be prohibited? Is there therefore nothing awaiting us but Jehovah's fearful reprisals for man's inhumanity to his fellow? And if so, think you that you who have voted for license can hope to escape his fiery judgment when it comes? I tell you nay. For such as you have brought the doom upon the land by voting for the business to have legal guardianship and to grow, until now you tell us it is too late to resist it. If your claim be true that it cannot now be prohibited, before God I charge the guilt of it upon your soul. You and such as you alone have made it what it is—made it by your party license vote.

Brother, I beseech you repent of this, your fearful sin against humanity, against your God; and though you cannot now, or ever, recall the myriads already doomed and damned through your fault and consent, nor hope to remit the agony and woe their kindred have suffered because of them, yet I beg you, as you hope for mercy at the throne of God, see to it that hereafter, so much as within you lies, you bring forth fruit meet for repentance by voting, praying, working only for prohibition. But the awful business can be prohibited. The very hour that the professed Christian men of this land will stop sinning against man and God, as they are doing now by voting for license, and will resolve henceforth to vote for righteousness rather than for party, in that hour the legalized business of drunkard-making dies. Try it and see. Do it now. For the sake of the souls who otherwise will rise up in the Day of Judgment and condemn you, do it now.—Selected by W. B. Walthall, Quaker Hill, Indiana.

Moses did not use high license or moral suasion on calf worship; he prohibitionized the calf to powder.

COMMENTS ON THE S. S. LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The Arts of the Demagogue. Vs. 1-6. We have here a most perfect picture of an unscrupulous demagogue. First, Absalom seeks to dazzle the multitude by a display of royal pomp which his father had never thought of assuming and which was forbidden by the Hebrew constitution. Second, he pretended to be a great lover of justice—a man who wanted to see right done, no matter how humble the person wronged, or how small the matter in controversy. Third, he complained of the existing government, and adroitly insinuated that if he only held the reins of office there would be no reason to complain of injustice, but everybody would have his suit, whatever it was, satisfactorily settled. Fourth, he professed to be a great friend of the common people by showing them the most familiar condescension. He was the exact counterpart of a modern politician angling for office. He could flatter and fawn on the dear people and profess to be their truest friend, but had he gained the throne the probability is that Israel would have groaned under his tyranny. The more thoroughly selfish and corrupt a candidate or a party may be, the more magnificent their promises, the more they run down the opposite party or candidate, and the more familiar do they make themselves with the lowest class of the people. The saloon vote can be bought and manipulated, and where office is sought at the expense of principle it is a factor that counts far more than the vote of the churches. As a result the demagogue ignores the feelings and wishes of the pure and high-minded class, but takes great pains not to alienate the liquor vote. The professional labor agitator pursues the same arts, inciting the workmen to strikes and deeds of violence. And so in many ways selfish and designing leaders steal the hearts, that is the allegiance, of the people away from God, away from righteous authority, and thus they are destroyed like sheep "for lack of knowledge."

2. Absalom's Hypocrisy. Vs. 7-12. Absalom plotted in secret. He did not "come to the light that his deeds might be made manifest." Like all conspirators he burrowed in the dark, and then he masked his designs under a cloak of piety. This was to deceive the king, and two hundred of the prominent men in Jerusalem, whom he invited to go with him to the pretended sacrifice. It is recorded of these latter that "they went in their simplicity," or sincerity. "They knew not anything." That they were being drawn into a traitorous conspiracy against their God and their rightful king was the farthest possible thought from their minds. Probably among these two hundred were many good men who were looked up to and respected. While a part may have been carried away by the popular enthusiasm, or else lacked the courage to assert their loyalty in the face of such an overwhelming majority, it is probable that they were generally ashamed to confess that they had been so cleverly tricked and deceived. It is often said that "Masonry can't be a bad thing because so many good men and ministers belong to it." But these have gone into the lodge in their simplicity, knowing nothing of what will be required of them, and deceived by the assurance beforehand that "they shall find nothing in the institution to conflict with their duties as Christians or as citizens." Once in they are ashamed to come out and confess that they have been put through such degrading ceremonies, and thus they are quoted as friends and upholders of the order, and drawn into what is nothing less than an organized conspiracy against the Lord's Anointed, to usurp his authority and take away his crown.

PRACTICAL SUGGESTIONS FROM PELOUBET'S QUARTERLY.

1. How sharper than a serpent's tooth it is to have a thankless child.
2. We see the evil of defective training and bad influences around youth.
3. Yet around all are many good influences, and every young person chooses for himself which he will follow.
4. We see in Absalom the baseness of ingratitude and disobedience to our Heavenly Father.

5. Every power of attraction and influence is given us to use for good.

6. Wiles, hypocrisy, and flattery may succeed for a time, but end in failure.

7. There is only one way to true success, and that is by obedience to parents and to God.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—In his first sermon after the burning of his church, Dr. Talmage of Brooklyn indulged in a sensational and vain-glorious piece of oratory. He renewed his appeal to all Christendom to help him in erecting a new building, because he proposed to slight no one in his preaching when settled again. He said to Baptists that they proposed to have a baptistry in the new church; to Episcopalians, a portion of the litany at the communion table; to Catholics, a cross over the pulpit, and probably one on the tower; to Methodists, they meant to sing like thunder; to all denominations, to preach a religion as wide as heaven and as good as God. When it is remembered that the old church was fully insured, this drumming up funds from all the world smacks of a demagogue spirit. The insurance companies can make such an appeal with more grace.

—As the second and third year of the Evangelical Alliance work among the churches is now entered upon in a number of communities, the hope of its continuance is confirmed. The features involved are only such as have been striven for by all the churches, especially when they have been aroused with evangelistic zeal. The kindly, neighborly, Christian acquaintance in the family to family visiting, widely distinguishes the work from a canvass. A canvass is often very profitable, but it only reaches the surface of the field, hurriedly and but once; whereas the field should be tilled, by continuous visits, which soon live away from the unpleasant phases of a canvass, and show clearings, plantings, and in time precious fruit. First the blade, then the ear, after that, the full corn in the ear. Binghamton, Kingston, Tonawanda, New London, Conn., and other places, after the prevailing summer rest, report most hopeful rallying to Alliance work for the ensuing months. Jamestown, N. Y., Wilmington, Del., and Waterbury, Conn., since the summer aggregate just twelve hundred visitors, assigned to their little fields of an average of ten families each, and a number of larger cities are arranging for meetings which, by a careful setting forth, and study of the religious condition and needs of their own communities, will lead to the speedy organization of the household work. The announcement of the national meeting to begin in Boston on December 4th next, has already quickened the interest in the work of the Alliance. The call for various published documents, the Alliance meetings and conferences now held in many communities, the references to the great Washington meeting of 1887, and the correspondence concerning the coming meeting, are gratifying tokens.

—The Central Illinois Free Methodist Conference adopted a strong action on secret societies at its late meeting, saying: "Freemasonry, especially, is extra-judicial and blasphemous in its oaths of obligation, anti-Christian in its religion, supremely selfish in its beneficence, preposterous in its pretensions to antiquity, and a most stupendous fraud on truth, and an imposition on the intelligence of humanity. It is a tree of evil, not of the right-hand planting of the Lord, and must be rooted up; and we, as a church, to this end must be true to our principles, both in our preaching and practice, wherever we may be called to labor."

—The Michigan Conference of the same church also resolved: "Secretism is an insidious foe. It invades every avenue of life. The various titles by which it is known are legion. Some of them are very fascinating, decoying the unsuspecting within their grasp. The more subtle forms of secretism are the 'Patrons of Industry,' 'Knights of Honor,' 'Grand Army of the Republic,' the various orders of temperance and of working men; because of their simplicity and present profit to the members. Masonry presents itself to man as a religion, and offers to conduct him through life and bring him to endless felicity. . . . It is no time to lessen our effort for its overthrow. We should remember that our help is Almighty and our resources inexhaustible. Let us, therefore, increase our efforts to drive it from our midst."

—A new Reformed Presbyterian church was lately organized at Seattle, Washington. Rev. S. Dell Johnston has been ordained as pastor.

—A hopeful revival is reported among the students at Houghton Seminary, New York, where the New York State convention is convened this week. Seven conversions are mentioned by Prof. Dodd in a single day.

—The editor of a Japanese newspaper recently collected statistics of growth from all the Protestant churches of Japan, showing their increase during the last three years. From 38 churches they have grown to 151, and from 3,700 members to 11,600.

—Medical mission work in China is lessening the anti-foreign feeling of the Chinese in diminishing the power of superstition which connects diseases with evil spirits, and sends the suffering to the exorcists and the idols, instead of the physician; in giving constant proof of the unselfish character of our Christian religion, and in preparing the way, and making openings for direct evangelical work near by and far off.

—The prime minister of Siam, one of whose residences is in Ratburi, after repeatedly expressing his wish for a mission there, now offers a large brick house free to missionaries, and will aid in securing other necessary buildings for medical mission schools, etc. A lady in Philadelphia (says the Missionary Review) has offered the $50,000 necessary to support the physicians and clergymen who go to occupy this new parish of 50,000 to 75,000 souls.

—The General Council of the Evangelical Lutheran Church held its twenty-second convention in Pittsburgh recently. The Council is one of the four general bodies of the Lutheran church in the United States, which now numbers 4,500 ministers and 1,035,000 communicant members. The General Council itself has 902 ministers, 1,501 congregations, and 251,741 communicant members. Its home mission work is represented by 392 mission congregations, 246 ministers, supported at a cost of $50,000. Its foreign mission, carried on at Rajahmundry, India, at a cost of $12,000, last year suffered heavily by the death of two of its American missionaries. But at this meeting a missionary, Rev. Edman, M.D., was commissioned for India.

—The Presbyterian church in South Australia, that of Millicent, has distinguished itself by adopting a new method of paying its debt. Having got the loan from a friend of sixty acres of good land, the minister, the Rev. T. Cunningham, and some twenty of his flock, ploughed and sowed the ground, and the crop, which found a purchaser as it stood, realized $775, sufficient to meet the bank overdraft.

—"Blind Kaldas," the Protestant colporteur in the city of Asiut, in Egypt, sold 474 volumes of Scriptures last year. He winds his way through the crooked streets without a guide; is acquainted with most of the people; has a robust intellect and a memory well stored with the Bible; is not easily angered and seldom gets into trouble. Kaldas's blindness probably helps him in many ways.

—It is the peculiar distinction of India that it has been the theater of four great religions—Hinduism, Buddhism, Mohammedanism and Christianity. The first three have each had many centuries of opportunities, and yet Christianity has done more for the elevation of Indian society in the last fifty years than during all the long ages of their domination. Neither Buddhism nor Mohammedanism made any serious impression upon caste, neither was able to mitigate the wrongs which had been heaped on women; Mohammedanism rather aggravated them. The horrors of the suttee and the murder of female infants, those bitterest fruits of superstition, were left unchecked till the British Government, inspired by Christian sentiment, branded them infamous and made them crimes. Even the native sentiment of India is now greatly changed, and the general morality of the better classes is raised above the teachings of their religion.—Dr. Ellinwood, in Church at Home and Abroad.

—The income of the British Government in India last year from the opium monopoly was $30,000,000.

—In heathen countries Protestants occupy 500 separate mission fields, containing 20,000 mission stations, supplied by 40,000 missionaries. In these 20,000 mission stations there are 500,000 Sunday-school scholars—an average of 25 to each station. In the 20,000 Protestant mission stations there are 1,000,000 of native communicants, or an average of 50 to each station. There are also 2,000,000 of adherents who are friends of the evangelical faith and hearers of the Gospel preached from the Bible—an average of 100 to each station.

—The New West Education Commission, the object of which is to promote Christian civilization in Utah and adjoining States and Territories, held its annual meeting at the Sherman House in this city lately. The secretary said that the work was far more extensive than the public or even the church supposed. He presented the following summary: Number of schools in '88 and '89, 30; teachers, 71; pupils, 3,255; pupils of Mormon parentage, 1,035; pupils of Apostate parentage, 886; pupils of Mexican parentage, 115; number of Sabbath-schools, 22; number of pupils in Sabbath-schools, 1,497; number of pupils taught by New West teachers in Sunday-schools, 276; total number Sunday-school scholars, 1,773.

—In the China Inland Mission Hospital and Dispensary at Chefoo, 5,539 out-patients have been relieved, 217 surgical operations performed, 96 in-patients treated and brought under spiritual influences, not a few of whom are believed to have accepted Christ as their Saviour; and all this work is done at the small cost of £143. One of the most encouraging signs in the missionary work in China is the hold the Gospel is gaining on the hearts of the women. One lady has from forty to fifty present at a women's meeting each Sunday.

—In Persia Christianity has had great success during the last three years. In Western Persia there are now more than 2,000 church members. What is still more hopeful, much of this progress is made through the efficiency of native pastors. Of the seventy-nine students in the college at Roomiah, seventy are Christians. There are many village schools established by the missionaries, and Dr. Labaree reports that the Moslems of Persia are more accessible than those of any other land.

LODGE NOTES.

At Dothen, Henry county, Ala., Monday, a riot started over the arrest of a member of the Farmers' Alliance. A brother of the man arrested drew a knife and attacked the Marshall. Several persons then drew revolvers, and two men were instantly killed and six wounded, three of them mortally.

The Missouri Grand Lodge of Freemasons elected Theodore Brace of Paris, the presiding justice of the Missouri Supreme court, Grand Master at St. Louis. The Grand Lodge of the Knights of Pythias, also in session at St. Louis, elected Joseph H. Hawthorne of Kansas City Grand Chancellor.

The ex-Confederate soldiers in the vicinity of Greenville, Alabama, are organizing themselves into what are called "County Confederate Soldiers' and Sailors' Veteran Associations," the aims and objects of which are similar in a great measure to those of the G. A. R. posts of the North. The movement was started in this Congressional district, and is being taken up all over the State.

The Inter Ocean of Saturday says: "Sunday evening the fourth annual reunion and reception of the Ancient Order of Hibernians will be held at Fitzgerald's Hall, corner Halsted and Adams street. There will be a well-chosen program of addresses, vocal and instrumental music, and a complete financial statement of the order since the inception of the insurance feature will be presented.

Past Grand Master Smith has issued a circular, addressed to those who were prominent in the late cope-stone performance, saying: "The Grand Master desires to thank each and every one of you for the grand success attending the parade, and placing of the cope-stone upon the great Auditorium Building this day. Freemasonry seeks no ostentatious display or notoriety, but identified with the erection of great public buildings, in its operative or speculative character, of every age and every country, it is most fitting that it should complete this grand building, the Auditorium, which is to be dedicated to public uses."

A San Francisco dispatch of the 8th inst. says: A call for a meeting of the League of Heaven and Earth, posted in Chinatown, reveals the strength and boldness of the Chinese secret society which has long since been proscribed in China. Its existence here was known only to members, but it has grown much lately, and since the beginning of the year it has made its power felt against its enemies. It was originally founded by native Chinese to secure the overthrow of the Tartar dynasty and has now become, like the highbinders' societies, a machine for blackmail and vengeance. Its peculiar feature is that its victims are removed completely, no trace of the corpse being left to serve as a clue to the crime. Six Chinese are said to have suffered death at its hands within the last few months, but relatives can get no facts about their fate.

Intelligence from Sarawak, the British colony in Borneo, informs us that summary vengeance had been meted out to a Chinese secret society which recently decreed death to all non-members. This society was the Ghae Sin, notorious in China for lawless deeds. It gained great strength with the last few years in Sarawak, and all arrangements had been made to take vengeance on the Chinese who refused to recognize its authority. Luckily, Rajah Brooke, son of the famous rajah who established British supremacy in the Straits, learned of the conspiracy, and in a sudden attack upon the society's quarters secured documents that led to the arrest of about fifty leading members. Six were condemned to death and eleven to be flogged, and after imprisonment permanently exiled. On August 12 the six condemned to death were taken out in a small steamer, blindfolded, bound and shot, their bodies being sunk in the river. About a score of prisoners will be exiled after flogging and branding, if they will not reveal further secrets of the order. This is the same society which almost compassed the murder of the first Rajah Brooke, and all the foreigners in Sarawak a generation ago. Several hundred were then hanged or shot and the society was wiped out. A branch of this society exists in San Francisco, and its members are among the most desperate of the highbinders.

Prior to 1717, the only ritual known to Masons was obligation, with a word of recognition. In 1729 a catechism, as a test of membership, was in vogue, of so unmeaning a character that sensible men endeavored successfully to change it to something more reasonable. Hence to the time of Preston, continual changes were made, when he revised and added to it such measures as would commend it to men of culture and education. About the middle of the last century, Dermott formulated a ritual different from that of Preston, which was adopted by the so-called "Ancient Lodges." At the union of the two English Masonic factions, early in the present century, a ritual was formulated which is essentially the same as that practiced by the Grand Lodge of England at the present time. Some of the first lodges established in this country were authorized by the Ancient or Dermott branch of the order, notably Pennsylvania, which still holds the same ritual, and call themselves "Ancient York Masons." The ritual in use in England at the present time is greatly different from that in use elsewhere. That generally adopted for the use of the various Grand Lodges of the United States was formulated by Webb and is used in no other country. The only landmark of Masonry in any way connected with the ritual is the naked and unadorned Hiram legend.—Light (Masonic paper).

HOPE FOR THE SICK.

One Remedy for One Disease.

(From Medical Journal.)

"The four greatest medical centers of the world are London, Paris, Berlin and Vienna. These cities have immense hospitals teeming with suffering humanity. Crowds of students throng the wards, studying under the Professors in charge. The most renowned physicians of the world teach and practice here, and the institutions are storehouses of medical knowledge and experience. With a view of making this experience available to the public, the Hospital Remedy Co., at great expense, secured the prescriptions of these hospitals, prepared the specifics, and although it would cost from $25 to $100 to secure the attention of their distinguished originators, yet in this way these valuable medicines are sold at the price of the quack patent medicines that flood the market and absurdly claim to cure every ill from a single bottle. The want always felt for a reliable class of domestic remedies is now filled with perfect satisfaction. The Hospital Remedies make no unreasonable claims. The specific for Catarrh cures that and nothing else; so with the specific for Bronchitis, Consumption and Lung Troubles; Rheumatism is cured by No. 3, while troubles of Digestion, Stomach, Liver and Kidneys have their own cure. To these is added a specific for Fever and Ague, one for female weakness—a general tonic and blood-maker that makes blood and gives form and fullness, and an incomparable remedy for Nervous Debility." These remedies are all sold on an absolute guarantee to do what is claimed for them.

A circular describing this new method of treating disease is sent free on application by HOSPITAL REMEDY COMPANY, 279 West King street, Toronto, Canada, Sole Proprietors.

HOME AND HEALTH.

MAKE YOUR HOMES ATTRACTIVE.

Mothers and fathers who have sons and daughters growing up, do not always realize as they should the great necessity of making home not merely a place in which their children eat, sleep and are clothed, but one in which they find positive happiness and enjoyment. In nine cases out of ten where you see a wild youth or a giddy girl, go to their homes; you will find them cheerless, unattractive, or perhaps actually disagreeable.

The nature of youth is excessively restless; it has a longing for action and excitement, ambitions more or less vain, and always the irrepressible desire to know a broader life. Repress these natural instincts, and you will be sure to throw them into any society that in a measure will gratify their longings. Your sons do not go to the public bar-rooms at first for the taste of the liquor which they have not as yet acquired; they go for the gay companions they find there. The influence for good or evil that a mother has over her sons, the control that she exercises over their destinies, is a grave responsibility. Throw open your best room to the children in the evenings. Have books and a magazine or two, even if you put away less money. Stimulate their ambition, and invent occupations and amusement for your children. Give them games and endear yourself to them by sharing their joys and plays. Encourage them to be affectionate. Do not with formal coldness starve them for want of caresses.—American Agriculturist for March.

HANGING PICTURES.

If we suppose pictures wisely chosen and framed, there still remain certain questions as to their judicious hanging. Here we note first that they should be suited, primarily as to their subjects and next as to size, to the room in which they are to be put. This rule is followed in the general custom of placing in the study or library portraits of authors, and similarly in the music-room those of great composers. Some householders even go the length of selecting for the dining-room representations of game, fish, or fruit. Negatively, the most important application of this rule is probably that family portraits, especially if large, should be kept in the most private rooms rather than in those used by almost all persons who come into the house. It is hard to name a practice in much worse taste than to have in the parlor one, two, or, in some cases, an extended row of portraits of people perhaps very estimable personally, but having no other claim to distinction than being members of the family living in the house. Landscapes can scarcely be termed out of place in any room.

An important canon of good taste is that one and the same apartment should contain either colored or monochrom pictures, but not both. This rule is perhaps subject to exception where a person is living in but one or two rooms and is thus under some necessity to hang in proximity incongruous pictures. The same may be said of the rule against an excessive number in one room; yet in either case it may be better to stow away part of one's pictorial possessions.

In choosing places on walls for different pictures, of course the old rule is not to be forgotten to regard the light and shade in the picture, and put it where the prevailing light from the nearest window will be opposite the depicted shadows. Care is necessary also sometimes to avoid the occurrence of an unpleasant glare from the surface of an oil painting or from glass.

A common error is having the eyelets in the frame too near the middle of the two sides, whereby the surface of the picture when hung tips forward at an ungraceful pitch. Too little inclination is not so bad as too much. Another error is hanging pictures too high. A safe guide, at least in beginning, is to have the center of the pictures about in line with the eyes of an adult of ordinary size. In adjusting pictures of varying width to an average height above the floor it is the center, rather than the bottom, of the frames which should be considered.—Good Housekeeping.

CHICKEN JELLY.—Boil a pair of chickens till you can easily pull the meat from the bones. Return the bones to the broth, and boil half an hour longer. Strain, and set in a cool place, and this liquor will become jellied. The next day cut the meat into small pieces, leaving out the skin. Melt the jelly, and put the pieces in it. Add two spoonfuls of Worcestershire sauce, two of walnut catsup, one of salt, and a pinch each of ground cloves, allspice and mace. Slice eight hard-boiled eggs and two lemons, and line a large bowl or mould with these slices: pour in the mixture, and let it stand till the next day. The water should just cover the chickens when put to boil. This is a highly ornamental, as well as delicious, dish, and will keep a long time.

MASSACHUSETTS BROWN BREAD.—Three cups of unsifted rye and Indian meal, one-half cup molasses, one teaspoonful of salt, two of soda, one pint sour milk, one of water. If water is used alone, add a little sharp vinegar. To bake this bread, take two flaring lard pails of different size, put boiling water in the larger (not too much), set the smaller one, containing the bread, inside and cover tightly; bake five or six hours in a moderate oven—the longer the better the bread, if the oven is not too hot. On the baking, more than anything else, depends the success of the bread.

Success in life is the result of push and energy. If the blood is impure and sluggish, both body and mind lack vigor. To cleanse and vitalize the blood and impart new life to the system, nothing else has such a marvelous effect as Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

"Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup for Children Teething" softens the gums, reduces inflammation, allays pain, cures wind colic. 25c. a bottle.

CATARRHAL DEAFNESS

A NEW TREATMENT.

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membrane of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact, and the result of this discovery is that a simple remedy has been discovered which permanently cures the most aggravated cases of these distressing diseases by a few simple applications made (two weeks apart) by the patient at home. A pamphlet explaining this new treatment is sent free by A. H. Dixon & Son, 337 and 339 West King Street, Toronto, Canada.

WE USE SOAP

WE USE PEARLINE.

DISTORTED HANDS will surely come to those who clean house and wash clothes in the old-fashioned way—with soap. How can it be otherwise? You rub—rub—rub, and you ache—ache—ache. You spend hours inhaling the hot steam and odors which rise from the tub, impregnated with the filth of soiled clothing, and with all this you have not obtained the best results.

WITH PEARLINE a delicate woman can do a large wash. You do not have to rub yourself and your clothes to pieces. You do not have to inhale fetid steam; when finished you are not too tired to see that your work is well and economically done, and that you have saved many hours of woman's hardest work.

JAMES PYLE'S PEARLINE is the modern soap. Beware of imitations.

Wonderful and Startling!

HAVE YOU READ IT?

It will create a sensation and "open" the eyes of every true American to see the "Danger Ahead," and expose the secret of Rome's attack upon our Public Schools. This wonderful book is none other than

THE SECRET INSTRUCTIONS OF THE JESUITS.

Published by an ex-Romanist.

This work is a translation from the Latin of the "Secret Instructions of the Jesuit Society." Its revelations are startling, showing to what depths of deceit the Jesuit priest and all connected with this Order of "Spies" and "Traitors" will descend to accomplish their unholy aims. It is printed in the original Latin with the English translation parallel, thus doing away with the anticipated charge of forgery by those who set a premium on murder and treason.

A history of the Order of Jesuits and their expulsion from every Catholic country is given; also, the reason why the Public Schools must go.

FARM NOTES.

SOME PRACTICAL SUGGESTIONS ON CLAY ROADS.

Clay roads can only be made into satisfactory ways by means of effective drainage, so contrived that the least possible water will remain in the material which feels the effect of the tread of the draught animal or the down-wearing thrust of the wheel. Deep side-ditches are absolutely necessary for such roads, and the narrower the roadway the more effective will be this drainage work. It is a great mistake in such roads to have any more width than is imperatively necessary for the uses of the structure. If the ditches extend to a depth which would maintain the crown of the road two feet above the water-level, and the roadway is of the least possible width, the problem of protection against mud is most easily solved.

To effect any satisfactory solution of the difficulties which beset such roads it is necessary, however, either to construct an artificial surface of timber or of stone, which is always a matter of great cost, or to mingle some binding materials with the clay. If gravelly materials or, what is better, shingly waste, such as is often produced by frost action on slaty stones, can be commingled in the proportion of one-half with the clay, a firm road-bed can commonly be secured, provided the road is well ditched. This commingled gravel or other solid substance must extend at least for a foot below the surface in order to withstand any heavy carriages. In many cases an equally good result can be accomplished by covering the surface with repeated coatings of any shrubby vegetable matter. In northern Minnesota I have seen the material known as "excelsior," i.e., strip-like shavings, cut by machinery from blocks of wood, serve admirably to prevent the motion of the clay, and I am of the opinion that it would, in clay countries where stone cannot readily be obtained, but where timber is plenty, be an admirable device to have a machine for making excelsior to be used as a road material. On the surface such woody matter rapidly decays, but when worked by the wheels into the clay it may last for several seasons. At no great cost the material might be saturated with creosote, and thus rendered much more resisting to decay. The finest branches of trees, the leaves of pines, even rushes, may serve the need, if they can be cheaply applied.—From "The Common Roads," by Professor N. S. Shaler, in October Scribner.

THE PROPER TIME TO FELL TREES.

A correspondent of the Germantown Telegraph, writing from Arkansas, discusses the question as to the proper time to deaden trees, to prolong their durability, in the following manner:

Thirty-one years ago, I was engaged in clearing up a large plantation, and building houses, stables, etc., with logs cut from the woods. I soon discovered that there was a difference in the lasting of different trees of the same kind. I also noticed that, in killing the trees to clear the land, some trees would decay much earlier than others; and that trees girdled in the early spring, just before the budding of the leaf, would rot off at the place where the tree was girdled, and that trees girdled in August would soon decay in the sap, wood and bark, but that the heart would remain sound for years. The conclusion I came to was, that the presence of sap in wood caused it to decay, and that the sap left the body of the tree during the time it was making leaves, new sap, wood and bark; and thus at the fall of the leaf the sap went into the heart, or body of the tree.

A Western New York farmer is reported to have painted and put up in a conspicuous place on his poultry-house a large sign bearing the inscription: "Eggs, fifty cents a dozen." He explains his large price by saying that it is done "to encourage the hens." It is said that a prominent poultry merchant in Atlanta, Ga., has adopted the following plan of determining the price of his chickens. He has four coops. In them he has a half-inch, a one-inch, an inch and one-half, and a two-inch augur-hole. All the chickens he can squeeze through the first, he sells for ten cents; through the second, fifteen cents; the third, twenty cents; and the fourth, twenty-five cents. He is making money.

The farmers of Hunterdon and Somerset counties, New Jersey, use goats to protect their sheep from dogs. Two goats can drive away a dozen dogs, and two are about all each farmer puts in with his sheep. As soon as a dog enters the field at night, the goats attack him, and their butting propensities are too much for the canine, who soon finds himself rolling over and over. A few repetitions of this treatment causes the dog to quit the field, limping and yelling. Formerly, when a dog entered a sheep field at night, the sheep would run wildly around and cry piteously. Since the goats have been used to guard them, they form in line behind the goats and seem to enjoy the fun. The idea of utilizing goats in this way came from the West, where they are put in sheep pens to drive away wolves.—N. Y. Sun.

If any one will cut a green tree after the fall of the leaf, and put one end in a hot fire, he will soon see sap ooze out of the whole stick, even in the middle: but cut a stick after full leaf, and the sap will run out near the bark. All timber that lasts well has but little sap at any time; all timber that decays easily has a great deal of sap, such, for instance, as the sugar maple, elder and sycamore. All carpenters have seen large timbers that were perfectly rotten in the middle, while the outside was apparently sound. This decay must have been caused by the presence of something besides heat and moisture. As the outside was sound, while the inside was decayed, this must have been sap, and nothing else.

CATARRH CURED.

A clergyman, after years of suffering from that loathsome disease, Catarrh, and vainly trying every known remedy, at last found a prescription which completely cured and saved him from death. Any sufferer from this dreadful disease sending a self-addressed stamped envelope to Prof. J. A. Lawrence, 88 Warren St., New York, will receive the recipe free of charge.

The Best Remedy Taken in Season,

FOR Sore Eyes, Cancerous Humors, Prurigo, and other manifestations of depraved blood, is Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Used persistently, according to directions, it effectually eradicates all traces of disease, and restores the sufferer to a sound and healthy condition.

"I hereby certify that I have used Ayer's Sarsaparilla, with excellent success, for a cancerous humor, or, as it seemed to be, cancer on my lip. Shortly after using this remedy the sore healed. I believe that the disease is entirely cured, and consider Ayer's Sarsaparilla to be an infallible remedy for all kinds of eruptions caused by impure blood."—Charles G. Ernberg, Vasa, Minn.

"For years my blood was in an unhealthy condition. After having tried other medicines without success, I have lately taken Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and with the best results. I think this medicine is the only blood-purifier that can be absolutely relied upon."—Mrs. Oliver Valentine, 144 Quincy st., Brooklyn, New York.

"A neighbor of ours who was rendered nearly blind from scrofula, was entirely cured by using three bottles of Ayer's Sarsaparilla."—Stephens & Best, Druggists, Ball Play, Tenn.

"For several years afflicted with disorders of the blood, I have received more benefit from the use of sarsaparilla than from all other medicines."—B. Rice, 140 Endicott st., Boston, Mass.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

Made by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla arrests blood-poisoning before it pervades the system. Don't delay till the forces of nature are exhausted and there is nothing to work on. Begin at once the use of this medicine, and be sure you take no other to counteract its effects.

"Ayer's Sarsaparilla cured me of a bad case of blood-poisoning and restored me to health. My system was saturated with a poison which all ordinary remedies failed to reach, but Ayer's Sarsaparilla did the work completely. This was twenty-one years ago, and no symptoms of the disease have since appeared. I have recommended this wonderful medicine to hundreds of people, similarly afflicted, and always with the most satisfactory results."—A. H. Christy, Bourbon, Ind.

"For many years I was troubled with scrofulous complaints. Hearing Ayer's Sarsaparilla very highly recommended, I decided to try it, and have done so with the most gratifying effects. I am convinced that Ayer's Sarsaparilla is the best possible blood-medicine."—John W. Starr, Laconia, Ind.

Bishop Keane and other officials of the new Catholic university called on President Harrison Tuesday and invited him to be present at the dedication and opening Nov. 13 next, the President answering that he would certainly attend, if possible.

In an address before the Boys and Girls' National Home Association Mr. Alexander Hogeland, president of the association, made the startling statement that there were 60,000 boy tramps in the United States. He advocated the establishment of a registration system by which boy tramps might be found and sent to farmers who were willing to employ them.

CHICAGO.

Col. Sexton, postmaster, has asked the P. O. department for 416 new men. The commission sent to examine the grounds for this extravagant demand has just recommended the allowance of 115 additional carriers and eighty two new clerks and collectors.

A mass-meeting to agitate the Sunday-closing question was held under the auspices of the Gospel Temperance League at the Sixth Presbyterian church Thursday evening. Mayor Cregier was severely criticised by the speakers for laxity in enforcing the existing laws.

The public library of Chicago has been awarded a gold medal by the jury on instruction and education at the Paris Exposition. From the list of awards it appears that this library was the only one in the United States honored.

The whisky trust, which has been in session for several days at the Grand Pacific hotel, is now engaged in a desperate struggle for the complete control of the market, the outcome of which is to determine whether it is eventually to prove a success or a failure. A number of distillers would not join the trust and have profited by their independence.

The most successful season ever held by the Inter-State Exposition closed Saturday. There was an average daily attendance of 8,000.

The American Horse Show Association at the Exposition Building, which opens Oct. 30, promises to be the largest collection of noted horses ever known in the world.

The delegates to the Pan-American Congress were informally received in Chicago Saturday evening, the mayor making a welcoming speech at the Grand Pacific. Sunday they visited the Armour mission, the auditorium of which was crowded to suffocation, and drove to Lincoln Park.

The Illinois State Board of Agriculture is arranging a program of special attractions for the fat stock show to be held in the Exposition Building, Chicago, Nov. 12 to 21, which promises to be novel and entertaining.

COUNTRY.

Governor Humphrey of Kansas has received a message from Paris that the volume of the Kansas Agricultural Report had been awarded a gold medal at the Paris Exhibition.

A drought in Southern Minnesota is seriously inconveniencing farmers, many of whom, should rain not speedily fall, will be forced to sell their stock.

A remarkable convention of women was held in Denver, Col., last week, beginning Wednesday, Oct. 9, and adjourning Thursday evening. It was the seventeenth annual congress of the Association for the Advancement of Women.

J. M. Knight of Galena, Ill., sold a pearl Thursday, which he recently found in a clam taken from the river, for $650.

At Murray City, Ohio, Tuesday night, so-called respectable citizens burned the house of George Washington, a colored man, because no blacks were wanted in the town.

The preferred stockholders of the Northern Pacific on Thursday at New York voted on and approved "the Villard plan," authorizing the issue of $160,000,000 new 5 per cent bonds, payable 100 years hence.

It is announced that on January 1, 1890, every street, park, and public building in St. Louis will be illuminated by arc and incandescent lights; households will be connected with the public-service wires as gas mains are now tapped; electrical stoves have already been introduced and will soon be commoner than gas stoves. Two street car-lines are now being operated by electricity and four more will be within a year. By the use of storage batteries private residences are illuminated for a single night on festal occasions.

The most appalling accident ever known on the inclined plane railways of Cincinnati happened Tuesday between 12 and 1 o'clock. It was on the Mount Auburn inclined plane which lies at the head of Main street, and reaches to a height of between 250 and 300 feet. Two cars are employed, one on each track. They are drawn by two steel wire cables that are wound upon a drum at the top of the hill by an engine located there. A small bit of iron prevented stopping the engine. The cable gave way and a car at the top dashed down the hill and was totally wrecked by striking the "bumpers" at the bottom. Of the nine passengers on board, two were killed instantly, another died in a few minutes, and five others were fatally injured. One man miraculously escaped.

A dog on a farm near Battle Creek, Mich., Wednesday, set fire to some burrs which were sticking in the hair on his tail, and then ran into a wheat stack, setting it on fire, and causing a loss of $8,000.

About fifty people were injured at Gibson, near Omaha, Wednesday by the collision on the Burlington and Missouri track. Two engines, a chair car, and a combination car were demolished. Peter Reuland, proprietor of the Tremont house in Omaha, died of his injuries soon after the wreck. The combination coach and the chair car were both crowded with passengers, all of whom were more or less injured.

Reports from Princeton, Minn., say that forest fires between that place and Bridgman are destroying thousands of dollars' worth of property. At Greenbush Mrs. Hiram Whittier, while helping to fight the fire, fell exhausted and was burned to death.

Diphtheria in its worst form is playing havoc with the lives of the children at Gallitzin, Pa. During the last two weeks the average number of deaths has been from three to four per day, and the doctors report at least fifty patients down with the disease. Four families, who had six or seven little ones each one month ago, are now childless. A committee has been appointed by the council to investigate all cellars, and to inspect the drainage system in order to discover the cause of the epidemic.

FOREIGN.

The Sultan has ordered three imperial yachts to meet Emperor William upon his arrival at the entrance to the Straits of the Dardanelles, and to escort him to Constantinople.

A terrible explosion occurred in the Bentley colliery at Longton, England, Wednesday. At least seventy men were in the pit at the time. The latest estimate says that sixty lives were lost. Fifty bodies have been recovered. The remains showed that the victims had died of gas poisoning.

The North German Gazette says it is not unlikely that Germany will refuse to recognize Mataafa as King of Samoa, and that it must be assumed that the other powers, parties to the Samoan treaty, have similarly expressed themselves, because at the conference recently held in Berlin all the representatives agreed that Malietoa should be king.

The Paris Temps, in a resume of the financial results of the exposition, says that before the close the number of people who will have visited the great show will reach 26,000,000, and will in all probability exceed that figure.

Now that Kansas, Iowa and the Dakotas have declared against the drink traffic, the State of Nebraska is surrounded and must surrender and lay down her high license arms. A movement is begun to organize these prohibitory States into an alliance offensive and defensive, with a special object to help the sister State, yet floundering in the saloon mire, out of her trouble. The five will then form an impregnable phalanx under the white banner, a Cold Water Empire which shall extend its beneficent conquests on every side until the Rum curse shall be trampled to death.

It is announced that a premium of $200 is to be given to the student of McCormick Theological Seminary of this city, who shall, on completing his course, show the greatest familiarity with the English Bible. This is so unusual an inducement for Presbyterians to study the Word of God that it is worth notice. It is to be hoped that after the prize-winner has got his money, he will have become so in love with the Bible that he will begin anew and study from a higher motive. If a young Christian, studying for the ministry, needs a $200 inducement to help him obey the words of the Lord Jesus, "Search the Scriptures," he would do well to consider whether he ought to preach or go to banking.

A colored State Fair was opened at Raleigh, North Carolina, last week. Gov. Fowle made an address, and took occasion to twit our Chicago colored citizens because they have named a day of fasting and prayer for their Southern brethren. In Chicago, said the speaker, the Negroes do not "enjoy the same attributes of freedom as North Carolina Negroes—they do not even see the inside of a jury box." That may mean one of several things. We are happy to remark that the colored citizens of Chicago seldom have need to be on a jury or before it. But what has become of the white man's State Fair in North Carolina? Is there none, or is it exclusive? And can Governor Fowle explain why the "best citizens" in some counties of Louisiana are organizing and arming to protect the Negro laborers from the Ku-Klux fiends that are night-raiding and shooting as they did in 1868? The whole nation ought to be called to fasting and prayer over the condition of some parts of the South.

General Alger, chief of the G. A. R., made an important visit to Chicago last week, and 1892 assumed a new importance which all the world's fairs in a century could not give. It is very frankly admitted (or openly charged) that a Presidential boom is gathering impetus. Alger has asked the different State meetings of his order to convene at such times that he can visit them all. They have agreed, and this is a great stroke of policy for the promoters of the Alger interest. But by the time the Michigan gentleman wants votes, we hope that secret society influence will be at a heavy discount in American politics.

REV. JOSEPH E. ROY, D. D.

There are two principles which are beginning to be recognized as necessary to success in any general attempt to reach the multitude with Christian influence. The first of them is personal contact. All personal service cannot be commuted for a money consideration. We are too willing to do our Christian work by substitute. We give our money and send the missionary and the minister. The "masses" will not be reached until we give our very selves to seeking them—man by man. The second principle is that of co-operation. Without it there cannot be an economy of time and effort, nor can the work be thorough. With it effort becomes manifestly disinterested, and, therefore, more effective, and there is added the strength which comes from organization. These are the principles which the Evangelical Alliance is helping the churches to apply, and the efforts of the secretary, Rev. Dr. Strong, are having a most encouraging success.

However Protestants may voice their fears of Jesuit aggression and intrigue, they are unlikely to use too vigorous language when the leading Romanist papers, like the Catholic Review, can speak of the patrons of the American public school and of the school fund in such terms as these: "Catholics will not make war on the public school, because they believe in admitting the state to a limited share in educating the children; because they know that half the millions of America are pagans who desire a pagan training for their children; and because they are certain that the public schools, in their present state, are suitable for these people. Believing that the state should take an interest in education, but knowing that the state school, admirably suited for pagans, is not the school for Catholic or Protestant children, they are bound to build up a Catholic branch of the public school system, where children will be educated as Catholics at the expense of the state." See first page editorial in Catholic Review of Oct. 19th, 1889.

Cornell and Harvard are having an experience that recalls the first crossing of the equator by a new sailor. In both these wealthy, popular and crowded institutions a colored student has been chosen as class orator. At Harvard, a majority of one in a vote of 250, selected after a prolonged contest a young man named Morgan, the son of a slave, who has worked his way as barber, waiter and lecturer. He won a prize for oratory last year. At Cornell the young colored man showed that he was as honorable as his class-mates believed him to be able, by refusing the position because of some slight irregularity in the proceedings.

Governor Wolfrey of Arizona startles us with the fact that there are 8,000 Mormons in that Territory, which is in no small danger of being over run by polygamists and made an annex of Utah. He says: "Politically the Mormons seem to have adopted the plan of sending colonies or 'stakes' to the surrounding Territories in sufficient numbers to form a balance of power between the two political parties. They are willing to trade with either, but remain true only so long as the interests of the church are best served. The church is their law, and all other law is subservient to the orders of the church." One of the first duties of our next Congress, after taking measures to suppress the Clan-na-Gael and all other secret lodges, is to stop the importation of foreign Mormons. Missionaries by the hundred are said to be in Europe sending over cargo after cargo of ignorance and superstition to be offered to the Mormon Moloch of lust. The efforts of these men are especially successful in Norway and Sweden. Cannot this business be stopped?

UNCLE JOE'S PRAYER.

RELATED TO THE KANSAS PRESBYTERIAN SYNOD.

BY REV. J. D. GEHRING.

In his great speech in Lawrence, Kansas, on the Race Problem of our Republic, by Dr. Allen of New York, two incidents related by him made a deep impression upon his vast audience. I will relate them in substance as I remember them.

He stood upon a battle-field of the late war during a re-union of the "Blue" and "Grey" not long since. A group were discussing the scenes and incidents of the fight. Valor displayed on the field on both sides was mentioned with praise. Some colored troops were also in the fray. A regiment of the latter was ordered to the charge. They responded with shouts, and moved forward without a sign of hesitation. The Confederates occupied a commanding, elevated position. They could rake the ground in every direction. The attacking party must advance up the steep hill under this raking fire. They concentrated their fire upon the detachment of Negro troops, intending and expecting to annihilate them as they advanced.

"How we did slaughter them!" said one of the group. "They just tumbled over each other like rabbits in a thicket, and many went rolling down to the foot of the hill."

"That was awful," said Dr. Allen to him; "but didn't they keep on all the same?"

"Oh, yes!" was the answer, "they came right on, the black fools; they didn't seem to know any better; but we kept on firing, too, and we killed them by scores."

"Yes," said the Doctor, "I don't doubt that; but did any of them keep on till they reached the top?"

"Well, yes," was the reply, "a few of them did get up to us,"—and there he stopped.

"And then," said the unmerciful questioner, "what did you do?"

"We had to get out of the way."

And so they did, as the history of that battle shows. They ran and rolled and tumbled down the other side of the hill much faster than the dusky forms came up on the other, and the day was won for the Union.

We know of one or two occasions when regiments, whole regiments of white soldiers, turned and fled from before the firmly advancing foe. Does any one know of a "colored regiment" doing the same under any circumstances? The black man will fight, and don't you forget it. Let us, then, keep him on the right side, and right side up.

"My father was a slave-holder," said Dr. Allen; "my grandfather was a slaveholder, and I, a Kentuckian by birth, was a slave-holder by birth and education. I know the black man thoroughly, and knowing him as I do, I can say there is not on the face of the whole earth a race of people so easily moulded by religious influences. They have noble traits as a race, and they are fast making history of which they need not be ashamed. Our home missionaries have often suffered indignities at the hands of those to whom they came to minister. Our foreign missionaries have been cruelly murdered, imprisoned, tortured, deprived of home and property, and forbidden under penalty of death to teach or preach, in many foreign lands; but here we have a race of people, after having been kept under cruel bondage for over 250 years, who are to-day stretching out eager hands for the spelling-book and the Bible. Not one teacher has yet been refused access to them; not one preacher of the Gospel has been treated with anything but the most sincere respect by them.

"In all my experience in the South among the freed slaves and their children, I have yet to find the first black man, or woman, or child to scoff at me or to threaten me, or to refuse to hear me because I came to them with the doctrine of depravity and of the atonement. No!" said the Doctor, "that is left to the white, educated, refined infidel to do. The black man of the South is not an infidel or a skeptic, or a sneering scoffer, unless made so by the insidious influence of the white man."

Continuing, Dr. Allen said in substance: When I was a little boy my father owned an old slave, whom we all called "Uncle Joe." I never knew him otherwise than as a white-headed old man. He was a trusted house-servant in my father's family. He was an intensely spiritual Christian. At family worship we always placed him a chair near father's right hand, and often he would be asked to lead in prayer. It seems I can hear his trembling voice yet praising God for mercies, and pleading for pardon and blessings upon us all. He was touchingly eloquent in prayer, and I have often wondered where he could have learned the beautiful, impressive and apt language he used. One day, coming home rather late in the evening from a visit to a neighboring plantation, as I came near one of the Negro cabins on our place, I heard in the tall weeds along the woodside a noise as of several persons talking loudly as if quarreling. I approached nearer and stopped to listen. Soon I heard the voice of old Uncle Joe engaged in earnest supplication and prayer. He prayed for his race and for the white race. "O Lord!" he said, "bress de con crap and de cotton fiel. Bress de folks at de mansion, de missus and good ole massah; and O Lord! bress ole massah little boys."

As I was one of "massah's little boys," I was personally interested in this petition. But I did not wait to hear the end of that prayer. I went on to the house, but the echo of that petition followed me. It sounded in my ears by day and when I awoke from sleep at night, and it will follow me through life. Has God answered that prayer? Look at me. Why do I—a slaveholder's son—stand before you to-night pleading for the old slave's race?

Uncle Joe died while I was yet a lad. I well remember going with my father over to his little cabin where he lay upon his humble couch, with happy upturned face, waiting for the final call of the Master on high. My father read to him at his own request a part of the 14th chapter of John's Gospel. After the reading of a few verses the old slave said: "That will do, massah. I can lay dis pore ole head on dat pillow and die happy." I well remember how we all mourned when Uncle Joe died, and how my young heart wept when they laid him in the grave. And, my friends, when I get to heaven I shall seek dear Uncle Joe; and if I find him—for he is surely there—I shall thank him for his prayer for "ole massah's little boys."

CATECHISM OF ODD-FELLOWSHIP.

BY REV. H. H. HINMAN.

What is Odd-fellowship?

It is a secret society organized for social and professedly benevolent purposes and having as its most conspicuous motto three links, representing "friendship, love and truth."

When and where did it originate?

In Manchester, England, about 1812; in this country in Baltimore, Maryland, in 1819.

Has no greater age been claimed for the order?

Yes. Adam has been claimed as its founder, and he is pictured as laying its corner-stone.

What was the character of the first lodges?

They were mainly for convivial purposes and represented a low order of morals.

Has there been any change?

Yes. The order is now semi-religious, social and in part military, and its professed benevolence has become a subordinate consideration.

From what is Odd-fellowship patterned?

Like Freemasonry, it is largely copied from the Ancient Mysteries, the secret worship of the pagan gods, and some of its symbols are taken from the Jewish Scriptures.

Does it profess to be a religion?

It does not, and yet it has temples, altars, priests, prayers, and teaches and inculcates a religious worship.

What is the nature of this worship?

It is that which Christians, Jews, Mohammedans are supposed to agree and are expected to unite.

What does Odd-fellowship teach about God?

That he is the creator and preserver of the universe.

What about Christ?

Nothing.

What about the Holy Spirit?

Nothing.

What about the new birth?

Its most distinguished advocate claims that "what the new birth is to religion, initiation is to Odd-fellowship."

In what respect are the new birth and initiation alike?

Initiation into Odd-fellowship commences in darkness and chains. The candidate is brought to a representative of death and receives a moral lecture. He is then brought to light and instructed in mysteries. The Christian has been redeemed from the bondage of sin and the darkness of unbelief, and comes to know Christ as a personal Saviour. He is a new creature.

What is the difference between the two?

Odd-fellowship is the caricature of Christianity. It is practically a false religion.

Does the worship of Odd-fellowship recognize Christ?

In the forms of prayer provided for lodge use there is no mention of Christ.

Are no other forms used?

There may be, but must be "the same in spirit."

What does Christianity teach about union with unbelievers in religious worship?

"Be not unequally yoked together with unbelievers." "Come out from among them and be separate."

What about such forms of prayer?

"I am the Way, the Truth and the Life. No man cometh unto the Father but by me." "He that honoreth not the Son honoreth not the Father."

What about our acts of beneficence?

"Whatsoever ye do in word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus." "Whosoever shall give a cup of cold water only because ye belong to Christ, shall not lose his reward."

Can Odd-fellowship teach men real friendship, love and truth?

No; for such friendship is the friendship of the world which "is enmity to God." Love is of God, and he that loveth is born of God. Christ is the Truth, and no system that ignores him can teach the truth concerning man's well being.

Who can be made Odd-fellows?

Free white males of twenty-one years of age, of good reputation and in sound health.

What further condition?

The ceremonies of initiation and the payment of dues.

Who are excluded?

All over 45 and under 21, all females, all Africans, Asiatics, and those of the mixed races, and all maimed, blind or diseased.

How does this differ from Christianity?

In Christianity "there is neither Jew nor Greek, barbarian, Scythian, bond nor free, but Christ is all and in all."

Is Odd-fellowship benevolent?

No. It excludes from its membership every object of benevolence. It pays back to its members in relief about one-third of what they have paid in, and not even this unless they are "financial."

What is Christian benevolence?

"As ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even so to them." "Do good, and lend, hoping for nothing."

What is the present cost of Odd-fellowship?

In money about $7,000,000 per year, to which may be added cost in time, regalia, and other expenses.

For this outlay what does it pay back in the way of the relief of the distressed?

According to last reports about $1,500,000 per annum.

REBEKAH DEGREE.

What is the so-called female Odd-fellowship?

It was instituted in 1851 by Schuyler Colfax and others, for the benefit of the wives of the fifth degree Odd-fellows and widows of such members.

Is it any part of Odd-fellowship?

It is not; for no woman can be made an Odd-fellow.

Is it made up of and governed by women?

No; it is governed by men, and ladies lose their standing in the degree if their husbands cease to have standing in their lodges.

What is its object?

To reconcile women to the life-long secrecy of their husbands, by inducing them to take a similar pledge.

What is there immoral in this degree?

It requires a pledge of perpetual and irrevocable secrecy of things that are to be made known, and which may be immoral. It binds the wife to help maintain the lodge standing of her husband and to endorse the whole system of Odd-fellowship from which she herself is excluded.

PATRIARCHS MILITANT.

What other form of Odd-fellowship has been recently instituted?

The Patriarchs Militant, or the military degrees.

Who are eligible to these degrees?

All who have good standing in the Royal Purple degree.

What is their object?

Military organization and perfection in military drill.

Is such an organization consistent with a free government?

Military organizations that are not subject to the inspection and control of the civil authorities are not consistent with a free government. For, though a civil government may continue to exist, such military power is its perpetual menace. All military power ought to be subject to civil authority.

What about government control?

Odd-fellowship in all its forms denies government inspection and control.

When, if at all, are such organizations justifiable?

Military organizations and usages are justifiable only on the ground that they are necessary for public defense. Otherwise they are in plain violation of the precepts of Christianity.

Can this plea be made for this order?

No.

What special immorality in the obligation of a Patriarch Militant?

That he will "promptly and cheerfully obey the commands of his superior officers."

Why is this wrong?

Such promises are positively wrong because the promise is made in ignorance of what is required, and there is no reservation of any rights of conscience. Such promises being inherent in the military system, this system is inherently wrong, unless (possibly) when organized for public defence.

HECKETHORNE ON MODERN KNIGHT TEMPLARS.

BY MISS E. E. FLAGG.

Heckethorne's "History of Secret Societies," an English work of great learning and research, devotes a chapter to the Knight Templar Masons from which the following interesting passages have been copied:

"ORIGIN. We read that several lords of the Court of Louis XIV., including the Duke de Gramont, the Marquis of Biran, and Count Tallard, formed a secret society whose object was pleasure. The society increased. Louis XIV. having been made acquainted with its statutes, banished the members of the order, whose denomination was, 'A Slight Resurrection of the Templars.'

"In 1705, Phillip, Duke of Orleans, collected the remaining members of the society, which had renounced its first scope to cultivate politics. A Jesuit father, Bonanni, a learned rogue, fabricated the famous list of suppositious Grand Masters of the Temple since Molay, beginning with his immediate successor, Tarmenius. No imposture was ever sustained with greater sagacity. The document offered all the requisite characteristics of authenticity and was calculated to deceive the most experienced palaeologist. The object was to connect the new institution with the ancient Templars. To render the deception more perfect the volume containing the false list was filled with minutes of deliberations at fictitious meetings under false dates. Two members were even sent to Lisbon, to obtain if possible a document of legitimacy from the 'Knights of Christ,' an order supposed to have been founded on the ruins of the order of the Temple. But the deputies were unmasked and very badly received; one had to take refuge in England, the other was transported to Africa where he died.

"REVIVAL OF THE ORDER. But the society was not discouraged; it grew and was probably the same that concealed itself before the outbreak of the Revolution under the vulgar name of the Society of the Bull's Head, and whose members were dispersed in 1792. At that period the Duke of Cosse-Brissac was Grand Master. When on his way to Versailles, with other prisoners, there to undergo their trial, and Ledru, his physician, obtained possession of the charter of Tarmenius, and the MS statutes of 1705, these documents suggested to him the idea of reviving the order; Fabre-Palapat, a Freemason, was chosen Grand Master. Every effort was made to create a belief in the genuineness of the order. The brothers Fabre, Arnal, and Leblond hunted up relics. The shops of antiquaries supplied the sword, mitre and helmet of Molay, and the faithful were shown his bones withdrawn from the funeral pile on which he had been burned. As in the middle ages, the society exacted that aspirants should be of noble birth; such as were not were ennobled by the society. Fourteen honest citizens of Troyes on one occasion received patents of nobility and convincing coat of arms. The society was at first Catholic, apostolic, Roman, and rejected Protestants."

The ceremonies of initiation which follow are substantially the same as in Bernard's "Light on Masonry." Heckethorne adds one ridiculous ceremony, however, as forming the concluding part of the proceedings in some of the English encampments. "One of the equerries, dressed as a cook with a white night cap and apron and a large kitchen knife in his hand, suddenly rushes in, and, kneeling on one knee before the new Sir Knight, says, 'Sir Knight, I admonish you to be just, honorable and faithful to the order, or I, the cook, will hack your spurs from off your heels with my kitchen knife.' He then retires."

Our author adds that "the spurs are sometimes hacked off by another personage, namely the Commissioner in Bankruptcy. Some few years ago an unfortunate encampment pitched in Bedford Row, London. Though the Knights, no doubt, were very brave against Turks, infidels and all that sort of gentry, they could not face their creditors, who thereupon compelled the order to make its last stand in Basinghall street—rather an inglorious end; but as one of the counsel observed, the Sir Knights were probably all away in the Holy Land fighting for the recovery of the Holy Sepulchre, and so their affairs at home fell slightly into disorder."

This interesting work is entitled, "The Secret Societies of all Ages and Countries," by Charles William Heckethorne, and is published in London by Richard Bentley and Son, 1875.

A SOUTHERN OPINION.

[From the New Orleans Christian Advocate.]

We heard a spirited discussion recently in a colored conference on the adoption of a resolution discouraging membership in secret societies. A few days thereafter, while meditating upon the points made by the colored brethren, a prominent layman of the Baptist church unexpectedly propounded this question: "Have you considered the effect of secret organizations upon the work of the churches?" We told him of the debate above alluded to, and of the reverie from which his inquiry aroused us. Then the matter was discussed in all its varied phases and bearings. Having been a popular and distinguished grand officer in one of the bodies, we listened with special and profound interest to his matured convictions on the subject. He said that as he became more identified with and active in church work, the less interest he had in these benevolent orders. Though moral and eleemosynary, they were not distinctively and positively Christian. Speaking from the inside, we gave heed to his opinions.

Without intending to inveigh against the purposes or principles of any such order, we propose to give some of the conclusions reached from our observations and reflections upon the general subject.

Every organization outside of the church that proposes to do her proper work weakens and cheapens the church's mission and authority. In and through the church all practical religion should find expression. Her field is sufficiently large and comprehensive to command every unwearied energy of all our ransomed powers. The church suffers when her mission is relegated to another person or organization. If Christian men dispense the charity through the agency that should be disbursed by their church, they discount the church and put a premium upon the brotherhood. They say, in effect, that the society is a better expression of brotherly kindness and charity than the church of God. That it hears a cry of want with a readier ear, and dispenses relief with a more liberal and discriminative hand. True, the mission of the church is not limited to mere temporal and physical benevolence. She is to care for the soul—to seek and to save the lost. But in so far as she is commissioned to care for the widow and the fatherless, to feed the hungry and clothe the naked, and this service is rendered through any other organization, she is wounded in the house of her friends. Men will turn elsewhere for that comfort and sympathy they supposed was resident in the church of the living God.

Nor less deleterious is the effect upon individual church members. They are the rare exceptions who are active and faithful alike in both the church and the secret society. As a rule, those who never fail to attend a monthly meeting of the brotherhood never fail to be conspicuously absent from the weekly prayer meeting. They pay their dues punctually and freely to the lodge, but slowly and sparingly to the church. This cannot be practiced without weakening the church tie, and doing one's self spiritual hurt. If Christ will not occupy a divided throne, neither will his Bride, the church, be satisfied with a partial and secondary love. The church is not an after thought, to be entertained or not at will, but the spiritual mother of us all, demanding at once our reverence and service. First of all, and above all, should we prize membership in the body of Christ. No obligations should be so binding, no vows so solemn and exacting, no love so tender and confiding.

We further state that these additional, though not antagonistic, organizations interrupt the development of a distinctive church life. A man will visit a brother in affliction in his character as a member of the fraternity. In distress he assists as a brother craftsman. But when and where does he render a like service in his distinctive character as a fellow Christian and brother member in the church? It is difficult to indoctrinate the people into the idea and duty of ministering to each other as Christians and as Methodists. And so long as such fraternal spirit is diverted into other channels, we may expect the church tie to be a frail, attenuated thread, invisible and almost unrecognizable. The church should be the great disbursing agency for all Christian benevolence. A gentleman was solicited for a contribution to a town charity. He refused by saying that he gave to that object the day before in his church meeting, and the deacons were instructed to disburse it to the most needy. That was the wiser course.

The above are general principles that must be applied by each individual conscience. We do not antagonize the great benevolent orders of the world. Their principles and purposes may be the most wholesome and praiseworthy. Their good deeds are known and read of all men. But they can neither substitute, complement nor supplement the church. They may teach morality, but not Christianity. The purpose of this article is to arrest a tendency, which may be incidental to these orders—the tendency to make the church and her work secondary and subsidiary.

The characteristic of our times is a rage for organizations. They have multiplied, until they are like "leaves in Valambrosa." There are societies for everything, and called by almost every conceivable name. Some one has facetiously said that "we have to get up a society in order to spank a baby." At all events one has been organized to regulate how, and how much, he must be spanked. In the churches they are multiplying with alarming rapidity. Too many of these tend to distract, disorganize and deconnectionalize church life. We are jealous for the honor and authority of the Bride of Christ, hence these words of caution.

ODD-FELLOW PRAYERS.

We know that by sufferance chaplains have prayed in the lodge in the name of Christ. We know also that chaplains have been assailed by Jews for praying in Odd-fellow lodges in Christ's name. Rev. Bartholomew, of the Lutheran church of Lima, Ohio, told us that he prayed in the lodge in Christ's name and that when through, a Jew rose up and entered his objection. But we said: "Their rules require the worshiper to engage in a Christless prayer." We will give the evidence from two standard works of Odd-fellowship. Donaldson says in his manual of Odd-fellowship: "It is the duty of the chaplain to offer prayer in the lodge, using none other than the prescribed forms." A. B. Grosh, in his Odd-fellows Improved Manual, says of the duties of chaplains, page 220: "DUTIES—To open and close the lodge with the appointed prayers." What is meant by "the prescribed forms" and "the appointed prayers?" For all occasions Odd-fellowship has its printed forms of prayer. Some of these may be found in their esoteric works, and others in their exoteric works. We have examined both, and we do not find the name of Jesus used in any of the "prescribed forms" of Odd-fellowship. We cite Grosh's Manual, page 346, 348 and 351 for samples of a uniform exclusion of the name of Christ.—Christian Conservator.

THE BIBLE AS GOOD AS THE SQUARE.

The question at this time is particularly important, and more than any other, involving the stability and perpetuity of Masonry, is this—is it necessary that a Freemason should believe in the divine authority of the Holy Scriptures? Or, stated in another way, does Freemasonry regard the Bible which is upon her altars, and without which no lodge can be opened, as true, as a divinely-inspired book, and its precepts and injunctions obligatory upon us as men and as Masons, and does she so teach?

We would not insult the common sense of community, and especially of those who read the Review, by an effort to identify the book, and deciding what is and what is not Scripture. So far as the question affects the well-being, the good name and usefulness of Masonry, it is not necessary. Those who would reject a portion would reject the whole, for the question is not whether we shall retain Moses or Matthew, Isaiah, David, Paul, or Peter, but whether the book, as a whole or any portion of it, is the product of inspired wisdom and goodness. He that claims a portion of it as divine truth and the rest a fiction, must separate the false from the true. He must detect the error and prove it such by incontestible evidence, else we shall not part with any portion of it. The book is upon our altars. It was there when we first saw the light by which Masons work. It was there when our fathers were initiated, and no man can tell when it was not there. It has been there as long, has as good a right to be there, is equally as necessary, and is just as distinctly recognized as the square, the level or the plumb—or, indeed, any emblem or instrument pertaining to Freemasonry.—Masonic Review.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 25, 1889.

The suppressed Negro vote will no doubt give a coloring to the debates of the next session of Congress.

Congressman Browne of Indiana, who is in Washington, has much to say of national interference with elections. He says that the Congress of the United States has undoubted power to supervise Congressional elections. They are thoroughly national, and perhaps the only really national elections we have. The question as to what shall be done in this connection is full of difficulties. The law, whatever it may be, has to be enforced by State tribunals, and the witnesses and everybody else connected with the case come from the community which is oftentimes in sympathy with the violator of the law. No statute can be enforced where the public does not desire to enforce it.

Mr. Browne directs his fire against the Southern districts, which have small voting on their general elections—the black districts. Congressman Catchings of Mississippi, on the other hand, says that the idea that the Negroes of the South are sitting up nights waiting for a chance to deposit an honest ballot is a mistake. He does not think that fifty per cent of those in the districts that are overwhelmingly one way or the other, have gone to the polls in the last ten years. Negroes will pick cotton within one hundred yards of the polls, and never quit to cast their votes, except such as are paid for going directly, and such bribery is seldom necessary, majorities being so large. The trouble is that the colored people of the South do not read the current literature of the day and have no conception of economic questions. For themselves, they see no direct benefit to be reaped from political life, and they know that it now means simply who shall hold office. There was a time, in the sixties, when they were first freed, when to their minds their salvation depended upon voting the Republican ticket. They were packed about the polls, waiting eagerly to exercise their prerogatives. The lapse of time, peace, security, has brought a feeling of indifference.

Though it rained and blew and snowed here day before yesterday, the meeting of the National Board of Promotion of the proposed exposition in Washington in 1892, was a success. There were more than one hundred men present as delegates. Among them were Governor Biggs of Delaware, Governor Fleming of Florida, and Governor Jackson of Maryland. In his report to the promoters, Secretary Anderson called attention to the fact that there is already here the nucleus of an exposition that has already cost the government over $50,000,000, and every year adds to the expenditure. This is the National Museum, the Capitol, the Patent Office, the Washington Monument and the various government buildings, with their stores of relics and treasures of art, and their exhibits of the practical workings of the government. These are practically an exhibit of themselves. To be sure some of them could be loaned, as they have been in the past, but they could be only a part of all the attractions, and it would be better to keep even these permanently at the seat of government, rather than to further engage in the travelling show business of lugging these goods to expositions all over the country.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

Scotch grit—An old debt paid back—The church and temperance—Rev. H. T. Cheever's "Tracts for the Times"—The report of the Massachusetts Grand Lodge of I. O. O. F.—The Boston Fruit and Flower Mission—Wheat and tares—One of the Old Guard—A secret society man who unwittingly perjured himself—A hopeful sign.

The naturalization process in the ranks of the British-Americans still goes on. Even the officials at the United States Circuit Court are said to be amazed at the numbers which throng the office. The British Citizen gives the case of an old Scotch lady in Boston, 88 years of age, who intends to cast her first vote this fall. But only true Scotch grit would have carried her through the difficulties of the way, for before she could be registered she had to produce her husband's naturalization papers, which, as he had died many years before, could not be found. A diligent search through the books of the District, Circuit and Superior Courts, where it was supposed they might have been recorded, was made in vain. Then the Criminal Court was tried, which formerly did most of the business of naturalizing foreigners, and her perseverance was rewarded by the finding of the desired record. Then a visit to the Circuit Court, some further winding of red tape, and the countrywoman of Robert Bruce went on her way rejoicing.

Though a native of Scotland, she came here from New Brunswick; and it is a curious fact that the British Provinces are now paying back an old debt to New England. Prior to the Revolution when the expulsion of the Acadians had almost depopulated Nova Scotia, a colonization scheme was resorted to to repair the mischief; and from 1760 to 1770 there was quite a large emigration from this section, attracted by the offer of free homesteads. The tide set chiefly to Nova Scotia, which, it is said, still preserves in some of its out-of-the-way districts the New England blood of pre-revolutionary times freer from foreign admixture than any other place except Cape Cod.

The Episcopalians are now very much exercised over certain changes in the prayer-book, as well as certain alterations in their hymnology,—all of which may be important, though to the ordinary lay mind it seems as if time could be better spent than in discussing matters of so small moment, when there is a world of perishing souls to be saved, and a hundred burning questions pressing to the front to be answered. But the tendency among ministers to take a timid and conservative ground was illustrated this week at the meeting at Pilgrim Hall, when a motion to appoint a committee to confer with ministers of other denominations regarding the program for a grand temperance mass meeting to be held next week at Tremont Temple, met with opposition from a few of the members, and was finally reconsidered, as it was feared that the meeting in question might turn out a mere political affair, rather than the discussion of a moral issue.

Ward 1 in Worcester (Republican), which is considered to carry more weight than any other in the city, has scored a victory for temperance, through the action of Rev. H. T. Cheever, who moved that "the nominees, if elected, be instructed to use their utmost endeavors to have carried out the temperance plank in the platform of the Republican party of Massachusetts, and to this end to further instruct their nominees to favor the passage of a law giving suffrage to women on the license question."

The plank was certainly strong enough if there had been any sincere purpose in the managers to step out boldly upon it; for it "declared as a party unqualified hostility to the saloon, insisted that the laws against it should be maintained and enforced, that no backward step should be taken, and that further legislation shall be had whenever and wherever it can secure further suppression of this terrible evil." This action of Worcester Republicans seems to hold out a slight hope that the party may show something besides "leaves, leaves, nothing but leaves," when gleaming time comes. Resolutions, however, are not costly things, and, as Mr. Cheever well puts it in his "Tracts for the Times": "Whether the Republican party will have the courage to throw down the gauntlet of defiance to the liquor saloons, we do not know. If it has, then in undertaking a new battle it will deserve and will receive a new life. If it has not, then goodbye to it, and welcome to the party that has."

There is much true and powerful writing contained in these "Tracts," as witness the following: "To this great end (prohibition) our moral and religious principle, so far from being laid aside at the ballot-box, is to go with and guide us in all our political actions. We have found that politics are corrupt because Christian men have not carried Christian leadership, Christian principles, Christian methods, and Christian usages into them; because they have not infused the saving salt of religion into the pool of politics. Hence its impurity, hence its offensiveness." And if our government disregards the fact that the distilleries and breweries, those potent producers of distilled death and liquid damnation, that are fast passing into the hands of foreign un-American syndicates, are becoming the most perilous political menace to this American Republic, it may waken too late to find the prophecy true that "this self-same liquor traffic, now commanded so largely by foreign capital, and the secret combinations in the land, have in them together the pregnant elements of a possible Reign of Terror, more dreadful than France or any nation has yet known."

The report of the Massachusetts Grand Lodge of I. O. O. F. has just been published, giving the usual ratio, $76,883.51 paid out for relief, from $204,699.55—receipts that amount to more than three times the former sum. The daughters of Rebekah held their ninth annual conference last week with an attendance of about 500. Massachusetts has eighty-three of these back-stairs lodges. Meanwhile the Boston Fruit and Flower Mission report as distributed during the past five months 41,355 bouquets of flowers, with fruit, vegetables and jellies. Besides what were carried to the hospitals and large work-rooms, the diet kitchens and medical dispensaries were furnished with flowers to give with the food and medicine dispensed. But when have the Daughters of Rebekah, or any "ladies' degree," with its fulsome lectures on the tenderness of woman and the nobility of her sphere, ever stood sponsor to any such unpretentious but blessed charity?

The Concord Monitor tells this amusing story of a gentleman of that city, who belongs to a great many secret orders, and sometimes gets them a little mixed. He recently hurried into a Knights of Pythias lodge room, and being late made a sign to the presiding officer; then recollecting himself said in tones sufficiently loud to be heard by every one present, "Oh, that was the Odd-fellow's sign, wasn't it?" What was the penalty for thus giving away the secret of one mystic order to another does not appear; but if any proof is needed that the world is coming slowly round to see the inherent ridiculousness of the lodge system, it may be found in this growing disposition on the part of the newspapers to make light of the secret fraternities. REFORM NEWS.

TO THE FRIENDS OF THE IOWA ASSOCIATION.

The friends at Blanchard, Page county, Iowa, where our annual meeting is to be held on the 6th and 7th of November, will cheerfully provide free entertainment for all who will come.

The Secret Empire still decrees murder, and throttles justice in our courts, and as patriots we should come to the rescue. This not a time to relax our efforts to withstand and remove the secret society system from our land. As Christians we cannot ignore the fact that Satan is plotting, through lodge agency, to undermine our holy Christianity. Already he has seduced and turned away from Christ and his church an alarmingly large per cent of the young men of our land. The arch fiend of hell, the sworn enemy of Christ, has even succeeded in seducing many in the churches into worshipping devils. We are called upon then, as Christians, to rally to the defence of the Gospel. We must restore the landmarks that have been removed by insisting that devil worship is a "mortal sin," which must be confessed and forsaken by those who would receive the atonement.

Do I hear some one ask, Who worship devils in our country? I answer: The votaries of every false worship, are worshipers of devils. The lodge worship is a heathen, Christless worship, and hence those who gather around the lodge altars as really worship devils as do the people in heathen or Mohammedan lands.

With such a mighty network of lodges educating our young men in their heathen and Christless worship, how can we, as the friends of Christ and the lovers of our fellow men, be indifferent! Give no place to the devil by indulging the illusion that the lodge curse is so overshadowed by greater evils that you ought not for the present to give it attention.

Come if you can to our State convention and unitedly plan and labor for the overthrow of this giant evil. Your brother in Christ,
C. F. HAWLEY.

FROM THE GENERAL AGENT.

DEATH OF DONALD KIRKPATRICK.—THE A. B. C. F. M.

SYRACUSE, N. Y., Oct. 19, 1889.

I reached here early this morning from New York to find a hearty welcome at the hospitable home of Bro. M. M. Merrick. A no less cordial greeting at the "sanctum" of the Wesleyan made me feel that I had struck a more genial atmosphere for our reform than that prevalent either at the A. B. C. F. M. in New York, or at the National Council in Worcester.

It was here that I received the first intelligence of the death of our friend, co-worker and brother, Donald Kirkpatrick. In a hasty call upon his brother, the sole survivor of the family, I learned the following facts: Mr. Kirkpatrick was born in Syracuse, where he had remained a citizen until the time of his death, September 19th, at the age of 59 years and 10 days. He was a member and constant attendant of the First Presbyterian church, but owing to the sickness of his pastor at the time, the funeral services were conducted by Rev. Mr. Fanstock of a neighboring church. He had not been feeling well for several days, but his condition was not considered critical until the crisis came. The nurse who was watching by his bed saw him turn suddenly, and looking in his face read the sad story and gave the alarm. But, without uttering a word, in a moment "the spirit returned to God who gave it." The immediate occasion of death was hemorrhage of the stomach.

Thus fell another strong pillar in the anti-lodge cause, almost simultaneously with the departure of our dear brother Capwell to the spirit land; admonishing those who still linger to "watch, for we know not the day or the hour" when we must follow.

At the meeting of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions there was a spirited contest on the election of officers, growing out of the "New Departure" or "Andover Heresy." The point at issue as I understand it was: Shall candidates for the foreign mission fields be subject to examination by the Board as to theological views, or shall the simple endorsement of a Congregationalist church be deemed sufficient? Those holding to "future probation" wanted the church to rule, while the opposite and major part wanted a rigid examination by the Board's committee. The speaking was able and fervent, and the management showed a familiarity with the art of diplomacy. There were many good things well said, but a single sentence from the lips of Joseph Cook struck me with peculiar force. "I do not believe," said he, "that we ought to teach men that it is safe to die in their sins." I was not permitted to leave anti-secrecy literature on the tables or put it in the pews; but on the sidewalk just outside from the rear entrance, where most of the corporate members passed to the platform, I distributed five hundred of "An Age of Lodges." What use will be made of these, or what results will follow, God only can determine. It seemed to be the only thing I could do, and I was gratified in glancing over the field not to find a single copy among the waste.

There was less restriction at the Baptist State Association, which I attended the day previous in Putnam, Conn. Documents were thankfully received, and only one among those with whom I conversed attempted even an apology for the secret orders. One brother said, "I am appalled at the insolence and affrontery of the secret lodges, but I don't see what I can do." Another said, "They are destroying our prayer meetings and undermining the churches in New England." Many were glad to learn of the proposed congress in Boston, and some expressed a purpose to attend. As the editor of the Cynosure was in attendance and will furnish a report of the Worcester Council, I will only say that at this National body, at a large prohibition rally in Mechanic's Hall, and at a Prophetic Conference held in Worcester, 1,200 "Age of Lodges," with tract No. 10 and other anti-lodge documents, were carefully handed out. As no other means of reaching the people could be found this was accepted, in the hope that God would cause some seed to fall on good ground and bring forth fruit in due season. From here I go to Houghton, where I expect to meet the brethren in State Convention.

J. P. STODDARD.

THE OHIO STATE MEETING.

The Ohio Christian Association convened at Senecaville, Oct. 22, at 7 P. M., in a heavy rain and thick darkness. Some who had been expected from abroad were unable to attend, but a good audience assembled in the Wesleyan church and a temporary organization was secured. An address of welcome was then given by the pastor, Rev. Mr. Vestal, after which the speech of the evening was by Rev. S. A. George of Mansfield, Ohio. Appropriate committees were then chosen.

Next morning at 9 o'clock the rain had ceased, and a season of devotion was held of great interest. Officers were elected for the ensuing year and other business transacted. The committee on resolutions submitted the following report, which was adopted:

WHEREAS, The nature and tendency of secret societies has been clearly illustrated in the murder of Dr. P. H. Cronin in Chicago, and in the obstructions placed in the way of the arrest and trial of his supposed murderers, and whereas our State and national capitals have been made the theaters of immense parades in honor of societies whose influence is unrepugnant and anti-Christian, and whose vast military displays give fearful evidence of what might become, if it is not already, a menace to our civil liberties, therefore Resolved, First. That as Christian citizens, we renew our protest against the entire secret lodge system as injurious to public morals, unfavorable to the administration of justice, and especially as tending to supplant Christianity and dishonor its divine Lord.

2. That we extend our warmest sympathy to those Christian bodies that have given a faithful testimony against this system of iniquity, and we kindly, but earnestly, plead with all professed believers who are in connection or complicity with these associations, that they "have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness," but rather reprove them."

3. We urge on all leading and representative men in the various religious denominations, especially editors of religious journals and teachers in theological seminaries, that they carefully examine this subject in the light of God's Word, the standard publications of the orders, and the unquestioned testimony of many witnesses who "speak what they know and declare what they have seen," and we urge the calling of Christian conferences to consider this matter, and to unite in a general consensus in reference to the duty of the church towards the secret lodge system.

4. That all citizens in their choice of civil rulers ought to discriminate in favor of such candidates as are under no special pledges to any secret organization. That they may do this we commend and urge the maintenance of the American Anti-Secrecy League.

5. In view of the numerous evils of intemperance, we regard it as the duty of every citizen to use his most earnest influence to persuade all people to abandon and abstain from the use of all intoxicating drinks, and to insist that their manufacture and sale shall be prohibited by law. To accomplish this we propose open methods, and disapprove of all secret temperance orders.

6. Whereas, the spirit and practice of war are contrary to the precepts of Christianity; and whereas, the security of our nation is in the intelligence, justice and peaceful character of the people rather than in great armaments; therefore, resolved, that we deprecate the increase of our navy and our coast defenses as likely to provoke rather than prevent hostilities, and we demand of our government that it seek to negotiate treaties with other nations for the settlement of all disputes by arbitration or other peaceful methods. We also protest against military instruction and parades in our schools, as tending to promote the spirit of war.

A resolution was passed thanking the people for their generous hospitality and the Wesleyan church for their house of worship.

After a full discussion and some amendments the above were passed, and an able address was then given by Rev. S. A. George on the subject of marriage and divorce.

The afternoon session was mainly occupied in brief addresses, one of which, and not the least interesting, was by Rev. Mr. Keil, a minister of the Lutheran church, over 90 years old. At night a full house listened to a most able address by Rev. J. M. Faris of New Concord, followed by other short speeches.

CORRESPONDENCE.

SOUND THE ALARM!

YORK, Pa.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—I was born and educated at York, York county, Pa. In the year 1851, at the age of fifteen, I entered the hardware store of Anderson and Jessop, corner of Pratt and Light streets, Baltimore, Maryland, to learn the hardware business; and I lived in Baltimore until October, 1861.

During the time I lived in Baltimore I saw all the great preparations that were made to give the Rebellion a good start. I was acquainted with both Unionists and secessionists, having a number of Knights of the Golden Circle within the circle of my friendship. And I knew the Knights were organizing and drilling, at least one year before the United States secret service detectives found out that the order was treasonable. I was an eye-witness of the attack upon the Sixth Massachusetts regiment in Pratt street, and I afterwards served the United States in the Internal Revenue, Pennsylvania Militia, and Navy, witnessing General Sherman's arrival at Savannah, and the burning of the rice fields, etc.

I have never believed that the Jesuits, Freemasons, Knights, etc., of the South surrendered to Gen. Grant in good faith; and that they intended to remain loyal to the Constitution, the Union and the flag of freedom. My firm belief in the treachery and treasonable designs of the Jesuits of the United States has caused me to watch closely all movements of the Roman Catholic church, and particularly all Southern movements relating to the war, reconstruction, etc. And I now feel it to be my duty to sound the alarm for the coming rebellion.

Those who have read the bloody record of the Jesuits in all European countries, and in our late rebellion, ought to be able to understand that there is a bloody conspiracy in progress when Roman Catholic organizations begin to drill in secret and to parade our streets with arms. And the Jesuits must certainly feel much confidence in their plans, to be thus drilling and parading all over the United States.

As the unsuspecting honesty of the average American citizen causes him to be easily outwitted and hoodwinked by sly and cunning Jesuitic conspirators, it may be now too late to prevent the overthrow of our Republic and the establishment of a Roman Catholic monarchical empire, based upon two hundred and fifty secret orders and one million secret army bayonets.

Can we awaken the sleeping Americans and Protestants, by quickly extending the circulation of the Cynosure, and the extensive circulation of alarming tracts; or, is our doom closely at hand? If we have any hopes, we certainly have no time to spare.
EDWARD J. CHALFANT.

THE FRIENDSHIP OF PILATE AND HEROD.

TOPEKA, Kans.

Freemasonry is fortified in every city and considerable town in this State, and like a devil-fish sends its arms out in every direction in the form of Odd-fellowship, K. of P., G. A. R., and every other conceivable secret order, by which it is sucking the vitality out of church and state, filling its coffers and favoring the members of all secret orders to the detriment of those outside.

One man (and God only knows how many more) applied as a stone-worker at the Capitol building for work, and couldn't get it unless he would join a workmen's secret society. He went to a private place and worked for fifty cents a day less. Another man, a carpenter, could not get work of any consequence without uniting with a secret order. These men are under mortgage, and one of them has lost all he has by mortgage, and a family on his hands. A Methodist minister, the other day, said of secret societies, "The cities are swarming with them, and the churches are full of them, and there is no telling what the end will be."

The end will be what it is with the U. B. church,—families divided, husband and wife arrayed against each other in bitterness and persecution by one or the other. Alienation between husband and wife, and children, and friends, and neighbors; the church distracted, brethren arrayed against each other in bitterness the most intense; waste of means in law suits, in which lodge lawyers reap a rich harvest, and keep it going with savage delight, deciding in favor of the lodge, of course, as the suits are already going.

God pity the little band of conservative United Brethren, ten thousand the liberals say, and the secular lodge papers chime in in prejudicing the public mind, and the combined lodge and liberal forces will worry the church till they will, if possible, make this lie good by reducing over a hundred thousand to that number. The world does not know what this little band of Christ's followers are suffering at the hands of these heartless destroyers in and out of the church. The church has stood the combined assaults of slavery, lodge, and every other enemy from outside for nearly a century. But these traitors within, this arm of the devil-fish that coiled its clammy folds about her vitals, has done its dreadful work! Yes, the 195,000 (?) brave "liberals" cry out to five hundred thousand lodgites, "Come and help us rob these ten thousand 'radicals' of four million dollars worth of property, and we will divide the spoils. Come! come!! Let us exterminate our common enemy!"

"And the same day Pilate and Herod were made friends together; for before they were at enmity between themselves."

Yes, the liberals were once at enmity with the lodge; but now they are made friends together when they see a chance to shoot at the upright in heart and thus enlarge their borders.

PIONEER.

BRO. JAMES L. ANDRUS DEAD.

OTISCO, Mich., Oct. 20, 1889.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I write this under great depression and sorrow, for I have very sad news to communicate. My dear husband, Rev. James L. Andrus, was suddenly taken from us by a terrible accident on Friday, October 4th. He was engaged in picking apples from a very tall tree, when he fell from the ladder on which he was standing and was instantly killed, his neck being broken by the fall.

You can readily conceive something of the distress and sorrow which this crushing blow has brought upon us as a family. You may remember that he was in the buggy with Elder Rathbun the second time his life was attempted, September 30th, 1872. My husband had that evening given a lecture on Masonry, and after he had finished his lecture Bro. Rathbun made some remarks confirming all that had been said—as my husband had never been a Mason. After the meeting closed they started for the house of a prominent anti-secretist with whom they were to spend the night. On the way they were fired upon from a thicket twice, the second shot taking effect in Bro. Rathbun's wrist, as you may remember. A full account was furnished by my husband for the Cynosure at the time, to which was affixed the affidavits of all that were in the company and witnessed the affair.

We (my husband and myself) have from time to time furnished many facts that have come to our knowledge illustrative of the workings of Masonry, and its influence in protecting criminals and perverting justice. For fully seventeen years before he died my husband had not been pastor of any church (except about ten months at one time) because he could not find one that would sustain him in his position on the anti-secret question. During all those years he was a martyr to his principles, treated with neglect, sometimes almost with contempt, by his brethren (Baptists) because he would adhere unflinchingly to what he believed to be his duty in regard to secret societies. He at one time was offered the pastorate of an anti-secret church, but he soon discovered that nearly all the church members were raising tobacco, and that nearly all his support would be furnished from this source, and he felt he could not conscientiously endorse such a business; so he left them after preaching an earnest and searching sermon on that subject.

Of course his family had to suffer with him in his self-denying life, which was a great affliction to him. But he has gone to his reward. Will not the dear brethren and sisters who read this remember us in their prayers, that we may be profited spiritually by this sore bereavement. Your afflicted sister,

E. C. ANDRUS.

CHURCH AND STATE.

CHICAGO, Oct. 23.

"The Relation of Church and State" to each other, so ably presented in the Cynosure of Oct. 17 by the Rev. J. M. Foster, at once attracted my attention as a question which was very keenly discussed in Scotland half a century ago, by "The Young Men's Voluntary Association," of Edinburgh, and engaged, or rather absorbed, the attention of the people generally until after the great disruption of the Established Church, of which was born the Free Church in the year 1843. The fact that over four hundred Scottish Presbyterian ministers gave up their livings rather than surrender their conviction of duty to the Lord Jesus Christ as the Head of the church, won them and their nation a glory far greater than that of mere success; and occasioned the wondrous manifestation of the power of the then, by them, untested voluntary principle in contributing to their support personally, and to the establishment and maintenance of the all-important fields of labor at home and abroad, which the very active Free Church felt called upon to occupy. The purity of the motives of the leaders in this great movement, e. g., Walsh and the better-known Thomas Chalmers, etc., have ever been above the shadow of reproach. The voluntary relinquishment of state support was a great trial of faith, but, like the children of Israel at the Red Sea, they had but to "go forward," and lo! the waters of obstruction were divided as they marched on dry land. Or, as Chalmers himself put the case, it was like a man digging a well who had suddenly struck water, which gushed upon him so that he had to hasten upward for safety! Thus had the voluntary principle caused abundant supplies to flow when those from the state were completely dried up.

The great agitation on the question of the church establishment resulted, as it were, in the discovery and adoption of the electric light, i. e., the voluntary principle for the Free Church, and in leaving the flickering end of the tallow candle for the Established Church.

Before reverting to Mr. Foster's arguments we may note the fact that these Scotsmen in Edinburgh had a "Young Men's Voluntary Church Association," begun in 1834, which, perhaps, was a good pattern for our own Chicago Young Men's Christian Association, which, of course, couldn't exist before the city itself was born, else Chicago must have been ahead! She will show her pluck, however, when she summons the world to HER FAIR in 1892!

Hoping to see the argument of Mr. Foster, in favor of state support, fairly met and refuted in your columns at an early date, I am, meantime, yours truly,
AN AULD SCOT.

PITH AND POINT.

FROM THE BOSTON COMMON PREACHER.

I returned yesternight from two weeks' labor in Trenton, N. J., where the lodge seems as firmly entrenched as in other places. Have just printed a sermon preached on the Lord's Day when Bro. Stoddard was on the Common with me. Will send thee a copy for any use that seems good soon as the work is done. Met Bro. Stoddard a few moments in New York city day before yesterday, at Broadway Tabernacle meeting of A. B. C. F. M. The Andover second probation leaven is fermenting yet furiously; and the cup at the communion table was so charged with alcohol that nose forbade mouth to taste it. "Ichabod" seemed to be written on the faces of many present. God reigns, truth is eternal, and Christ cometh.—WM. F. DAVIS, Mt. Washington, Chelsea, Mass.

ALONGSIDE THE BIBLE.

I have received and read the paper sent me, the Christian Cynosure, and can say I never read any paper that so nearly takes a place by the Bible in my estimation. It is full, yea, and sound to the very core. May God speed its rich truths to every family in the Union. Fraternally yours in Christ Jesus.—J. W. MURRAY, M. D., Camden, Arkansas.

WALDENSTROM'S THEOLOGY.

I agree with you fully on the anti-secret question, but not so in your very ungrounded articles on the very much outspoken Dr. P. Waldenstrom, of whose doctrinal standing you can have but very imperfect knowledge. I have on hand a few of his writings, where he most emphatically denies the atonement of Jesus Christ, so dear to every Christian heart. If Sweden and our own country had no purer and no better to show the world we would all be in the most lamentable condition. Should you desire to be more thoroughly informed on this subject, both I and many others would be very willing, indeed, to give you some translations of these, his writings.—REV. C. E. CESANDER, Geneva, Ill.

We have been interested in Dr. Waldenstrom chiefly for the reason Bro. Cesander is interested in the Cynosure—because he gives his voice against the lodge. We do not wholly agree with the above respecting Dr. Waldenstrom's theology. That matter was discussed two or three years since in our columns, and so far as we understand the case, the passages objected to are explained favorably to their author.

LITERATURE.

In the Missionary Review of the World for November the masterly pen that gave in the August issue "Islam and Christian Missions," gives us here a paper equally interesting and thrilling, entitled "The American Missionary in the Orient." Every missionary society in the land ought to circulate it as a tract by the ten thousand; it would have telling effect. This unknown writer shows a wonderful mastery of the subjects he writes upon, and a marvelous power to inform. There are several other notable papers in the number, such as the "Great Crisis in Japan," by Dr. Ellinwood, the "Ministry of Money, and the Crisis in Cities," by Dr. Pierson, the "Historic Churches of the East," by Prof. Schodde, a grand sketch of "The Student Missionary Uprising," "A Christian College in Brazil," by Dr. Chamberlain, a highly interesting account of the recent Continental Missionary Conference at Bremen, and a stirring poem by Mrs. Merrill E. Gates. All these are in one department; each of the other seven departments is full of matter equally valuable. The influence of such a review, full of rousing thought and burdened with facts bearing on the work of world missions, and scientifically presented, is a mighty power for good in the universal church. Published by Funk & Wagnalls, 18 and 20 Astor Place, New York. $2.50 per year; 25 cents per single number. The Cynosure is happy to announce a club rate with the Review, so that the two can be obtained for $3.00. Price separately, $4.00. Send for the Review under this excellent offer. We should be glad to put it in every family where the Cynosure is taken.

The Nineteenth Century for October (Leonard Scott Publication Co., 29 Park Row, New York,) opens with an article by Mohsin-ul-Mulk, or Mahdi Ali, as he is better known, on the attack on the native States of India, in which he answers some criticisms that have recently been made of maladministration in them by the native governments. Mrs. Henry Ady writes on Rome in 1889, noting the more important of recent archaeological discoveries, and describing the changes that modern life have made in the typography of the city. Mr. Gladstone writes briefly, but sympathetically, of the Journal de Maris Bashkirtseff, a book lately published in Paris, and one attracting more attention abroad than any other work. T. W. Russell, M. P., presents a Resume of the Irish Land Problem. Dr. Collier gathers together a number of interesting and curious facts in a paper on the Insensibility of Animals to Pain. Miss Laura A. Smith has a comprehensive paper on Some War Songs of Europe. Sir Edward Strachy write on Old Country Houses. Mrs. Jessie Waller contributes a valuable paper on Mental and Physical Training of Children. Prof. Max Mueller tells the curious myth of Lady Toad in a lively and interesting manner. Graham Sandberg describes the city of Lhasa, Thibet, the only large city of the world that has never been visited by Europeans. He presents an extraordinary picture of a hitherto veiled life.

Seven writers—clergymen, college professors and public men, some of them specialists of acknowledged standing—have associated themselves to discuss special questions of social interest and import, and to prepare papers to be afterwards given to the public from time to time in the pages of the Century. The writers include Rev. Professor Shields of Princeton, Bishop Potter of New York, Rev. Dr. T. T. Munger of New Haven, Hon. Seth Low of Brooklyn, and Professor Ely of the Johns Hopkins University. For each paper the author will be responsible, but he will have had the benefit of the criticism of the other members of the group before giving it final form. The opening paper will be printed in the November Century.

Babyhood for October again urges mothers and nurses to give no sleep-producing "medicine" to restless infants except on the recommendation of a physician. It is surprising how many there are, whose intelligence and enlightenment upon almost any other subject would not be questioned, who continue this ancient barbarity, or give a hireling carte blanche in the matter, and seem entirely indifferent to the fact that prevention of pain and uneasiness in babies is generally quite within their reach if they will take the trouble to look for it; as Babyhood says: "A cause exists and can usually be found."

Mollie Maguire's Oath.

ANCIENT ORDER OF HIBERNIANS.

The objects of the order are thus stated: "We are joined together to promote Friendship, Unity and true Christian Charity among our members, by raising money for the aged, sick, blind and infirm. The motto of the order is Friendship, Unity and true Christian Charity; unity, in uniting for mutual support in sickness and distress; friendship, in assisting each other to the best of our ability; true Christian charity, by doing to each other and to all the world as we would wish they would do unto us. It is the desire to promote friendship among the Irish Catholics, and especially to assist one another in all trials.

The oath: "I, A. B., having heard the objects of the order fully explained, do solemnly swear that I will, with the help of God, keep inviolably secret all the acts and things done by this order, and obey the constitution and bylaws in every respect. Should I hear a member illy spoken of, I will espouse his cause, and convey the information to him as soon as possible for me to do so. I will obey my superior officer in every thing lawful, and not otherwise. All this I do solemnly swear."

The Clan-na-Gael Oath.

UNDER WHICH CRONIN WAS MURDERED.

"I, (name in full), do solemnly swear, in the presence of Almighty God, that I will labor, while life is left me, to establish and defend a republican form of government in Jsfmboe. That I will keep strictly secret the name and everything connected with this C'e from all not entitled to know such secrets. That I will obey and comply with the constitution and laws of the C'e, and that I will faithfully preserve the funds of the C'e for the cause of Jsfmboe revolution alone, as specified in the constitution. That I will deem it my special duty and mission to promote and foster sentiments of union, brotherly love and nationality among all Jsfmboe. That I take this obligation without any mental reservation, holding the same forever binding upon me, and that any violation thereof or desertion of my duty to the B'd. is infamous, and merits the severest punishment. So help me God."

OR, INVISIBLE EMPIRE.

Statement of principles adopted by a general convention of the order at Nashville in 1867:

"2. To protect and defend the Constitution of the United States, and all laws passed in conformity thereto, and to protect the States and people thereof from all invasion from any source whatever.

"3. To aid and assist in the execution of all constitutional laws, and to protect the people from unlawful seizure, and from trial except by their peers in conformity to the laws of land."

Jesuit's Oath.

I, A. B., now in the presence of Almighty God, the blessed Virgin Mary, the blessed Michael the Archangel, the blessed St. John the Baptist, the holy Apostles St. Peter and St. Paul, and the saints and the sacred host of heaven, and to you, my ghostly fathers, do declare from my heart, without mental reservation, that his Holiness, Pope Leo XIII., is Christ's Vicar-General, and is the true and only head of the Catholic or universal church throughout the earth; and that by virtue of the keys of binding and loosing given to his Holiness by Jesus Christ, he hath power to depose heretical kings, princes, states, commonwealths, and governments all being illegal without his sacred confirmation, and that they may safely be destroyed; therefore, to the utmost of my power I shall and will defend this doctrine and his Holiness' rights and customs against all usurpers of the heretical or Protestant authority whatsoever, especially against the new pretended authority and Church of England and all adherents, in regard that they and she be usurpal and heretical, opposing the sacred mother Church of Rome.

I do renounce and disown my allegiance as due to any heretical king, prince, or state named Protestants, or obedience to any of their inferior magistrates or officers.

I do further declare the doctrine of the Church of England, of the Calvinists, Huguenots, and other Protestants to be damnable, and those to be damned who will not forsake the same.

I do further declare that I will help, assist, and advise all or any of his Holiness' agents in any place wherever I shall be; and do my utmost to extirpate the heretical Protestant's doctrine, and to destroy all their pretended powers, regal or otherwise. I do further promise and declare that, notwithstanding I am dispensed to assume any religion heretical, for the propagating of mother church interests, to keep secret and private all her agents' counsels, as they intrust me, and not to divulge, directly or indirectly, by word, writing, or circumstances whatsoever, but shall execute all which shall be proposed, given in charge, or discovered unto me by you, my ghostly father, or by any of this sacred convent. All which I, A. B., do swear by the blessed Trinity and blessed sacrament which I am now to receive, to perform on my part to keep inviolably; and do call all the heavenly and glorious host of Heaven to witness these, my real intentions, to keep this my oath.

In testimony whereof, I take this most holy and blessed sacrament of the eucharist, and witness the same further with my hand and seal in the face of this holy convent, this — day — A. D. —, etc.

Freemason's Oath.

THIRD DEGREE.

I, —, of my own free will and accord, in the presence of Almighty God and this worshipful lodge, erected to him and dedicated to the holy Saint Johns, do hereby and hereon (Master places his hand on candidate's hands, on the Bible,) most solemnly and sincerely promise and swear, that I will always hail, ever conceal and never reveal any of the secret arts, parts, or points of the Master Mason's degree to any person or persons whomsoever, except it be to a true and lawful brother of this degree, or in a regular constituted lodge of Master Masons, nor unto him nor them, until by strict trial, due examination, or legal information, I shall have found him or them as lawfully entitled to the same as I am myself.

I further promise and swear, that I will stand to and abide by all the laws, rules and regulations of the Master Mason's degree, and of the lodge of which I shall be a member, as far as the same shall come to my knowledge....

Further, that I will aid and assist all poor, destitute, worthy Master Masons, their widows and orphans, knowing them to be such, as far as their necessities may require, and my ability permit, without material injury to myself or family.

Further, that I will keep a worthy brother Master Mason's secret inviolate, when communicated to and received by me as such, murder and treason excepted.

Further, that I will not aid nor be present at the initiation, passing or raising of a woman, an old man in dotage, a young man in his nonage, an atheist, a madman, nor a fool, knowing them to be such....

Further, that I will not cheat, wrong nor defraud a Master Mason's lodge, nor a brother of this degree knowingly, nor supplant him in any of his laudable undertakings, but will give him due and timely notice, that he may ward off approaching danger....

Further, that I will not have illicit carnal intercourse with a Master Mason's wife, his mother, sister, or daughter, nor suffer the same to be done by others, if in my power to prevent....

Further, that I will not give the Grand Hailing Sign of Distress, except in circumstances of the most imminent danger, in a just and legal lodge, or for the purpose of instruction; and if ever I should see or hear it given by a worthy brother in distress, I will fly to his relief if there is a greater probability of saving his life than of losing my own.

All this I most solemnly and sincerely promise and swear, with a firm and steadfast resolution to perform the same, without any hesitation, mental reservation, or secret evasion of mind whatever, binding myself under no less a penalty than that of having my body severed in twain, my bowels taken from thence and burned to ashes, the ashes scattered to the four winds of heaven, that no more remembrance might be had of so vile a wretch as I should be, should I ever knowingly violate this, my Master Mason's obligation. So help me

God and keep me steadfast in the due performance of the same.

Knights of the Golden Circle.

OATH OF THE THIRD OR POLITICAL DEGREE.

Before God and these witnesses, I do vow that I will never reveal the signs, grips, passwords, tokens or significants of the 57 (Knights of the Columbian Star), to any man, woman or child, except to a 57 in good and lawful standing, and then only as hereafter directed, and for the lawful purposes of this Order. And I pledge and commit myself fully and freely to each of the following obligations, and in perfect good faith.

1st. I vow and promise to conceal the names of the 57, the objects and character thereof, and never to speak of the same as though I was a member, except to those who can give me our sacred word in such a way as to satisfy me they are 57.

2d. No matter what secrets may be given to me by a 57, if given as the secret of a 57, and because I am one, I will hold the same sacredly in my own knowledge, and never communicate it, even to a 57 (Knight of the Columbian Star), unless authorized so to do by the brother whose secret it is. I will never speak evil of a brother 57, either before his face or behind his back. I will never dishonor the wife or daughter of a 57, I knowing them to be such, but I will shield and protect the character of all 57 whom I may know to be such, their wives, daughters and families.

3d. I will oppose, to the utmost of my ability, and never consent, but vote against the admission of any confirmed drunkard, professional gambler, rowdy, convict, felon, 68 (Abolitionist), Negro, Indian, minor, idiot, or 69 (Foreigner), to membership in this department of the 33, but I will get as many good and eligible 70 (Southern born men) to join this Degree as I can....

9th. I will protect and defend all widows and orphans, to the best of my ability, and especially those of a 57, and I vow I will never desert the 57, or their cause and aims, while three members remain and consent to propagate it.... In 2 I will endeavor to cause to be opened to the public all 84 (nunneries, monasteries or convents), and there shall be no advantages to 67 (Roman Catholic) which is not equally accorded to 60 (Protestant). The 50 (Bible) shall be adopted for use in all public schools, and any 85 (Priest) who shall be detected in 86 (gambling, or violating the ordinances of religion), shall be expelled from 2. Any minister holding any place under the Government must be 60 (Protestant).

10th. All civil places of prominence shall be given, so far as my influence goes, to 57 (Knights of the Columbian Star), and, when these are supplied, to the 18 (True Faith); then to the 1 (Knights of the Iron Hand). I will advocate the establishment of 63 (a government) which shall place the power in the hands of the most educated and moral, and oppose the recognition of any 87 (Negro, Mulatto, Indian or mixed blood), to citizenship....

In witness, I do voluntarily, here in these presence, sign my name and P. O. address.

The Christian Cynosure.

J. BLANCHARD, EDITOR.

HENRY L. KELLOGG, ASSOCIATE EDITOR.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, OCTOBER 31, 1889.

JOSEPH E. ROY.

Across the life of Dr. Roy it may be written that the gentleness of the Lord hath made him great. Ever since he entered public life, a tall, pale youth, fresh from his studies at Knox College and Union Seminary, he has always been in the picket guard of Christ's army; and yet so gentle and so merciful that he has turned aside the bullets of Christ's enemies, while his wisdom has disarmed their rage. When the ban-dogs of slavery and the lodge have been let loose, he has stood up to defend their victim; and, though not a fighter like Peter, to cut off their right ears, like Thomas when it came to the hinge point of the event and the hearts of the boldest trembled with the alternative of desertion, he has bravely said, "Let us also go that we may die with him."

Born in Martinsburg, Ohio, in 1827, but reared in the once famous "Military Tract" of Illinois, Dr. Roy's character absorbed the sweetness of the billowy, flower-clad prairie, while it expanded like it in generosity and breadth. He studied as a youth in Geneseo and at Knox College, where he graduated in 1848, two or three years after the editor of the Cynosure became its president. For two years he changed the experiences of school-going to school-teaching, and then went to Union Theological Seminary, New York. His first pastorate was at Brimfield, Peoria county, Ill., but his parish was larger than one farming community could supply. A powerful revival in the then important church at Wethersfield in an adjoining county called on him for temporary aid. His zeal stopped at no sacrifice, and his labors in that meeting threatened to terminate in serious ill-health. Boys, now grown to man's estate, can well remember the pale, worn look of the young minister who came into their prayer meetings with a loving word of encouragement as their souls struggled into the great light of eternal life. After this winter's work God opened a wider field and Plymouth church, Chicago, called on the little country church to give up a pastor whose large place in their hearts they could not again fill, and from 1855 to '60 Dr. Roy helped to turn the energies of the marvelous young city, like a swelling river, between the safe banks of religion and morality.

It was a crisis hour in the nation. "Border Ruffians" and "Free State" men were grappling across the line of a great American principle. The secret societies of Missouri were baptizing the soil of Kansas with the best blood of New England. Their plots and cruel defence of slavery are at length told in the Century life of Lincoln. In Chicago Stephen A. Douglas was then the most celebrated citizen, and he was at the zenith of his power, rapidly striding toward that goal of ambitious politicians, the Presidential chair. The Plymouth pastor felt all the pressure of public opinion, which was a great tide setting toward the successful Douglas, but he was a rock unmoved in its midst. He had been in his pulpit a year when, in 1856, he preached a memorable and prophetic sermon on "Kansas, her Struggle and her Defence," from the text, Daniel 11: 11, 40: "And the king of the south shall be moved with choler, and shall come forth and fight with him, even with the king of the north. . . . And at the time of the end shall the king of the south push at him; and the king of the north shall come against him like a whirlwind, with chariots, and with horsemen, and with many ships; and he shall enter into the countries and shall overflow and pass over." "Prophecies have many fulfillings," wrote one of the old expositors, and a prophetic spirit seemed to come like an inspiration on the speaker, and in these words he predicted a fulfillment which no commentator on Daniel had yet dared to suggest:

"If the South still persists in rushing this nation on to civil war, 'at the time of the end' of forbearance, the North will come 'like a whirlwind, with chariots and with horsemen and with many ships,' and will sweep from Mason and Dixon's line to Florida, from New York all around the coast to the Gulf."

The exact fulfillment of these words within ten years from the day they were spoken, has long been a matter of history. That sermon was printed and circulated as an Abolition document all over the Northwest.

Dr. Roy never sought to win fame by controversy, but about this time he was forced into a discussion with Senator Douglas respecting a point of fact. In a sermon he had criticized the inaction of the champion of his party while Brooks was beating the life out of Charles Sumner on the floor of the United States Senate. Douglas resented the imputation, and published widely through the Democratic press a denial of his presence at the beating. The Plymouth pastor turned back to the Congressional Record and printed an extract from the testimony of Mr. Douglas before a Senate committee, in which he said he was in an ante-room when a page shouted in word of the Brook's assault. He started to interfere and then stopped, thinking his action might be misjudged by Southern friends. A second call, however, drew him into the Senate chamber, and he saw Brooks still dealing blows upon the helpless champion of freedom, and other hands pulled off the Masonic ruffian. The Republican papers only would publish Dr. Roy's rejoinder.

The sting of this episode had not ceased to rankle when the laying of the corner-stone of Chicago University occurred on a 4th of July day. Mr. Douglas was much interested in the young institution, and gave it the generous tract of land on which the building was erected, and which has since helped to form an important chapter in the record of Chicago courts. He was present to give the address of the occasion. Dr. Roy was also present as an interested spectator; but Dr. Burroughs, president of the University, insisted that he should act as chaplain of the day, and finally obtained a reluctant consent. It was a moment to test the bravest. Should he hold his peace concerning the great moral and national issues in which his whole soul was bound up, and for the sake of the good-fellowship of the day suppress those convictions and withhold the words burning in him? Or should he plead with the God of justice and of the nations, and purchase the peace of his own conscience with the upbraidings of his fellow-citizens? The question was decided the moment it arose. After remembering in his petition the interests of the occasion, and of the anniversary day, with a strong voice he besought the Lord to "remember our brethren in bonds," that the hour of their deliverance might hasten, and that they might also rejoice in the day of national independence. Senator Douglas was introduced for the address, but, after a few words, apologized that his throat was too seriously affected to permit his speaking in the open air. Next day the Chicago Democrat, "Long John" Wentworth's paper, came out with the announcement that "Roy's prayer gave Douglas the bronchitis!"

Five years of his pastorate were hardly gone when the American Home Missionary Society called him to be their Western Secretary with an office in this city. The influence of this society in preparing our nation for the final and successful grapple with slavery may never be written, except in the records of heaven. Its missionaries were in a thousand churches, on both sides the Mississippi, proclaiming the Word of God against that national sin which John Wesley named the "sum of all villainies." From such churches poured out those Western armies that cut the rebellion in two twice and then doubled it up.

In 1860 Dr. Roy began the new work, and for fifteen years was an untitled bishop over one of the largest and most important dioceses in the world. He traveled widely in the North, and after the war, in the South also. During this time he prepared a brief manual for Congregational churches, which was very widely adopted by them. His pen was constantly busy, until the readers of the Independent, Advance, and Congregationalist began to open first to the "Pilgrim" letters. After many years these letters have been gathered into a handsome volume by Mrs. Roy, and in 1888 the Congregational Publishing Society placed it before American readers, where the young may read the current events of an awful time, and the old revive the memories of a great national deliverance.

In 1876, while traveling in New York, a sleeping car berth, insecurely fastened, fell upon his head with what, for a man of less vigorous frame, would have been a deathblow. For more than a year the issue was doubtful, but in 1878 he was able to resume work in a changed climate. He then began at Atlanta, Georgia, another bishopric among the freedmen of the South, which continued till 1885. Time may prove his work in these seven years to have been the most important of his life. He founded fifty churches among the destitute colored people and mountain whites, and superintended the entire school and church work of the American Missionary Association. He was, in fact, the embodiment of that society in the South, where he made himself beloved by thousands of God's poor. As a result of this work he can say, as Job did, "The blessing of him that was ready to perish came upon me;" and as another result, the Association is to-day entrusted with millions of money for the elevation of the black race. No one has stood more firmly against the caste demon in the South, where those whites, who were spared by the Negroes' mercy and fed by their patient toil, now that they are free, murder them as citizens and are unwilling they should be men. In 1885 he was transferred to Chicago where he is now Western secretary of the A. M. A., having recently divided his large field with Rev. C. W. Hiatt, whose headquarters are at Cleveland.

But along with this anti-slavery record there is much more to be said; and, for the present purpose, the most important part. Dr. Roy has never failed in his steadfast opposition to the lodge. At Mr. Carpenter's instance, he rewrote and condensed the thrilling testimony and arraignment of Freemasonry by Judge Whitney, for a wider and more popular circulation. Year after year he introduced resolutions against the secret orders in the Southern church associations; and the action of the American Missionary Association, taken nearly twenty years ago at Mt. Vernon, Ohio, has never become a dead letter. Revived and faithfully applied, its effect has been to throw the influence of the A. M. A. churches and colleges in the South against the lodges, and almost wholly rid them of this deadly incubus. The agents of the National Christian Association have been made welcome in all parts of the South through the personal effort of Dr. Roy. His address at the dedication of the Morgan monument and in the court-house at Wheaton, Ill., have been widely circulated and read as documents in our reform. As Mr. Carpenter's trustee for promoting this work in the South, he has sent among the colored pastors and schools books and papers by the thousand; and one of the most effective of these documents, "the Carpenter booklet," he himself compiled, printed and distributed. He also enabled the Arnold expedition to get afloat for that remarkable river mission on the Mississippi and the Ohio, of which we have not yet the end.

The burden of nearly sixty-three years, filled with such labors as we have narrated, have not bent the erect form of Dr. Roy, nor in feature, as may be seen in our excellent likeness, have they left many marks of their severity. God grant that he may live to see the people, whom he has loved and for whom he has so long labored, free men and American citizens in fact as well as name, and the churches of Christ, North and South, wholly separated from the false worships of the lodge.

THE CRONIN TRIAL.—Last Tuesday the twelfth juror was found in a brother of Col. Clarke of the Pacific Garden Mission. The next day was a busy one for the lawyers, and for the Clan-na-Gael as well. The "triangle" branch of the order held a long secret meeting. Thursday State's Attorney Longenecker opened the case with a long address. He had promised to be very brief. He filled nearly the whole day with a prolix review of the case. Then the testimony began. The witnesses are believed to number into the hundreds, and none presume that the trial will be closed before January. The jury is regarded as an excellent one, and both sides seem satisfied. The selection was made from a total of 1,115 men. Of Mr. Clarke it is significantly said that he "used to be a Freemason." Three others are members of the Good Templar, Royal Arcanum, Knights of Pythias and United Workmen lodges. Over two months have passed since the trial began, and it is estimated that this lodge affair has already cost the public over $22,000.

THE HAND OF DEATH has never seemed so heavy upon the friends and supporters of our reform. Four new names are added this week to the roll, at whose head stands that of the beloved F. W. Capwell.—Dr. Fairchild, Donald Kirkpatrick, W. J. White and James L. Andrus. Their loss makes sad gaps in our ranks. Verily we cry, "Help, Lord; for the godly man ceaseth; for the faithful fail from among the children of men."

REV. A. W. HALL has just issued a neat and useful little volume, "Six Weeks in Africa." It is fresh and graphic, and gives much that is new of Africa and her people. For sale at the Wesleyan Publishing House, Syracuse, N. Y. Mr. Hall has done nobly in the N. Y. State convention just closed at Houghton, N. Y. The meeting has been a decided success, doing credit to young Bro. Stoddard. Prof. Dodd of the Houghton Seminary is president in place of the loved and lamented Capwell. He and Mrs. Dodd are graduates of Wheaton College.

THE CHRISTIAN CONGRESS.—This has been fixed for Dec. 11 and 12 next. There has never been such an opportune time for calling such a Convention as is to meet in Boston on the above dates. The secular press teems with the discussion of the secret lodge as developed in the Cronin investigation; and thousands have been freed to speak against the lodge. We have only about six weeks till the Convention. One thousand of our subscribers should each get two new readers before that meeting. There is no paper more popular with its readers than the Cynosure. The eyes and ears of the American people are now opened by the daily papers reporting the great Chicago trial. This is the season to strike for subscribers. Stop and think just what you can do, or will try to do, to secure your two new subscribers.

As a special inducement you may offer the balance of this year, now two months, free, and a year's subscription will be given from January 1, 1890.

—The supplement of Our Day, containing President C. A. Blanchard's able review of the lodge question, will be supplied freely to the members of the National W. C. T. Union at their meeting in Battery D, Chicago, next week.

—The student at Northwestern University, Evanston, who expects to take part in the College contest at the Illinois State Convention next week, writes that the fact of his preparation for that event is creating much interest among the students, and his Anti-masonic books are in great demand. If he should win the prize, the interest will be greatly increased.

—The Toronto Telegram and Archbishop Cleary of the Roman Catholic church are engaged in a controversy on Masonry. The prelate arraigned the lodge as an organization engaged in degrading the authority and denying the divinity of the Saviour. The paper flings back the charge that Masonry looks well when put side by side with the Archbishop, and goes on to call names when its short-winded argument fails.

—We learn that the editor and Secretary Stoddard were on Saturday at the Buffalo Convention of Christian Workers of Canada and the United States, meeting in the First Presbyterian Church in that city. They are urged to attend by Col. Clarke of the Chicago Pacific Garden Mission, and by Mr. J. A. Conant of Willimantic, Conn. One of the questions in the question-box was: "Are secret societies a hindrance to the work of the church of Christ?"

—The Tyler, Masonic organ of Detroit, is almost discouraged, and is almost ready to kill some seceder in order to raise a wave of opposition. The Augean stable which Judge Whitney found in the Masonic lodge is not yet cleansed. The Tyler says: "Not long since we heard an old Mason say, 'Oh, for another wave of Morganism to wash out the faithless unworthy and establish once more the Free Mason!'" And we add, oh! for a time when men will be men for manhood's sake; Masons for the truth of Masonry; when confidence will not be a jest, and when a Mason's word will be worth one hundred cents on the dollar; when envy, slander, malice and backbiting will be shut out of the order, and brotherly love, relief and truth be again firmly established in the hearts of the craft, and exemplified in their daily walk and conversation."

PERSONAL NOTES.

—Prof. A. R. Dodd of Houghton Seminary is appointed delegate to the Boston Congress, Tremont Temple, December 11th, 12th, from New York. Rev. Mr. Fish (Free Methodist) of Saratoga hopes also to attend the Boston meeting. He is an able preacher and interesting man.

—Dr. J. E. Roy, Rev. B. T. Roberts and Rev. S. H. Swartz, all of this city, have been invited to act as judges of the College Contest at the Illinois State meeting. Their presence will ensure a righteous award of a prize that will have more value than money can give.

—A letter from Bro. A. B. Knight of Worcester surprises and shocks us with the news that Rev. W. J. White of that city was buried last week. Pres. J. Blanchard was but lately his guest, and he was related to Mrs. Blanchard. He was a man loved by his neighbors and by his God.

—Rev. B. T. Roberts, Editor of the Free Methodist, and superintendent of the Free Methodist church, has returned to this city from his annual visit to the conferences, we are glad to note, in much better health than last year. His interest in reform questions is as wide as the human race, and is stirring us all up against the gigantic monopolies that rob the poor of their dimes by the hundred million. He has planned an attack on the sugar trust in what seems to be a vital point, and we must all stand by to aid the effort by every means. Bro. Roberts is expecting to attend the Elgin Convention next week.

—Rev. Amos Dresser, whom the older readers of the Cynosure will remember for his labors as missionary in Jamaica and for his being publicly whipped as an Abolitionist at Nashville, Tenn., in slavery days, has been spending a few days with his son at Wheaton, and is this week attending the A. M. A. meeting in this city. He has spoken two or three times before the Wheaton students and preached with great power in the chapel Sabbath morning.

—Rev. P. Waldenstrom, the eminent Swedish preacher and author, who has preached to such large audiences of Scandinavians in the West and Northwest, will preach in New York ere he returns to Sweden. He will visit President Harrison and Secretary Windom in Washington, and also lecture on "Preaching" before the students of the Yale Divinity School. When he returns to Sweden he will write a book on this country. Yale conferred the degree of doctor of divinity upon him last June, a fact which Swedish papers have noted with pleasure.

—Rev. Edward Henry Fairchild, D. D., for twenty years president of Berea College, Kentucky, died Oct. 2, aged 73 years. He was born in Stockbridge, Mass., and graduated from college and seminary at Oberlin. Ex-President James H. Fairchild of Oberlin was an older brother of the deceased. Dr. Fairchild was always warmly interested in Christian reform, and encouraged the labors of those opposing the secret lodge. He himself took part in public discussion of this evil. The last address on this subject was in Hershey Music Hall in this city on the last evening of the Congress of Churches, in March, 1887.

—Rev. J. L. Rusbridge, pastor of the Second United Presbyterian church of Buffalo, N. Y., sends a reply to the letter of W. B. Stoddard, our Washington agent, respecting the lodge incursions upon the United Presbyterian churches of Western New York. We should give it immediate insertion but for the fact that it makes serious and bitter charges of falsehood against Bro. Stoddard, whom we know to be a man who intends the truth at all times. Because of these charges we shall make special inquiry into the case. If Bro. Stoddard was mistaken respecting his facts, the Cynosure will duly apologize for having printed them. If he is correct it will be a serious matter with Mr. Rusbridge before God, and should be before men. It is sufficient for the present that the main fact, that Mr. Rusbridge is a Freemason, he emphatically denies. He says that he is not, never was, and never expects to be a member of that order.

EVENTS IN WESTERN NEW YORK.

DALE, N. Y., Oct. 22, 1889.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I have turned aside from preparation for our State convention for a little to recount for those interested events in my recent past.

I feel exceedingly grateful to God, since it was his will to take from us our beloved State president, that it was my privilege to be with him some of the time during his brief sickness, and take a last look at his countenance, so beautiful, as it portrayed the dawning peace of eternity. I desire here to express my heartfelt gratitude for all the departed has done for me. The warm grasp of the hand, the welcome, the many encouraging words and kind acts which have strengthened and helped, will not be forgotten as long as memory lasts.

During the past week I have reviewed some of the old battlefields. At Batavia the Morgan monuments stands as majestic as when first erected, bearing its silent but impressive testimony against that system of despotism which would know no law but its own. Of the old vanguard I met Anson Higly, Mrs. Darius King, Mrs. Day and Sarah Stevens. A few new Cynosure subscriptions taken there will help keep our flag still waving as the old leaders fall.

I found a Mr. Chase at Avon who had but recently renounced Masonry. I trust he will be with us in State convention and relate his experience. At Leroy I found a faithful few, but time and circumstances did not permit my remaining for lectures.

In a brief call at Arcade I renewed the acquaintance of Bro. H. N. Waldo and wife. They have just celebrated their sixtieth wedding anniversary. Bro. Waldo has always been a friend to the oppressed and needy. In anti-slavery days he kept a station on the underground railroad. More than one young man, who has since made his mark in the world, has received needed assistance in securing an education from him. Though in his 84th year, he feels a live interest in all righteous reforms. Bro. R. W. Lyman of Yorkshire needs no introduction to Cynosure readers. I found him feeling young and interested as ever; though in his 80th year he would outwalk many but half as old. I was made very welcome at his home. Bro. M. E. Brown of the Free Methodist church, now at Elton, took me in charge over Sabbath and gave me a sample of what he has to stand every Sabbath. I spoke three times to good audiences and talked to some one nearly all the time when not thus engaged. The collections were not forgotten. Bro. B. urged his people to give to our work, though not having more than needed himself. What is lacking in salary is made up in the joy of harmony with God, and a clear conscience as they go along.

A goodly number gathered to hear my address in the U. P. church at Lynden, Cattaraugus Co., last Thursday evening. Some two hundred were present last evening as I spoke in the Presbyterian church, Franklinville. The temperature of this meeting was considerable above freezing. Enough secretists and friends were present to make the interest great. I spoke two hours and received the best of attention. The three pastors present, Free Methodist, Presbyterian, and Baptist, were in sympathy with our cause.

Time prohibits further writing now. The falling snow may diminish our numbers at the State convention to-morrow as some expected to drive; but God knows best. There have been many beautiful days in the weeks past. The sun always dispels the clouds. May the Sun of righteousness shine more and more till the clouds of iniquity all flee away and the perfect day be ushered in.

CONTRAST.

The bells of Lent rang up, rang down,
Through all the babel of the town;
Rang soft, rang clear, rang loud or low,
As loud or low March winds did blow.
Through wide-flung doors the hurrying throng
Caught hint of psalm and snatch of song—
The high strung song of plaint and prayer,
Of cross, and passion, and despair.
One, hurrying by amid the throng,
Who caught the sweetness of the song
Above the turmoil of the street,
Turned suddenly her weary feet,
And through the wide-flung doors passed in
From out the week-day whirl and din.

"Call me away from flesh and sense—
Thy grace, O God, can draw me thence."
In fervent tones the singers sang,
While solemnly the organ rang.
"From flesh and sense;" the words struck clear
Upon the stranger's listening ear.
"From flesh and sense;" she looked across
The sun-lit aisles, where glint and gloss
Of diamond fire and satin shone—
A Princess' raiment, that had won
A Prince's ransom in the past;
Across the aisles, then downward cast
Her seeking glance in bitter heed
Of raiment that scarce met the need
That winter keen and merciless
Brought home to her with savage stress.
And they, they neither toil nor spin,
These lilies fair, appareled in These costly robes, while others strive,
And mourn to find themselves alive
Beneath the burdens of the day,
That leave small time or need to pray.
"Call me away from flesh and sense,"
When flesh itself seems half drawn thence.

"For you, for you, O favored ones,
These silken stalls, these organ tones,"
Her bitter thought ran, as the prayer
Floated in music on the air:
"For you, for you, this house you call
The house of God; for me the thrall
Of toil and toil, from day to day,
While life wastes sordidly away
In vainest hope and dull despair
Of some sweet time, when one from care
May pause and rest a little space,
And meet life's bright things face to face.
But faint of heart, and very low
Of hope and comfort, I but know
In these dark days the needs of earth.
All else seems now of little worth;
And little worth your silken prayer
Against my wail of dull despair."

TWO STORIES WITH ONE MORAL.

"ONLY FORTY-SIX CENTS."

Walking leisurely up the main business street of the city the other day, I saw that the display window of a large clothing establishment was entirely filled with an artistic adjustment of white shirts. On a spacious cardboard was this notice, which I give verbatim:

"One hundred dozen of these unlaundried shirts, all-linen bosoms, cuffs and bands, at only forty-six cents."

Nothing strange about that! To the average passer-by, perhaps not. It might not attract attention, save to one in need of the article, or to a competitor in the trade. To me, however, it meant a great deal.

Entering the store I saw the proprietor, and asked if those goods were a part of a sheriff's or assignee's sale, as the reason for their very low price.

"No, sir; they are a regular-made shirt, and come from a first-class house in New York."

Continuing the conversation, I added: "You expect to realize something for handling these goods, don't you?"

"I expect to; yes."

"And the jobber that took your order had a margin of profit. I suppose?"

"That's what I argue."

"What about the wholesaler who sold to the jobber; doesn't he receive something for his trouble?"

"He intends to make a living, no doubt," was the terse reply.

"There's the manufacturer: he is to have some share of the profits, isn't he?"

"That's what he makes shirts for, I believe."

"Yes; then there is the raw material, spinning, etc.; all must be added to the original cost. Now, how much do you suppose the girl receives that made one of those shirts?"

The merchant shrugged his shoulders, gave me a searching look, and in a slow and distinct manner, as if he intended that he should not be misunderstood, said: "I don't know, and it is not my business."

"Yes it is," I rejoined, "it is everybody's business. Only forty-six cents for a shirt, bosom, cuffs, and bands all linen. The girl that made that shirt must soon starve, sir, go on to the street, commit suicide, or go mad. I wouldn't wear one of them if you were to pay me for it; my conscience wouldn't let me."

Noticing a look of incredulity, not unmingled with scorn, I read him the following, which I had only an hour before cut from an Eastern newspaper:

BANGOR, Me., July 27.—On the 18th inst. Blanche M. Abbott, of Bucksport, eighteen miles down the river, shot herself in this city. She had formerly worked in a ready-made clothing factory. On the very morning that the unhappy girl shot herself a man purchased a pair of trousers at a store in Brockport, Mass., and in one of the pockets he found this note:—

BUCKSPORT, Dec. 2, 1887.—I wonder into what part of the world these pants will roam, and hope that the one who buys them will send me a penny, as we have to work at starvation wages to make them.

—BLANCHE M. ABBOTT.

"Now, after reading this message do you tell me that it is not your business?" He turned on his heel and left me.

A set of men like a hungry horde of human wolves, conscienceless, heartless as to who goes down—whose life goes out—would crunch between the teeth of avarice, greed and gain, all hope, every honest and honorable impulse of the heart for a nobler and a purer life, and, like the galley slave of imperial Rome, death would be the "surcease of sorrow" to these poor working-girls. Are they not as those who in the morning say, "Would God it were even!" and at even say, "Would God it were morning?"

Talk about "the cry of the outcast of London!" The cry of the starving sewing-girls of America almost makes one to say, There is need of another Christ to die for the world!

Which shall it be, starve? go mad?
Suicide? or to the bad?

—Maj. E. T. Scott.

MISTRESS OR MAID.

I was in the attic putting away the winter clothing when I heard Richard's voice from the foot of the stairs.

"Caroline, there is a young lady waiting to see you."

I noticed a slight hesitation before the word "lady."

"Who is it; a lady did you say?" I asked as I descended the stairs.

"She isn't dressed in satin and velvet, but I think she is a lady," replied Richard, who has odd notions about some things.

"One of the relief committee, perhaps," I said, after he had told me that he had found her at the door when he came home, and that she had inquired for me by name.

"Whoever she may be, one may trust the clear light that shines from the windows of her soul," replied Richard.

I knew what he meant when she turned her large gray eyes full upon me. One might well call them windows, I thought, as I looked into the clear, honest depths. Only innocence and truth could be seen there. She was fair and slender; not angular, but delicate, like one recently recovered from illness, and a slight stoop in the shoulders indicated weakness, or a life of toil. I did not think of this at the time; I only looked into the expressive eyes and listened to the sweet, low voice. She had heard that I wanted a nurse-girl, and came to see if I thought she could fill the place. She had but recently come from the provinces. She loved children, and thought she could be trusted with them. Her mother had left the younger brothers to her care since she was ten years old.

"If you will be patient with me, ma'am, I think I can suit you," she said. "Mother says I'm slow, and can't take to new ways easily; but, if you don't get worried with me"—she nearly said "cross"—"I'm sure I can learn your ways. I always get flustered, if people worry, ma'am."

To be asked to be patient, to be cautioned against worry, was a new experience. I was not quite ready to employ a monitor. I hesitated, and finally asked her to call the following morning for my answer.

Richard had been so favorably impressed by the girl that before dinner was over I had decided to engage her. I found she had no friends in the city, only "James," an old schoolmate from home.

"Of course you know I cannot allow him to visit you here," I said.

"Ma'am?" inquired the sweet voice in real surprise.

"I cannot allow your friend to call upon you here," I repeated.

"Where shall I meet him, then?" she asked innocently.

"I'm sure I don't know," I replied. "It would be better for you not to see him at all."

"Ma'am?" she said again, but with such pain in the voice that I thought it best to change the subject.

Mandy Driscoll proved a treasure. The children loved her from the first, and after a few weeks I left them entirely to her care. She was very unselfish, willing to spend and be spent in their service. She grew round and rosy, and her pleasant face was often remarked by my visitors.

"Take care of that girl," said my mother. "Her face may be her misfortune."

"Oh, I trust Mandy!" I replied. "She is as innocent as the children."

"Perhaps too innocent. Is she often out?"

"Only Sunday and Thursday evenings. She is a regular little church-goer," I answered.

"Well, look out for her," persisted mother. "She's far too pretty for a girl in her position."

A year passed, and Mandy seemed quite content in my home. There was little occasion to "worry" the child, had I been so inclined; and I had ceased to have an anxious thought about her. She seemed to have no interest apart from my own, and proved so trustworthy that I had allowed her to assume almost the entire care of the house. After the children were asleep she was free to pass the evenings as she pleased; and, as social duties filled my own time, I knew little of her movements. She had seemed so thoroughly content, that when she announced her intention to leave me, I was greatly surprised.

"Leave me!" I exclaimed. "Why, Mandy, you are as necessary to us as the fire, or the gas! We can't get along without you."

But she was firm. She must go home. Perhaps—she seemed not sure—but perhaps she would come back some time. I saw that it gave her pain to leave us, and ceased to urge her to remain. There was probably some family reason, some trouble that she was unwilling to explain, I told Richard.

"Perhaps she is to be married," he suggested. "Oh, no; she has no followers. She is too much of a child to think of marrying," I replied.

But there came to me the recollection of the schoolmate whom she had not mentioned during the year she had been with us. Her devotion to the children had probably taken the place of that friendship, I thought. Mandy left us regretted by old and young. Every member of the family bestowed a parting gift, and her own distress, aggravated by the noisy grief of the children, made the parting somewhat painful. Months passed, and Mandy's name was seldom heard in the house. We had given up all hope of her return, and had ceased to wonder at her silence. One day a note was received asking me to call at a hospital where Mandy Driscoll was lying critically ill. The note was written in a perfunctory way by the nurse of the ward. At once all our former interest in our favorite revived. The children sent loving messages, and even Richard hastened my departure. He looked grave when I mentioned the name of the hospital, but I had no suspicion of its character until I sat by Mandy's bedside.

My tears fell upon the wasted hand while I listened to the sad story so often repeated in city and country.

"I longed to see you once more, Mrs. Harlow," she sobbed. "I could bear to have you know the truth, if I could only see you again. You know what you said, ma'am, when I engaged with you. I wouldn't deceive or disobey you after that; so I used to meet James on the street, and sometimes I was out very late when you didn't know it. It was being in the street that led to the wrong; for when it was cold or wet, James used to take me into some place where it was comfortable, and it wasn't always respectable, ma'am. I got careless and hardened by what I saw, and that made it easy to go wrong, ma'am, don't you see?"

Alas, yes! I saw it all. I drew from her a pitiful story of suffering during the months that had passed since she left us.

"Why did you not come to me?" I asked.

"Your heart would have been hard against me, ma'am. Women have no kindness toward girls like us."

It was too true. I should have turned from her. I did not need the physician's dictum to assure me that Mandy's trials would soon be over. The poor child had no wish to stay.

"God is more merciful than man," she said. "He forgives all sin. Mrs. Harlow, I don't believe there is another sin that brings a punishment so hard to bear; but nobody cares, and nobody helps us. Even these nurses despise us."

"Who did sin?" I asked myself, as I returned home—the old question asked so many hundreds of years ago. Was the innocent, childlike nurse-girl alone responsible? Alas, no! I was my sister's keeper, and I failed to keep my trust.—Congregationalist.

A PROPHECY OF SPURGEON'S CHILDHOOD.

Mr. Spurgeon, in a sermon on the blessing of Joseph, gave the following interesting reminiscence:

In closing, I wish to bear a personal testimony by narrating an incident in my own life. I have been preaching in Essex this week, and I took the opportunity to visit the place where my grandfather preached so long, and where I spent my earliest days. Last Wednesday was to me a day in which I walked like a man in a dream. Everybody seemed bound to recall some event or other of my childhood. What a story of divine love and mercy did it bring before my mind! Among other things, I sat down in a place that must ever be sacred to me. There stood in my grandfather's manse garden two arbors made of yew trees, cut into sugar-loaf fashion. Though the old manse has given way to a new one, and the old chapel has gone also, yet the yew trees flourish as aforetime. I sat down in the right hand arbor and bethought me of what had happened there many years ago.

When I was a young child staying with my grandfather, there came to preach in the village Mr. Knill, who had been a missionary at St. Petersburg, and a mighty preacher of the Gospel. He came to preach for the London Missionary Society, and arrived on the Saturday at the manse. He was a great soul-winner, and he soon spied out the boy. He said to me, "Where do you sleep? for I want to call you up in the morning." I showed him my little room. At six o'clock he called me up, and we went into that arbor. There, in the sweetest way, he told me of the love of Jesus, and of the blessedness of trusting in him and loving him in our childhood. With many a story he preached Christ to me, and told me how good God had been to him, and then he prayed that I might know the Lord and serve him. He knelt down in that arbor and prayed for me with his arms about my neck. He did not seem content unless I kept with him in the interval between the services, and he heard my childish talk with patient love. On Monday morning he did as on the Sabbath, and again on Tuesday. Three times he taught me and prayed with me, and before he had to leave, my grandfather had come back from the place where he had gone to preach, and all the family were gathered to morning prayer. Then, in the presence of them all, Mr. Knill took me on his knee, and said, "This child will one day preach the Gospel, and he will preach it to great multitudes. I am persuaded that he will preach in the chapel of Rowland Hill, where (I think he said) I am now the minister." He spoke very solemnly, and called upon all present to witness what he said. Then he gave me sixpence as a reward if I would learn the hymn:

"God moves in a mysterious way
His wonders to perform."

I was made to promise that when I preached in Rowland Hill's chapel that hymn should be sung. Think of that as a promise from a child! Would it ever be other than an idle dream?

Years flew by. After I had begun for some little time to preach in London, Dr. Alexander Fletcher had to give the annual sermon to children in Surrey Chapel, but, as he was taken ill, I was asked in a hurry to preach to the children. "Yes," I said, "I will, if the children will sing 'God moves in a mysterious way.' I have made a promise long ago that so that should be sung." And so it was: I preached in Rowland Hill's chapel, and the hymn was sung. My emotions on that occasion I cannot describe. Still that was not the chapel which Mr. Knill intended. All unsought by me, the minister at Wotton-under-Edge, which was Mr. Hill's summer residence, invited me to preach there. I went on the condition that the congregation should sing, "God moves in a mysterious way"—which was also done. After that I went to preach for Mr. Richard Knill himself, who was then at Chester. What a meeting we had! Mark this! he was preaching in the theatre! His preaching in a theatre took away from me all fear about preaching in secular buildings, and set me free for the campaigns in Exeter Hall and the Surrey Music Hall. How much this had to do with other theatre services you know.

"God moves in a mysterious way
His wonders to perform."

After more than forty years of the Lord's loving-kindness, I sat again in that arbor! No doubt it is a mere trifle for outsiders to hear, but to me it was an overwhelming moment. The present minister of Stambourn meeting-house, and the members of his family, including his son and his grandchildren, were in the garden, and I could not help calling them together around that arbor, while I praised the Lord for his goodness.

One irresistible impulse was upon me; it was to pray God to bless those lads that stood around me. Do you not see how the memory begat the prayer? I wanted them to remember when they grew up my testimony of God's goodness to me; and for that same reason I tell it to you young people who are around me this morning. God has blessed me all my life long, and redeemed me from all evil, and I pray that he may be your God. You that have godly parents I would specially address. I beseech you to follow in their footsteps, that you may one day speak of the Lord as they were able to do in their day. Remember that special promise, "I love them that love me, and those that seek me early shall find me."—Word and Work.

TEMPERANCE.

PROHIBITION CONFIRMED IN IOWA.

At Des Moines, Iowa, Oct. 18, the Supreme Court handed down an opinion in the important case of the State of Iowa vs. Con Creeden and the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railway Company, appellants. The court affirms the decision of the lower court and fully sustains the Iowa liquor law. The case arose in a justice court on information alleging that the man Creeden, a noted law-breaker, owned certain liquors stored in the Rock Island warehouse and intended for sale in violation of law. The liquors were seized, tried, and condemned. The case was appealed to the District Court, the railroad company appearing as parties to the suit, and the decree of condemnation was sustained. An appeal was taken to the Supreme Court, and ably argued by Attorneys Wright and McCaughan for appellants, and Attorney General Stone and J. A. Harvey for the State. The decision in the case of Bowman vs. the Chicago & Northwestern was cited as adverse to the claims of the State in this case. But the Iowa Supreme Court holds that in that noted decision the United States Supreme Court only affirms the right of common carriers to transport liquors, but not to hold them in warehouse to enable the owner to sell in violation of the law. The Court says: "The United States Supreme Court in many decisions has held that the States have the constitutional right to forbid the sale of intoxicating liquors within their borders. When the Constitution conferred upon Congress the power to regulate commerce between the States, it was not intended that provisions should be made by Congress to affect the use of the subjects of commerce. A carrier is a servant of commerce, and is protected under constitutional provisions for the regulations of commerce in the discharge of all the duties of a carrier recognized by the law. The regulations of commerce reach him while he is in the discharge of duties pertaining to commerce. When he ceases to be a carrier he is beyond the protection provided by regulations for commerce. If he ceases to be a carrier and becomes a warehouse man he cannot be protected as a carrier. In truth, commerce, so far as transportation is concerned, ceased to have connection with the liquors when they ceased to be held by the carrier for transportation. After that they were held for storage. It is made plain by a consideration of the facts that the railroad company held the liquors under special arrangement with Con Creeden, six successive shipments of liquor being made, each containing less than five gallons, and were held from six to fifteen days before they were seized, and it had been the practice of the railroad company for some time before these shipments were received, to hold shipments of whisky in the same way. The little freight bills of 34 cents on each shipment were not paid until the package was delivered. Con Creeden did not present demands for the whisky, but sent an express wagon to get a jug at a time as it was wanted for sale in violation of the law. He was a notorious violator of the law; the packages were marked 'whisky,' and all the circumstances lead to the conclusion that the railway company held the liquor for Con Creeden under an arrangement that it should aid him to evade the law."

PROHIBITION IN KANSAS.

Judge Guthrie, at Topeka, Oct. 16, impaneled a grand jury, and in charging them to make special inquiry as to the enforcement of the prohibitory law, he took occasion to emphatically indorse the law. In the course of his remarks he said: "For nearly five years there has not been a saloon or any place where intoxicating liquors were openly sold or given away in this county. The law on this subject has been as strictly obeyed in this city as the statute providing for the punishment of murder, robbery, or larceny. Hundreds of thousands of dollars have been invested here in this city by strangers on the conviction that public sentiment favored an honest, fair enforcement of the law prohibiting the unlawful sale of intoxicating liquors, and it is believed that these conditions have induced thousands of families to change their homes from sister States to this city and State so that they might, with their children, escape the evil effects of the saloon. And these conditions and environments are inducing the friends and patrons of learning to establish with magnificent endowments colleges and schools in this and other cities of the State, and parents are sending their children from distant States to these colleges to be educated, with the expectation and hope that their children may enjoy the benefits of society, unpolluted with the baneful saloon."

Since Mayor Cregier took hold of the city government he has attended various Sunday gatherings at which speech-making and beer-drinking were given prominent places on the programs. He has made Sunday speeches at these Sunday gatherings and has watched other people drink Sunday beer.

There have been numerous largely attended Sunday meetings in this city of late in which men of prominence have spoken in favor of enforcing the law against Sunday saloons. There was no beer on the premises. Neither was Mayor Cregier there.

Why is it that the Mayor goes to Sunday picnics with beer on the side while he does not attend Sunday law-and-order meetings? Does the Mayor think that Sunday beer can elect him to a second term? Probably.

Though the Mayor is gray-headed he has a great deal to learn yet. And he ought to begin learning it pretty soon.—Daily News.

While drunk at Pittsburg, J. M. Deeley threw his 5-year-old boy into the river, the fall being 45 feet. The child was rescued, but cannot recover. Deeley says that he intended only to frighten the lad, but that he slipped from his grasp.

Will Jellings, employed on the Frank place, near Memphis, Tenn., became intoxicated Wednesday night, and on entering a room occupied by several Swedes began firing with a pistol. After one of the Swedes had been wounded another seized a Winchester rifle and shot Jellings, killing him instantly.

BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE OLD TESTAMENT.

LESSON VI.—Fourth Quarter.—Nov. 10.

SUBJECT.—David's Grief for Absalom.—2 Sam. 18: 18-33.

GOLDEN TEXT.—A foolish son is a grief to his father, and bitterness to her that bare him.—Prov. 17: 25.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

DAILY READINGS.—M.—2 Sam. 15: 14-37. T.—2 Sam. 16: 1-23. W.—2 Sam. 17: 1-29. T.—2 Sam. 18: 1-33. F.—Psa. 3: 1-8. S.—Psa. 4: 1-8. S.—Psa. 42, 43.

COMMENTS ON THE S. S. LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. Absalom's Pillar, v. 18. From times anterior even to history, monarchs and distinguished men have sought to perpetuate their memory by building splendid monuments, or vast burial places, in which their remains might be entombed. God has made use of the pride and vainglory of man in a wonderful manner to confirm the truth of Scripture, in the recent finding of the mummified body of the very Pharaoh who so oppressed the children of Israel, with others of his dynasty. But after all, his real monument is contained in the first chapters of Exodus. Absalom, when he reared this memorial pillar to keep his name alive, little thought that he was building another monument for himself that would outlast both that and the cairn of stones marking an outlaw's grave, under which he was finally buried. Our deeds live after us. They may not, like Absalom's, become a beacon light of warning thousands of years after; but how wide or far extended may be their influence no one can predicate. Souls may be richer or poorer through all eternity in consequence of our having lived. We are told of the righteous that "their name shall be in everlasting remembrance." It may not be carved in marble or brass. Many of the most saintly souls have lived and died in the greatest obscurity. There have been multitudes of martyrs whose ashes have been scattered to the four winds, but they are not forgotten of God. They stand recorded in his "book of remembrance," and how poor the grandest monument man can rear beside the honor of a place on those ever-enduring tablets!

2. The tidings brought to David, vs. 19-32. An attentive reading of David's history will show many causes that were sapping the power and stability of his throne, besides his own immediate sin with Bathsheba. He was only a weak and doting parent where he should have showed himself the just and righteous king. Such a crime as Ammon's, committed in the royal family and going unpunished, must have demoralized the whole nation, and paved the way for anarchy and rebellion. Nothing will undermine our Republican government so easily as the spectacle of immorality in high places. It is the patriotic duty of every voter to know that the man for whom he casts his ballot bears an unstained character. It is also a dangerous thing for the law to show respect of persons. If David's sons had filled private stations, they could not have committed such crimes as they did without being punished; and it is always an evil precedent when a man can violate the law, and because he is wealthy, high in office, or otherwise distinguished, escape his just deserts. Masonry is inimical to our government because it favors one class at the expense of another. Had the murderers of Dr. Cronin not belonged to a secret order, they would have been convicted and sentenced ere this. A lodge oath which protects and favors criminals, strikes at the very heart of justice and law. It is supposed that David's numbering of the people occurred about this time, in which act he showed a pride and ambition worthy of a military despot, but very unbecoming to a theocratic king. It was an unpopular movement even with the people, and the plague which followed must have been laid by them at the door of their monarch for persisting in a measure so impolitic and unconstitutional. Pride goes before a fall in nations as well as individuals. David prepared against a foreign foe while his own son Absalom was not only conspiring to take his crown and life, but the very means to carry on his conspiracy successfully was furnished by his weak and foolish father. It is a similar mistake when politicians talk about increasing our army and navy, while they license the drink traffic to prey on the nation's very vitals.

3. David's lament for Absalom, v. 33. David could comfort himself with no thought of future re-union as in the case of Bathsheba's child, and so his lament for Absalom has gone down the ages, the voice of utter, remediless despair, and the type of that sorrow which Christ himself must feel over lost souls.

PRACTICAL SUGGESTIONS FROM PELOUBET'S QUARTERLY.

Absalom from out the far-off past is still pointing our modern youth to certain great lessons his career teaches us:

1. The way of transgressors is hard.
2. The success of the wicked is short, and then he is like chaff which the wind bloweth away.
3. Sin is sometimes attractive at first, but at last it biteth like a serpent and stingeth like an adder.
4. The way to true success is not through disobedience to parents.
5. No failure is so terrible as the failure of a life; no ruin like the ruin of a soul.
6. The death of the wicked is lighted by no ray of hope.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—Rev. Charles F. Goss, pastor of the Chicago Avenue Church, this city, is much broken down in health, and has been granted a six months' vacation. Mr. Goss has been working very hard of late, and at a meeting of the church committee Mr. Moody told them that Mr. Goss was in bad physical condition. They therefore granted him six months' leave of absence on full pay, retaining him as the pastor. Mr. Goss will remain here for about a month to attend to his classes in the training school. He will then leave for the Pacific coast. During Mr. Goss's absence his pulpit will be filled by Mr. Moody and others.

—The resolution of S. Corning Judd, of Chicago, in the Episcopal convention, to substitute for the words "Protestant Episcopal" the words "American church," amounting to a change in the title of the church, was, on motion of Mr. Judd, referred to the next convention.

—The Adventists of Virginia were in session all day Tuesday last at Scremersville, Spottsylvania county, awaiting the coming of the Lord, the wildest excitement prevailing, but retired to their homes about midnight when satisfied that the world was to exist a little while longer. It was the forty-fifth anniversary of the going out to meet the Saviour in October, 1844.

—Mr. Moody is not too old to be aggressive in religion. Last Sabbath he left his Institute work and went to Rockford, Ill., where he addressed five big meetings, beginning at 9 A. M. Two progressive euchre clubs, composed of prominent residents, met the night before, and Mr. Moody caused a sensation by classing that game with horse-racing and gambling, and said those who indulged in it could not hope for heaven.

—The general executive committee of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal church met in Detroit last Wednesday. Mrs. Danforth, of Chicago, was chosen president, and Mrs. Gracey, of Buffalo, secretary.

—The forty-third annual meeting of the American Missionary Association is being held this week in the New England Church on the North Side in this city, October 29-31. The meeting opened at 3 o'clock on Tuesday afternoon. On Tuesday evening the annual sermon was preached by Rev. R. R. Meredith, D.D., of Brooklyn, N. Y. At the Wednesday morning session papers are to be presented by the secretaries and discussed. Wednesday and Thursday are to be devoted to addresses by representative clergymen and laymen upon the different phases of the work of the Association. On Thursday afternoon there is to be a woman's meeting, with reports and addresses on the Woman's Work of the American Missionary Association, by lady missionaries from the field, who will represent the work among the white and colored people of the South, and among the Indians. Ladies connected with missionary societies are cordially invited to attend this meeting.

—The Classon Avenue Presbyterian church has been sufficiently impressed with the importance of the work of the Evangelical Alliance and the relations of the Boston meeting to it, to surrender their pastor, Rev. Dr. L. T. Chamberlain, for a month's service of preparatory work. During November Dr. Chamberlain will hold meetings under the auspices of the Alliance in a score or more of the leading cities of New England, to acquaint the public more fully with the aims and methods of the Alliance work, and with the importance of the great conference in Boston the first week in December.

—The answer to the Shaster is India; the answer to Confucianism is China; the answer to the Koran is Turkey; the answer to the Bible is Christian civilization of Protestant Europe and America.

—Hartford Theological Seminary (Congregational) has a woman in the class just entering. She is the wife of a member of the senior class, and has entered on a course of thorough preparation for foreign missionary service.

—The Canadian Missionary Mackay, on the Chinese island of Formosa, is very strongly advocating the training of native preachers for the work among their countrymen. One of his reasons is an economical one; an American, even if he lives like a native, will cost $1,000, whilst a genuine native will live on $100. Still, the training of a native ministry must be done by foreigners.

—Mrs. Davis, daughter of the late Jacob Sleeper, of Boston, sailed last month for Japan. She proposes a trip around the world, and will visit the Methodist missions. Mrs. Davis is greatly interested in mission work, and has contributed most liberally toward its support. She donated $5,000 toward the Zenana paper in India, established by the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society.

—Dr. Henry H. Jessup writes in the Church at Home and Abroad giving a list of the books which the Turkish Government has recently refused to permit to enter the empire. He says: "It can be safely said that all books on the following subjects will be prohibited by the imperial censorship: The Turkish Empire, Russia, Persia and Egypt, Syria and Palestine; Mohammed, Islam, the Koran, religions of the East; travels in Turkey, Syria and Palestine; all universal histories of the Middle Ages and the Crusades; all missionary magazines, reports, essays, reviews, biographies."

—The Sunday observance agitation has spread to Russia, and 1,200 merchants of St. Petersburg have declared their readiness to close their places of business on that day.

—Mrs. Elliott F. Shepard proposes to erect in New York a large seven-story, fire-proof structure, and present it to the Young Woman's Christian Association. It is to be used as a lodging house and home for working women.

—Sir Charles Bernard recently stated that the Christian Karens numbered 200,000, or fully one-third of the Karen people, and that they are not only self-supporting, but send missionaries to Siam.

—A Hebrew colonization society, numbering 500 members, has been organized in Pittsburg, Pa., to be known as "The Lovers of Zion," the object of which is the colonization of Palestine with Hebrews. About 1,800 colonists have gone to Palestine from this country for that purpose already.

—The Bible is now translated into the languages of nine-tenths of the people of the world, whereas in the early part of the present century it could be read by only one-fifth of them.

LODGE NOTES.

The corner-stone of the new Jewish Synagogue in Providence, R. I., was laid by the Masonic Grand Lodge of that State on the 23d ult.

Persia is one of the few countries where the holding of Masonic lodges is forbidden by law. Masoffs were very anxious when the Shah fell under the influence of the Grand Master, Albert Edward, Prince of Wales, he would yield and be initiated.

It is reported that the son of a wealthy Chicagoan who entered Harvard University this year, earned a membership in one of the most popular secret societies of the college by blacking boots and selling papers in the public square at Cambridge for the space of one week.

It is said in the Masonic Chronicle, that by giving the signs of a Master Mason a member of the Madras Civil Service once found his way into the innermost chamber of an East Indian temple, where the heathen priests were alone allowed to enter. What does this prove?

Three resolutions were voted down in the California Grand Lodge of Good Templars—one to reduce the salary of the Grand Secretary; one to abolish the Rescue and adopt the California Prohibitionist as the organ, and another to rescind the law of the order against dancing in lodge rooms on lodge nights.

In the Grand Lodge of New Hampshire Knights of Honor Grand Dictator Burbank reported: "I regret to be compelled to report a diminished membership. We number less than we did one year ago, when you placed me in the high and honorable position of grand dictator. We have lost by death and suspension more than we have initiated."

The Knights-Templar triennial convave for the third time has been made a traveling advertizing show for the San Francisco liquor dealers and mixers. The California delegation had, as usual, a choice and big show of the liquid industries of the city of San Francisco always on tap, and they had by far the largest stream of worshipers to their sacred and strongly-flavored shrine.

A large number of small incendiary fires have occurred in Kansas City recently, and the police have just discovered that the incendiaries were a band of school-boys ranging in age from 11 to 15 years. They were regularly organized, and called themselves "Capt. Kid's Pets." The members were bound by blood-curdling oaths to not reveal the secrets of the order, and all their plans were carried out according to written orders signed in blood from the arms of the young desperadoes. The leaders of the band are under arrest.

Chief Arthur, of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, said just before the Denver meeting: "This convention will be the most important ever held by the brotherhood. The question of federation with other labor organizations will be decided. I am opposed to the federation, and, if the order is not maintained separate and distinct from all other organizations, the engineers must look for a new chief. The brotherhood is a peculiarly unique organization, and cannot mingle with any other labor association with benefit to either, in my opinion."

Ex-Mayor Ames, of Minneapolis, Minn., whose remarks about Ireland on his return from Europe lately are said to have caused a revulsion of feeling among his Irish admirers, has received five threatening letters signed "Irishman," "Catholic," "Clan-na-Gael," etc. They warn him that if he does not leave the country he will suffer the fate of Dr. Cronin. The handwriting of each is different from that of the others. Mr Ames' friends claim to know the origin of the letters, and promise to make it interesting for the authors. There are said to be 300 Clan-na-Gael members in Minneapolis.

In the Knights of Honor Grand Lodge of New Jersey the state of the finances caused an interesting discussion, and the finance committee's recommendation made it clear that an increase in the revenues was needed to keep the Grand Lodge out of debt. Every attempt to increase the resources, however, was voted down, and at the next session there will be a deficiency of several hundred dollars. The grand reporter showed that, according to supplementary report, 415 members were initiated during the year ending Sept. 30, against 457 the previous year, making the total membership in the State at this date 4,100; total membership on July 1 was 4,266. The amount paid the Supreme Lodge was $93,858.99. The amount received on fifty-four deaths was $101,000, showing that $7,141.01 was overdrawn.

In the convention of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers at Denver the grievance committee concluded its work. Most of the cases were referred back to the various divisions for final settlement. A number of the lodges suspended during the Missouri Pacific strike were restored to good standing in the brotherhood. Among the lodges reinstated was that of St. Louis. At the time set for the election of officers the entire day was taken up, instead, in trying one of the grand officers, against whom serious charges had been preferred. Rumor has it that Chief Arthur is the man on trial. Though questioned upon this point, nearly all the delegates deny it.

HOPE FOR THE SICK.

One Remedy for One Disease.

(From Medical Journal.)

"The four greatest medical centers of the world are London, Paris, Berlin and Vienna. These cities have immense hospitals teeming with suffering humanity. Crowds of students throng the wards, studying under the Professors in charge. The most renowned physicians of the world teach and practice here, and the institutions are storehouses of medical knowledge and experience. With a view of making this experience available to the public, the Hospital Remedy Co., at great expense, secured the prescriptions of these hospitals, prepared the specifics, and although it would cost from $25 to $100 to secure the attention of their distinguished originators, yet in this way these valuable medicines are sold at the price of the quack patent medicines that flood the market and absurdly claim to cure every ill from a single bottle. The want always felt for a reliable class of domestic remedies is now filled with perfect satisfaction. The Hospital Remedies make no unreasonable claims. The specific for Catarrh cures that and nothing else; so with the specific for Bronchitis, Consumption and Lung Troubles; Rheumatism is cured by No. 3, while troubles of Digestion, Stomach, Liver and Kidneys have their own cure. To these is added a specific for Fever and Ague, one for female weakness—a general tonic and blood-maker that makes blood and gives form and fullness, and an incom-

The Facts Stated

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canada gun boat, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasonry to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his name to the letter, but attaches his affidavit to it. In closing his letter he writes: "I now look back, through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the 'Anti-Masonic excitement' by a sincere desire to vindicate the violated laws of my country and to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of 'secret societies'."

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. (Chicago, National Association.) Single copy, 5 cents.

The Christian's Secret OF A Happy Life. 28th THOUSAND.

Baptist Commendation.

"We are delighted with this book. It reaches to the very core of Christian experience, and is eminently experimental in its teachings. It meets the doubts and difficulties of conscientious seekers after the bread and water of life, but whose efforts result only in alternate failure and victory. The author, without claiming to be a theologian, sends out the results of a happy and rich experience to help others to a happy Christian life."—Baptist Weekly.

Presbyterian Endorsement.

"The book is so truly and reverentially devout in its spirit that it disarms criticism. It contains so much that is sound and practical, so much that, if heeded, will make our lives better, happier and more useful, that the intelligent reader, who really wishes to lead a life 'hid with Christ in God' can scarcely fail to derive profit from its perusal."—Interior.

Methodist Word of Praise.

"We have not for years read a book with more light and profit. It is not a theological book. No effort is made to change the theological views of a one. The author has a rich experience, and tells it in a plain and delightful manner."—Christian Advocate.

United Brethren's Approval.

"We have seldom met with a more interesting volume, abounding throughout with apt illustrations we have failed to find a dry line from title-page to end."—Religious Telescope.

Congregational Comment.

"It contains much clear pungent reasoning and in interesting incident. It is a practical and experimental lesson taught out of God's word, and is worthy universal circulation."—Church Union.

HOME AND HEALTH.THE HOME DOCTOR.

There are certain simple facts in regard to the care of the sick that every young girl should know before she is called upon to preside over a home of her own. Physicians say there are few women capable of making a poultice, a cup of beef tea, or piece of toast properly. If one has never had the care of an invalid, there may be some excuse for not knowing practically how to make a poultice, but one can at least inform herself as far as the theory goes. A cold, clammy poultice is positively harmful. To make a linseed poultice, pour a quantity of warm water into a basin, stand on the back of the range, and scatter in the linseed meal, stirring with a knife until the proper consistency. In the use of the water you must be governed by the size of the poultice required. If it is too dry it will not hold together; if too wet, it is damp and uncomfortable. It should be moist without being sloppy. Now take a clean piece of muslin a couple of inches larger than the poultice is to be, spread it with the mixture, cover with another piece of muslin, and quickly baste over an inch all around. Do this without removing it from the hot dish, on which it should be carried to the bedside. If it is necessary to fasten it on, do this with folds of bandaging, and cover with a compress of flannel to retain the heat. A piece of oil silk is less clumsy, and will keep moisture from the bed clothes. There are many different formulas for preparing beef tea, but the simplest and best is as follows: Cover one pound of lean beef from the round with a pint of cold water. Have the butcher chop it fine as for Hamburger steak; beat it in the water with a silver fork for ten minutes; place over the fire, simmer for twenty minutes, strain and set aside to cool, in order to remove any little flakes of fat that may form. When ready to serve make it hot, season with salt only, and serve with thin, brown toast, or little wafer crackers.—American Agriculturist.

In watching the movements of a professional nurse in the sick room, it is surprising to note how many little things seem to be more the result of tact than of training, and could just as well be done by a novice. For example, see how scrupulous the professional is to take good care of the patient's belongings. She does not throw the clothing which has been removed in a heap over a chair, but hangs up each article neatly, or puts it in a proper place. Even if a person be not remarkable for orderliness in health, it is annoying, when lying in bed, to see a room in confusion. The trained nurse also has respect for the harmless whims of her patient, who, perhaps, is fussy about having certain articles put in a particular place. It is just as well to pay attention to individual choice, even in such small matters as arranging bureau drawers, or placing furniture or ornaments. Nor does the professional wait to be asked when the sheet needs to be straightened, or the pillows turned, or the curtains adjusted. She seems constantly to put herself in the place of the person who is ill, and thus acquires a thoughtfulness for others' comfort, which should be the possession of every woman, whether trained in a hospital or a common household.—Selected.

MANY A LIFE

HAS been saved by the prompt use of Ayer's Pills. Travelers by land or sea are liable to constipation or other derangements of the stomach and bowels which, if neglected, lead to serious and often fatal consequences. The most sure means of correcting these evils is the use of Ayer's Cathartic Pills. The prudent sailing-master would as soon go to sea without his chronometer as without a supply of these Pills. Though prompt and energetic in operation, Ayer's Pills leave no ill effects; they are purely vegetable and sugar-coated; the safest medicine for old and young, at home or abroad.

"For eight years I was afflicted with constipation, which at last became so bad that the doctors could do no more for me. Then I began to take Ayer's Pills, and soon the bowels recovered their natural and regular action, so that now I am in health."—Mrs. C. E. Clark, Tewksbury, Massachusetts.

"I regard Ayer's Pills as one of the most reliable general remedies of our times. They have been in use in my family for affections requiring a purgative, and have given unvarying satisfaction. We have found them an excellent remedy for colds and light fevers."—W. R. Woodson, Fort Worth, Texas.

"For several years I have relied more upon Ayer's Pills than upon anything else in the medicine chest, to regulate my bowels and those of the ship's crew. These Pills are not severe in their action, but do their work thoroughly. I have used them with good effect for the cure of rheumatism, kidney troubles, and dyspepsia."—Capt. Mueller, Steamship Felicia, New York City.

"I have found Ayer's Cathartic Pills to be a better family medicine for common use than any other pills within my knowledge. They are not only very effective, but safe and pleasant to take—qualities which must make them valued by the public."—Jules Hauel, Perfumer, Philadelphia, Pa.

PAGAN COUNTERFEITS

IN THE

Christian Church.

A pamphlet of 52 pages, by Chas. A. S. Temple.

The following from Rev. H. H. Hinman shows his estimate of its contents:

"I have read with great interest 'Pagan Counterfeits in the Christian Church' by Chas. A. S. Temple. I regard the subject discussed as important, and its presentation both able and timely. There is a most manifest drift in all our Protestant denominations towards unauthorized ritualism and the substitution of human inventions in place of the simplicity of the Gospel, as given by Christ and his apostles. In calling attention to this tidal wave of formalism, the author has conferred a lasting benefit on the church of Protestantism."

Dumplings with Royal Baking Powder

No dessert is more delicious, wholesome and appetizing than a well-made dumpling, filled with the fruit of the season. By the use of the Royal Baking Powder the crust is always rendered light, flaky, tender and digestible. Dumplings made with it, baked or boiled, will be dainty and wholesome, and may be eaten steaming hot with perfect impunity.

RECIPE.—One quart of flour; thoroughly mix with it three teaspoons of Royal Baking Powder and a small teaspoon of salt; rub in a piece of butter or lard the size of an egg, and then add one large potato, grated in the flour; after the butter is well mixed, stir in milk and knead to the consistency of soft biscuit dough; break off pieces of dough large enough to close over four quarters of an apple (or other fruit as desired) without rolling, and lay in an earthen dish (or steamer) and steam until the fruit is tender. Bake if preferred.

In all receipts calling for cream of tartar and soda, substitute Royal Baking Powder. Less trouble, never fails, makes more appetizing and wholesome food and is more economical. Royal Baking Powder is specially made for use in the preparation of the finest and most delicate cookery.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

COUNTRY.

Freight business has reached such proportions that all of the roads are short of cars and engines. Never in the history of railroading has so much freight been handled.

Among subscriptions to the world's fair at New York Thursday was $100,000 by Cornelius Vanderbilt, $100,000 by the New York Central railroad, and $50,000 by the Wagner Palace Car company.

Leading citizens in the Trinity district of Catahoula Parish, Louisiana, have organized a vigilance committee to protect Negro laborers from the outrages of night raiders.

A call for a mass-meeting has been issued at Richmond, Va., the purpose being the formation of an organization to secure white nurses for white children. It is asserted that lunacy is on the increase among Negroes, and that their moral laxity is simply deplorable.

Suffering from famine in the districts in Dakota where there has been absolute failure of crops this year is threatened, and there is an urgent demand that it should be averted by prompt relief. This cannot be done until the local authorities organize and collect the facts and inform the public.

The City Council of Kansas City passed Friday night, over the Mayor's second veto, an appropriation of $1,000 for the entertainment of the Pan-Americans, notwithstanding that they had been properly notified that the passage of the appropriation violated the city charter and left them liable to arrest and imprisonment.

Near Franklin, Pa., Friday, a number of school children found a dynamite bomb, which they exploded in attempting to open it with a knife. Two boys were fatally hurt, and eight others are in a critical condition.

A switch that had been broken open caused the wreck of the Atlantic express on the Wabash road, near Keller's Station, Ind., Thursday evening. A traveling fireman was killed, and three or four employees were wounded, but the passengers miraculously escaped.

Wreckers, as alleged, caused the destruction of freight train No. 92 on the Lake Erie and Western road, near Kokomo, Ind., early Friday morning. The explosion of twelve oil tanks fired the wreck, Engineer Mehl, Fireman Edward Burnett, and Head Brakeman John Spellman perishing in the flames.

The scourge of diphtheria has made its appearance throughout central Illinois. At Illiopolis the public schools have been closed on account of the disease, and several deaths are reported. There were two deaths reported at Decatur, and others at other places in central Illinois. It is said to be caused by decaying vegetation.

Reports from Michigan are to the effect that owing to the continued drought forest fires are starting in every direction. Farmers are obliged to haul water for miles to water their stock, and fall wheat is rotting in the ground.

The LaSalle county, Illinois, grand jury, which has been in session nearly two weeks, returned indictments against fifty saloon-keepers for violating the Sunday liquor laws. Thirty of the indictments are against saloon-keepers in Ottawa.

The copious rainfall in California has damaged late grapes and wheat that had not been harvested. The precipitation has been heavier than in any previous October in the history of the signal service.

In a fight at Plymouth, Pa., Tuesday, among a party of Polish Catholics who held the parsonage against the orders of the Bishop, and a body of officers, Chief of Police Melvin had a leg broken, and other persons were badly hurt. The expulsion from the priesthood of Father Warnegari gave rise to the trouble.

The village of Woodville, Ohio, is scourged with an epidemic of diphtheria and typhoid fever. Last week ten deaths occurred from the latter disease, and nearly as many from the former. The local physician has at present some fifty cases on his hands. Business has been almost entirely suspended.

Judge J. F. Hughes has caused a lively commotion in central Illinois by his instruction to the grand jury to indict those who violate the law by playing base-ball on Sunday. This will include the base-ball clubs of Decatur, Monticello, Cerro Gordo, Maroa, Arcola, and most all the clubs in central Illinois, all of whom have played at the Decatur Base-ball Park on Sunday during the last few months.

At Wichita, Kan., Tuesday, an engine on the Santa Fe line struck a street car at a crossing, seriously injuring three young ladies and slightly injuring several others. The car was hurled a distance of sixty feet.

FOREIGN.

The Nihilists are again active in St. Petersburg, and the city during the past month has been flooded with their revolutionary proclamations. The police are entirely at a loss to explain how these documents are printed or distributed.

A cable dispatch at Berlin has been received from Captain Wissman stating that reliable news has been received concerning Emin Pasha and Henry M. Stanley, Signor Casati, and six Englishmen. They are all expected to arrive at Mawapwa at the latter part of November. Captain Wissman also says that he defeated a force of insurgents near Somwe, and killed seventy of them.

The steamer Quinte was burned to the water's edge near Deseronto, Canada, Thursday night. Five lives were lost, and probably more. Details of the disaster show that the fire originated in the engine-room and spread with inconceivable rapidity, the steamer burning like tinder and being ablaze in a very few moments.

An explosion of dynamite cartridges at Montreal, Quebec, Thursday morning, killed a young man and seriously injured five other persons, including three women.

Our standing charge against the Masonic lodge, that its members control the press, is equally good against the Jesuits. "Washington in the Lap of Rome" is not altogether a myth, and we fear is not even an exaggeration. These secret emissaries of Rome are at the National Capital, using and abusing the government for its purposes. Joseph Cook says that the men sent from Boston to Washington to investigate in regard to Romanism reported that "there does not go out of the capital of this nation any telegraph dispatch over the lines of the Associated Press touching Roman Catholic interests, without being first submitted to a Roman Catholic official."

The United States government has been expending millions on a new war fleet. Every few weeks we are asked to read how this or that new vessel made so many miles an hour on her trial trip. But as we have no war on hand, and hope to have none, like a big boy with a new top, Uncle Sam proposes to send his new toys over to Europe to show what he can do when he undertakes a job, and to have a little boastful satisfaction in comparing his ships with the big fellows of old England that are such a trouble to keep in order. If the government would go into the toy business for the poor children of our cities it would be well enough, but for the accommodation of grown men it has the appearance of folly.

It helps us to understand the nature and folly of war preparations to mark the course of Great Britain. Her great fleets are comparatively worthless if war should break out, yet Parliament year after year votes millions for more ships. The government does not pass unquestioned for this extravagance and waste. The people complain that the millions are misspent. The government replies through its ministers that the fault is with the inventors. It is they who should be disarmed, not the nation. The admirals and the generals always want the latest and best of warlike implements, but invention outstrips manufacture. While a big ship or a big gun is being manufactured after the most approved model, before it is completed some new invention makes the work "obsolete." If this year the newest and best arms are provided for the troops, in two years these will have become the poorest weapons in Europe. So the "obsolete" ship of to-day was the perfect ship of a little while ago. "We sometimes hear," said Mr. Goschen, a parliamentary leader, "of a European convention for disarmament, but if that cannot be attained, it would be a very great gain if there could be a disarmament of inventors."

Wisconsin University is experimenting with secret societies. A few days since a student from Chippewa Falls experienced a hazing at the hands of the society men, and was so severely handled as to demand the interposition of the law. Directly a number of students summoned as witnesses left for home, and the legal inquiry was suspended until they could be chased down and brought back. After a dozen witnesses had been examined under oath there was hardly any more knowledge of the case than before it occurred. Judge Keyes, becoming exasperated at the unwillingness of one witness to answer a question, said that if there was something more binding than an oath among students or others, the people of the State wanted to know it. The learned judge has perhaps to learn one of the most obvious of facts respecting an oath of a secret lodge. We hope he will not, however, as Judge McConnell has seemed to do in the Cronin trial, dodge this knowledge when it comes his way, or blink at it when it shines in his eyes.

Judge Gordon of Philadelphia lately said: "Of all crimes, perjury is the one that should be looked upon with the greatest severity and be punished accordingly. It touches justice at its fountain. It is never committed under sudden temptation, but is always a crime of deliberation. It is important that it should be known in the community that this is a crime that cannot be committed with impunity, and nothing can be urged in its extenuation." The courts are few that could not furnish examples of this great crime directly attributable to the oaths of the secret lodge. The United States judges of Utah had to proceed upon the theory that Mormons would commit perjury as a religious duty. The Jesuits are instructed to do the same thing. The Cronin trial already finds forgetful witnesses when the Clan-na-Gael affairs are penetrated. There is no believing a "good" Mason when the affairs of his lodge are under criticism. He is bound by his vile lodge oath "to conceal." When shall we be done toying with this great crime-breeding system of the lodge?

The Pan-American tourists have scrutinized the work of our American institutions and the results of our enterprise and genius; they have also had the opportunity of expressing their appreciation of our people. At St. Paul they were present at the corner-stone laying of a new Y. M. C. A. building. Senor Peraza of Venezuela made an address, in which he referred to the boundless hospitality of the people of the United States. "But," he exclaimed, with a broad, sweeping gesture, "you have been more than hospitable; you have brought us to this spot where you are to rear a building to religion, to learning, and to refinement of your ambitious youth, and to-day you make strangers a part of your history." "Tell your children," he said in closing, "that in recognition of the greatness of your people, which is so much based upon such institutions as this will be—tell them that in recognition of this, one of these men from the far south in grateful pleasure touched this stone with his hand." At St. Louis the same delegate while visiting a girls' school glorified the American woman as standing at the head of her sex for her virtues, for her independence, her individuality, and for all those qualities which make her the equal of man in intelligence and force of character, and the superior in every other quality. It must be regretted that after so wide and favorable observation the party could not resist spending last Sabbath in visiting the Mammoth Cave. Had all our institutions made their right impression upon them, the Sabbath would have been respected in spite of their long training under a sterile Romanism.

Bear in mind, young man, that no railroad company, no manufacturer, no bank, profession, office, or traffic enterprise of any kind seeks the service of such as are addicted to strong drink—to drunkenness. Keep it in mind as you hope to eat your own food, wear your own clothes, and live beneath your own roof.

TO ONE WHOM I LOVE.

BY VICTORIA ALEXANDRA BUCK.

When springtime blows along my way,
And summer lengthens out her day,
And autumn waves her banners gay
Above the plain and lea;
When winter whitens vale and hill,
And locks each fountain, stream and rill,
And Nature's voice is hushed and still,
Oh! then I think of Thee.

When mirthful voices float along,
In laughter, cheer, or notes of song,
And music's swell its tones prolong
In sweetest melody;
When morning waves her banners bright,
When noon climbs up the mountain's height,
Or armies march the plains of night,
I think, I think of Thee.

When 'neath the fiery hand of pain,
With fever-burning heart and brain,
And soul that longeth, but in vain,
In restful peace to be;—
Or when in summer's blissful time,
When life flows on in joyous rhyme,
And heart and soul and pulse keep time,
I think, I think of Thee.

My friend! when sunset's flaming cars
Sweep swiftly past horizon's bars,
Or when night's banner set with stars
Is lifted o'er the lea;
Oh! Thou from whom all blessings flow,
When wings of angels softly blow
My soul to endless bliss, I know
That Thou wilt think of me.

THE ANTI-SECRECY AND KINDRED REFORMS.

PAPER BY REV. H. H. HINMAN AT THE OHIO STATE MEETING.

It was the wise remark of President Lincoln, when in our terrible struggle we were, because of the Trent affair, threatened with national humiliation or war with Great Britain—"Let us be patient. One war at a time." This was excellent advice in a physical conflict, but it does not apply to moral warfare.

All moral evil is in conflict with the will of God, and is destructive to the happiness of the universe. All true reforms are kindred, since they seek the removal of moral evil, the maintenance of justice, and the relief of suffering humanity. Our warrant for engaging in any work of reform, and our hope of ultimate success is that our Divine Master, the great Reformer, "was manifested that he might destroy the works of the devil." "He shall be called Jesus" (said the angel) "for he shall save his people from their sins." To him all sin is abhorrent. He cannot look upon any form of iniquity with allowance.

Nor is he any respecter of persons. All men who fear God and work righteousness are accepted of him, but he abhors all the workers of iniquity. It follows, then, that as workers together with him we cannot consistently ignore any form of moral evil, or any work for the real benefit of mankind. All true reforms are but the applications of the Gospel of Christ to existing evils. Nor can we succeed in any reform except through the power of Christ. We cannot truly preach his Gospel except as we apply it to the existing human relations. In the changing conditions of society there are constantly coming to the surface new forms of evil, for the removal of which there must be new applications of the Gospel, and new reformations on Gospel principles.

The reforms of the present day may be divided into two classes, the economic and moral; and these are often intimately blended so that it is difficult to determine which feature most largely prevails. The first class includes the questions of finance and labor; the second, Sabbath Observance, Social Purity, Temperance, Peace and Antisecrecy. To none of them has the Christian citizen a right to be indifferent. No important truth or interest has he any right to ignore. He may not be called to the special advocacy of all, or perhaps any, of these reforms, but it is his duty, as far as in him lies, to understand them, and give his voice on the side of God and humanity.

Economic questions have their claim upon our attention, for they can never be settled except on the basis of exact justice, and in justice alone will be found the highest utility both to our own nation and to universal humanity.

What ought to be our attitude towards Sabbath desecration, the use and sale of intoxicating drinks, international war, and the great secret lodge system that is spreading its vast network over our land and drawing innumerable multitudes under its pernicious power? Ought we to ignore one evil while we make war on others? Is that the plan of Him "who was manifested to destroy the works of the devil"? Will the world, the flesh and the devil join hands with us and help us, provided we spare some of the indulgences for which they plead? Silence is consent, and when we consent to ignore a question of right and wrong, we practically consent to the wrong. Have we forgotten the words of the ancient prophet, "Woe unto them that call evil good and good evil, that put light for darkness and darkness for light?"

There is a special relation between the Antisecrecy and the Temperance reforms. Both had their origin in the uprising of the Christian conscience against systematic selfishness. Both seek the highest well being of men and the honor of Christ, and both are in deadly conflict with the combined powers of darkness and sin. It would perhaps be impossible to find a friend of the liquor traffic who has the slightest sympathy with our reform. The great mass of those who use and sell intoxicating drinks are in bitter hostility against us. The mobs that we have from time to time encountered have received their instructions from the lodge and their inspiration from the saloon. The liquor dealer hates the Anti-masonic lecturer, not simply because we abhor his business, but because we insist on a standard of public and private morals that would make both the lodge and the saloon an impossibility.

Doubtless there are some sincere friends of temperance who, seeing the tremendous power of the secret lodge system, have hoped to utilize it for the good of the cause. They have made the serious mistake of doing what they thought a little evil for the sake of securing a great good. Doubtless a measure of success has attended their efforts, for it would be strange, indeed, if so great an expenditure of time and labor did not accomplish something of value. But it is not the less true that the results have not been at all commensurate with the means, and that the secret temperance orders have tended to divide, and often to supplant, temperance efforts. It is also true that in the opinion of some of its most distinguished advocates, the temperance reform has been hindered and put back by the secret temperance movement. Methods not in harmony with the principles and spirit of the Gospel, nor with the example of Him who declared that "in secret have I said nothing," can never be permanently successful, nor warrant us in expecting the divine blessing.

But the great mass of those who hold to the secret lodge system are on the side of the liquor dealers. The lodge and the saloon are in common sympathy, and expect to stand or fall together. The great majority of liquor dealers are members of some secret order, and are mutually bound to protect one another in both their legal and illegal traffic. Such, too, is their relation to lodge members who are not engaged in the traffic, that they may and do depend on them to aid and defend them. The power of the secret lodge system to pervert justice is markedly illustrated in the Cronin trial now proceeding in Chicago. Its malign influence corrupts men in official position, seeks to bribe jurors, and in innumerable ways thwarts the power of the law. If murder is thus systematically defended, much more will men use the power of the lodge to uphold and perpetuate the liquor traffic. The Master Mason's oath to always conceal the secrets of a brother except in case of murder or treason, and of the Royal Arch oath to conceal all secrets whatsoever, is surely a covenant to conceal any violations of license or prohibitory laws. If it is not always so understood and interpreted, it is not for want of anything in the covenant itself. It is always liable to such an interpretation, and hence may always be expected to constitute a barrier to the enforcement of temperance laws. And since non-enforcement is the great argument against prohibition, these secret combinations, by their obstructive power, have become among the greatest hindrances to temperance legislation. Bangor, Maine, is a leading city of the great prohibition State. If anywhere in the land we ought to have a strict enforcement of the prohibitory law, it should be there. But Bangor is honeycombed with secret societies. The officers of the law and its persistent violators are bound together by common covenants, and nowhere else in the State is its authority so persistently defied.

One war at a time? Not while an enemy in the rear so largely turns our victories into defeats. We cannot afford to wait until the liquor traffic is overthrown before we assail the lodge. To ask us to do so is to ask us to indefinitely postpone both the temperance and the anti-secrecy reforms. We gain nothing, but lose much by such waiting. The lodge system will never be a true ally in our work of reform, for we can never expect Satan to cast out Satan; else how shall his kingdom stand?

Our warrant for the prosecution of any reform is the great mission of our Lord, and this must be the mission of all of his people. When with a true faith we seek "to destroy all the works of the devil," we may rightfully expect sympathy and aid of Christ. Most assuredly he hates these "unfruitful works of darkness," and he proposes to destroy them. Though like the church of Ephesus we may be not altogether blameless, may he at least be able to say to us, as he said to them, "But this thou hast, that thou hatest the deeds of the Nicolaitans, which thing I also hate."

THE QUESTION OF MEANS.

A DISCUSSION INVITED.

The third party press occasionally expresses surprise that its party grows so slowly. The reasons for its slow growth are quite obvious. It demands the total suppression of the liquor traffic, a known present impossibility, with no provision for protection against it during the five, ten or twenty years required to compass the result. It does not answer the objection to say that third party people help in local option and amendment fights. These methods are outside of its plan. It repudiates everything but total prohibition. Its platforms contemplate free whisky, or no whisky, accordingly as there is a majority for or against the saloon.

The doctrine of prohibition is right. Drinking liquor, much or little, as a beverage, is wrong. Selling liquor to be used as a beverage is wrong; for "no man has the right to use his property so as to injure his neighbor." The liquor traffic is monstrously cruel and wicked. But without a method which shall use effectively the temperance sentiment that there is, and at the same time give the best opportunity to develop more, the third party does not recommend itself to the wisdom of the temperance people.

The "home rule" principle—local option with proper restrictive adjuncts—does this. It gives prohibition where a majority favor it; and where a majority favor the saloon, prohibition law would be of little or no use. The enforcement of any law in a given place depends, in the last analysis, upon the local sentiment. Temperance laws are especially difficult to enforce because they grapple with two of the mightiest of giants, Appetite and Avarice.

Moreover, third party audiences are temperance people, needing no conversion; but by the local option method every church and school-house and store and corner and home in the land becomes a forum, where the saloon must answer for its hellish crimes. The question is thrust upon every voter, and he is compelled to answer by a vote directly for or against rum. A general local option law gives possible prohibition every place; certain prohibition some places; but implies the possibility, or probability, or certainty of liquor-selling some places. If, in the last contingency, the temperance minority are responsible for the sin of liquor-selling under that law, there are but two possible courses to take—either move away or kill enough wicked people to leave the remnant a minority. The conclusion must be that civil society is impossible. It is a cowardly and wicked surrender to quit voting; for that is anarchy.

It is easy to say, "Some say cripple it, etc.; but we say kill it." We, too, say, "Kill it;" but we do not say, "If you can't kill it first shot, don't shoot." Let the third party remember: (1) That we Prohibitionists are in the minority. (2) That the minority are not responsible for the wicked use which the majority may make of the best available restrictive law. Temporary expedients must and will be used along the way to prohibition. Local option is fair, right, progressive and fatal to the saloon.

But the third party further loads down its already overloaded creed with that unspeakably vicious doctrine of woman's suffrage. Emerson declares, "A certain awkward consciousness of inferiority in the men may give rise to the new chivalry in behalf of woman's rights." However this may be, the doctrine is of such serious importance that it challenges the foundation of our social system—authority. The question turns not upon brains, but upon station. The result would be to make woman monstrous, and to entail upon society a train of nameless evils. The "new chivalry" would cost too much.

Hundreds of thousands of temperance Republicans and Democrats are ready, and more, to join with some new political party which takes into view the facts in the field, which promises results now as well as in the future, which recommends itself to both conscience and wisdom; for they now have (almost) no representative press and few leaders. The Hill-rum Democracy is taking on big proportions. Failure of the Republicans to pledge local option in the late conventions of Pennsylvania, New Jersey and New York, is perhaps the worst symptom of the hydrophobia which the Republican party has ever shown.

Our politics seem to have degenerated largely to an unholy scramble for beer and "pie." Cannot a platform be made broad enough, without hurting the conscience of any, to hold a working party for living issues? We are in a crisis, and the best elements are ready to work on new lines. Let us discuss ways and means, and not abuse one another. We are friends. MENTOR.

—A Masonic authority says that Napoleon Bonaparte did not "specially recognize Masonry" but only tolerated it. He got his marshal, Prince Cambaceres, to be made Deputy Grand Master, holding him directly responsible for the behavior of the lodges. "During the height of his power," says the Masonic Chronicle, "lodge orations degenerated into a slavish worship of the conqueror, and many lodge meetings were held for no other purpose than that of celebrating the last new victory. On his fall, however, every effort was immediately made to cause the restored house of France to forget the former exuberant sympathy of French Freemasons with the 'Corsican Tyrant,' as he was then denominated. The lodges whose titles recalled in the least the Napoleonic legends or victories, either disappeared or made indecent haste to change their names. But it is not as regards Napoleon only that the student is struck with the truckling subservience of French lodges to the government of the day."

WHEAT AND TARES.

BY MISS E. E. FLAGG.

I think the Cynosure readers may enjoy the following stanzas, entitled "Wheat and Tares," which was recently put into my hand by an old veteran in both the anti-slavery and anti-secrecy wars:

"Tares, what are they? what is their use?
When found, and what are their habits?
Do they benefit or abuse?
Look and find among statistics.
Webster says truly they are weeds,
And their growth is among the wheat;
They ripen many thousand seeds,
Whose foliage is but deceit.
What can be done to separate
The tares and save the useful wheat?
The yeomans in a seeking state
This vexed question for to meet,
The only rule that's good and true
Is, to the end of harvest wait,
And if but many or if but few
The bundles they'll be packed straight.
At harvest time this will be done,
The drying process all complete,
The fire applied, and then alone
They will annihilation meet.
Secret societies are, methinks,
The rankest tares that can be found;
Like chains, they're made of many links,
And strive to cover all the ground.
Who sowed the tares? 'Twas Satan sure,
The good Book doth this truth reveal.
He tries to charm but to allure,
And thus he shows his wicked deal.
Secret societies alike are bad,
Are naught but tares bound together,
And while in their wickedness clad,
Will burn like furze in dryest weather.
What ranker weed can there be found
Than a minister in the desk,
Standing on the forbidden ground,
Guiding others at his own risk?
We'll burn the tares and save the wheat,
The bad reject, the good embrace,
And make our safety sure, complete,
Through faith in God's redeeming grace."

With the author of these lines the winnowing process began early. At 12 years of age he learned to drink, at 15 to smoke, but became a Christian at 20, and was so thoroughly saved from both these vile habits that he has not in the long period which has since elapsed (he is now 87) had a moment's single desire for either.

He remained in connection with the church of his choice until it expelled a member on charge of being an Anti-mason. He left it the same hour.

As regards slavery he took the same heroic stand. In 1840 the letter of Wm. H. Harrison, in which he wrote, "I have as good a claim on the slaveholder's vote as the other party," decided his vote, which was at once cast for James G. Birney. When the anti-secretists put a political candidate into the field he cast his vote for the American party so long as he was able to go to the polls.

Mr. Mansfield is a New Englander of the old school, a vegetarian of the strictest sort, becoming a convert to that belief when Dr. Graham was being mobbed for telling people that the whole of a grain of wheat is better than a part. Certainly with his good health and unimpaired faculties, he is a strong witness in favor of a non-meat diet, and also that in engaging in unpopular reforms is not antagonistic to a long life, or a serene and happy close.

THE RISE OF THE MASONIC DEGREES.

Freemasonry has existed for hundreds of years. There were Apprentices, Fellow-Crafts and Master Masons hundreds of years ago; yet there were no Masonic degrees in existence until the beginning of the last century, namely, A. D. 1717, or thereabouts. What existed before then were Masonic grades, the Apprentices, Fellows and Masters being all on a level as regards secrets, for in a number of old lodges it was the law that so many Apprentices had to be present at the due admission of Masters and Fellows. Hence, there were three grades of members, not three degrees, with special ceremonies and secrets for each degree. What the old Masonic secret word was among the lodges before A. D. 1717 we do not know, nor what their secrets or ceremonies exactly were. The old Freemasons were Trinitarians before 1717, as their charges abundantly testified; but when the new system of Speculative Freemasonry was instituted in London, in 1717, Freemasonry became cosmopolitan. Its watchword was the Fatherhood of God and the Brotherhood of Man. The first Masonic Grand Lodge in the world was the Grand Lodge of England, formed in 1717, and no Masonic "Grand Master" existed before then. The pseudo-Masonic historians of the last century, to fill up their books, were not particular as to facts, but dealt largely in fictions, interpolations and alterations. This is now abundantly proved by the labors of the Masonic historians and critics of the last twenty-five years. Previous to 1860 Freemasons, generally speaking, believed the ceremonies and secrets of the then Craft degrees had existed for hundreds or thousands of years, the majority dating from the building of Solomon's Temple. It was difficult to prove this on documentary evidence, but the excuse was ever ready that the old documents were lost! It so happens, however, that modern research has discovered many of the old records, and the old Masonic charges, and the old lodge minutes, written long before, and up to A. D. 1717, prove that up to that date modern Freemasonry and our system of degrees did not exist. The oldest Masonic minute of the third degree in the world, yet discovered, is dated 1725, and it is in connection with a society to which only Masonic Master Masons were eligible. The Kilwinning Lodge, styled by some the "Mother Lodge of Scotland," seems to have had no Master's degree until 1737, and then it got impregnated with the new Freemasonry from England. There was no Grand Lodge or Grand Master in Scotland until 1736, when the former was formed—after a visit from some London brethren—and the latter was elected then. In Kelso the lodge first heard of the Master's degree in 1754. As this was eighteen years after the formation of the Scottish Grand Lodge, there does not seem to have been much Masonic communication between Edinburgh and Kelso, or else news traveled slowly. There was no daily newspapers, telegraphs or telephones in those days. The lodge of Edinburgh, Mary's Chapel, No. 1, has minutes going back to 1598, but these go to prove that there was no Masonic degrees before 1717. The three degrees of Craft Masonry are, therefore, now about 171 years old—possibly three years or so younger, especially the third degree. What are called the higher degrees rose some time after 1717, the first of them probably about 1740, about which time Royal Arch Masonry was started. Then there was the degree known as the Royal Order of Scotland, and in the latter half of last century the Masonic Knights Templar degree was constructed, and so on with many others. While the Freemasonry of the three Craft degrees gloried in being cosmopolitan, the higher degrees were sectarian. The Grand Lodge of Scotland does not recognize the latter.—Hughan, Masonic Historian.

CLAN-NA-GAEL DEVELOPMENTS.

[From the Cleveland, O., Leader, Oct. 29.]

We beg to acknowledge the receipt of a communication from Dr. P. McCahey of Philadelphia, protesting against the denunciation of the Clan-na-Gael in connection with the murder of Dr. Cronin, and calling attention to the fact that for four years there have been two divisions of the organization formerly known by that name, one, the Irish National Brotherhood, led by Sullivan, Feely, Boland and their associates, and responsible, beyond doubt, for the murder of Dr. Cronin, and the other retaining the name of "Clan-na-Gael." Dr. McCahey reminds us that the Clan has raised and expended some $10,000 in the pursuit of the murdered physician's assassins, while the leaders of the "triangle" branch of the old "United Brotherhood" have done nothing to advance the cause of justice.

We think that discriminating readers have generally understood the distinction which Dr. McCahey emphasizes, at least to the extent of knowing that one faction of the old Clan-na-Gael was composed of Dr. Cronin's partisans, and the country at large has never supposed that the whole body, denounced under that name, was directly or willingly concerned in the cruel murder committed in Chicago last spring. It remains true, however, that this awful crime was the direct outgrowth of the methods and ruling principles of the Clan, which had assumed to set up a government within a government, and punish "treason" as if it were the lawfully constituted authority of a nation. It is true, likewise, that both factions of the United Brotherhood are alien to the spirit of American institutions and hostile to the best interests of the country. If both were wiped out of existence there would be less danger of secret assassinations and murderous conspiracies, alike shameful and injurious to the American people. This belief we hold in common with nearly every true American, regardless of the attitude of either or both factions of the old Clan-na-Gael toward Dr. Cronin and his murderers.

[From the Chicago News, Oct. 31.]

At the time of the coroner's inquest on the body of Dr. Cronin the public was presented with many striking examples of the ability to forget which is possessed by most of the members of camp 20 of the Clan-na-Gael or United Brotherhood. Now that the proceedings of that camp have come under the scrutiny of a jury in the Criminal court, those bad memories are given an airing once more. The grudging manner in which scraps of relevant testimony have been surrendered by witness after witness is most exasperating. That much is concealed or glossed over is the natural conclusion drawn from such conduct. For that reason the reluctant witnesses succeed in doing a service for the prosecution which is far from their thoughts. In the language of one of the lawyers for the State, "the apparent concealment of truth is frequently as significant as its revelation."

But much has been extracted from the witnesses which is of importance. Two or three members of the camp seemingly have told frankly all they know. Their stories are corroborated by the reluctant admissions of the other witnesses. Thus it has been proved that charges were made in camp 20 by Capt. T. F. O'Connor against the integrity of the old "triangle," that great excitement resulted, and that various members of the camp clamored angrily for his authority. At the suggestion of the defendant Coughlin the senior guardian, the defendant Beggs, appointed a secret committee of three to find out the author of the charges. At a subsequent meeting, believed to have been held on the night before the murder of Dr. Cronin, the senior guardian, in response to a question, announced that the secret committee would report to him alone. The defence evidently hopes to establish that this question and answer occurred at the meeting of May 10.

Notwithstanding the great difficulties with which the State has to contend at this stage of the trial, it is showing quite conclusively that mischief was being planned in camp 20 shortly before the murder of Dr. Cronin, and that Beggs and Coughlin were directly concerned in laying the foundation for the grim superstructure of assassination.

State's Attorney Longenecker's opening speech in the Cronin murder trial ought to fix the attention of the entire country on the evidence to be adduced. The charges made by him against the Clan-na-Gael, if proved to be true by the sworn testimony of reliable witnesses, must lead to the crushing of that society by the force of public opinion, or by law if that agency should be necessary. The Clan-na-Gael is a national organization and international in its purposes. No State government, therefore, can cope with it successfully. If nothing shall come of this great trial save the conviction and punishment of the five men accused of the murder of Dr. Cronin, results will be pitifully meager. Not only those five tools of more cunning masters, but the masters also and the powerful organization whose machinery they controlled, are to be judged by the revelations in the Criminal Court. "The real motive of this murder," said the State's attorney yesterday, "lies with those not on trial here." They are on trial, however, before the court of the people. The county of Cook, by its accredited officers, proposes to lay bare to the nation the true character of a great conspiracy, which breeds other conspiracies, and which concerns every person in the United States as much as it does the citizens of Chicago. If this nation is wise it will study the evidence in the Cronin trial with great care, and will make proper use of the lessons drawn from it.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

The Massachusetts Volapuk Club.—An instance of mixed worship.—Secretary Stoddard's work.—Our New England Meeting.—The Prohibition rally at Tremont Temple.

Anyone who has suffered from the curse of Babel will rejoice to know that a movement has begun, under the auspices of the Massachusetts Volapuk Club, to introduce this new study into the schools of Boston. Of course this is only an initiatory step towards making it a branch of educational work throughout the country. The dream of a universal language may be realized before this present generation has passed off the stage. That it is easy to learn—one chief desideratum—is manifest from the fact that some members of the club, who have only taken three lessons, have already corresponded with parties in China, Italy, France and Belgium, each of the participants being totally ignorant of the other's mother tongue. What important bearing Volapuk may have on missions is yet to be seen; but if the world has at last found what has been almost as long and as eagerly sought for as the philosopher's stone, a universal language, there is no doubt but that, like steam and electricity, it will help fulfill prophecy in the world-wide spread of the Gospel.

Think of being able to converse with a Brahmin without being forced to delve in the mine of Sanscrit; or corresponding with a Chinese mandarin without being obliged to spend years first in learning to distinguish between the thousand or more different varieties of hen's tracks which make up the celestial alphabet! Even the glorified spirits of Henry Martyn and Dr. Morrison might well heave a sigh of regret that they could not have been born a hundred years later.

The last Ministers' meeting in Pilgrim Hall was taken up by discussing "Congregationalism in the suburbs of Boston." More Christianity seems to the writer to be the thing that Boston and its suburbs stand most in need of. Rev. Dr. Reuben Thomas of Brookline spoke of the general disposition to overlook the sacredness of the Sabbath and to be interested in worldly amusements, and he severely criticized the tendency on the part of ministers towards sacred concerts instead of a regular service for Sunday evening. All of which may be true, but while Dr. Quint and others like him try to worship Baal and Christ together, I am afraid even a return to the old-fashioned second service would not remedy the difficulty.

This inclination to a mixed worship is naturally strongest in the semi-religious orders, which claim to have the promotion of temperance and morality for their chief object. Bro. A. M. Paul and a few others who have seen the inwardness of the Temple of Honor, tell us it is a religion without any Christ in it. Yet it is a fact that Unity Temple of Honor in Cambridge holds an open Gospel temperance meeting in its hall on Main street every Sunday afternoon,—meetings which are well attended and serve to draw a great many sincere, well-meaning people into the order. It is also a fact that directly after an announcement of said meetings in one of the city papers, comes the following notice:

"The temple is to give a magic, musical and literary entertainment and dance in Temple Hall on Friday evening, November 1.... Music will be furnished by Pierce's Orchestra, and there will be dancing from 9:30 until 12 o'clock."

We are told in the seventeenth chapter of second of Kings of a people who "feared the Lord and served their own gods," and the members of Unity Temple of Honor have certainly copied these devout worshipers of olden times, as nearly as it is possible to do in this land and age.

A letter just received from our General Agent reports good progress in what is just now his especial line of work. At the Baptist State Convention recently held at Putnam, Conn., he gave the pamphlet, "Age of Lodges," to one hundred or more ministers, and distributed five hundred of the same at the A. B. C. F. M. meeting in New York. He reports a good State Convention at Houghton, New York, and last evening's mail brought me a copy of the Buffalo Express, which inserts in full a series of ringing resolutions there passed: "That the prevalence of infidelity, lawlessness and crime is largely due to the existence of secret combinations and orders;" "that no government can safely tolerate within its jurisdiction any society or order such as the Clan-na-

Gael, Knights of Pythias, Freemasons and kindred orders, which try, condemn and execute their members for offenses unknown to the law of the land;" "and we hereby call upon our national government and all its subordinates to suppress all such orders as treasonable conspiracies, whose members ought to be disfranchised and made incapable of holding any office, as being subjects of a government foreign to the spirit and genius of our Republic."

It shows that the backbone of the lodge power is decidedly weakening when papers like the Express will insert such resolutions. I am never so encouraged as when a W. C. T. U. woman writes to me: "This subject is new to me, but I have read the leaflets and they have set me to thinking." For I have learned that the prime reason why error flourishes with such impunity is because people don't think; and the reports of our anti-secret meetings in the papers, however brief or garbled the account, accomplish this very important object.

Secretary Stoddard expects to be back in New England about the 12th of November, and complete his arrangements for the Congress of Churches. Meanwhile, as our annual meeting will be held at the same time and place, if every anti-secretist in New England who can possibly attend will plan to do so, even at some personal self-sacrifice, and try to secure the attendance of others, both meetings will be, with the blessing of God, an assured success. The time given to discussing the New England work must necessarily be short, but our business can all be transacted satisfactorily inside of a few hours, if each member will come prepared to say what he or she is able and willing to do financially to support the cause in New England another year. It will be remembered that Rev. J. H. Brown has been unanimously commissioned by the Association to act as their home missionary and evangelist, and if he accepts the commission, the most important business which will come before the meeting will be that of finances. Will not every brother or sister who feels the supreme necessity of the hour; who would see that system which, as Dr. Edward Beecher has well put it, "de-thrones Christ and exalts Satan," overthrown with all other refuges of lies, and a revival of pure Bible holiness sweep over New England; if they cannot attend the meeting, at least send a pledge specifying the amount they can contribute to this purpose. Dear friends, the sum may be very small, but God's blessing will rest upon it if given cheerfully and according to the measure of ability. New England is the mother of missions and missionaries as well as of reforms and reformers. While her children have been sleeping the enemy has sowed tares. While they have been resting on the traditions of past virtue, the very anti-Christian, anti-Republican influences that our fathers crossed the ocean and left their bones on Burial Hill to combat, dare to pay a mock homage to their memories, while striking with the blight of spiritual death the glorious heritage they left us.

The prohibition mass meeting in Tremont Temple was well attended by an audience made up very largely of women, with a good sprinkling of ministers. It was reported that out of 205 working temperance clergymen who had been written to, 143 had replied that they were third party men. Rev. James M. Gray, rector of the Reformed Episcopal church, said that in Boston there were 29 more arrests for drunkenness with 700 high license bars than with 2,000 under the old low license system. Mr. Brackett, the Republican nominee, received some severe handling, and if he is as much of a sycophant of the rum power as Mr. Faxon's record seems to show, he deserves it.

The church is wheeling into line against the saloon, and the time will come when it will show an equally solid front against the lodge.

REFORM NEWS.

THE ARNOLD RIVER MISSION.

WHEELING, W. Va., Oct. 28, 1889.

DEAR EDITOR:—A few have already responded to our call for help to build the Floating Mission Chapel for Gospel and reform work among the freedmen. I shall keep a record of all the names of donors, and possibly when we reach Louisiana we may be able to send to each a small package of hanging moss, or some other relic of the South. For this reason I would request that all who send money give name and P. O. address. Of the $1,200 or $1,500 needed, I think we can raise $600 in Wheeling, but it is not to be paid until the total amount is raised, and the boat built. A number of good men here are interested in the freedmen, and the chapel will be built before winter sets in provided each person interested in the work will send something to aid in the building at once. Perhaps there are but few readers of the Cynosure who know that there is waterway of over twenty thousand miles through which the chapel can be moved. Your brother in Christian work,

I. R. B. ARNOLD.

THE UPS AND DOWNS OF REFORM IN MICHIGAN.

MINER'S MILL, Mich., Oct. 28, 1889.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—From Grand Ledge, where I was when I wrote you before, I went five miles northwest to Eagle. At this place I distributed tracts and visited the Methodist minister. He would oppose the lodge system if he dared. He said that two of his presiding elders had told him that they considered secretism the greatest evil the church had to arrest, or rather endure. He is a watchman who sees the danger, but gives no warning cry. There are many such, I find.

From Eagle I went to the home of Sumner Avery, a subscriber to the Cynosure. He gave me a list of names, and I spent the afternoon in canvassing in the neighborhood. Everybody pleaded poverty, and I returned to Mr. Avery's for the night, tired and discouraged. But one of David's psalms and earnest prayer refreshed me very greatly.

At Wacousta I had an animated conversation with the Congregational minister. He is a Good Templar, and quick to take offense if the righteousness of the system of secrecy be called in question. His faith in the innocence and goodness of Masonry rests on the word of a friend who, he said, would not remain in an evil institution. I quoted the landmark which says, "Masonry is a system teaching symbolically piety, morality, etc., and when he replied that the church also uses symbols in teaching piety, I felt like crying out, as a chief justice of England did when George Fox gave the Scripture for not removing his hat, "Jailer, take him away."

I stopped at Lansing a few hours, and called on Lutheran ministers and their school teacher, with whom I left tracts for distribution among the boys. I also found the Y. M. C. A. secretary in sympathy with us, and very willing to receive the Cynosure in the reading room.

From Lansing I came to Jackson. In this county there are many Wesleyans and Free Methodists. They are, of course, friendly to us. But opposition to secret societies seems disagreeable to them, and they are not aggressive. They want peace and quiet. To say anything against secretism causes friction in the neighborhood, and friction is unpleasant. Hence they sleep,—sleep while the enemy sows tares among them. "Awake to the rescue of perishing souls," should be the cry.

I have canvassed pretty thoroughly the west side of Jackson county. I lectured at the Robinson school-house on the night of the 28th instant. There was not a large audience (about sixty), but I trust that some seed sown there fell into good ground. God was with us. I was inspired also by the presence of brethren Canfield and Raymond.

While in that neighborhood I stopped with Bro. Raymond. He is one of Masonry's "faithfullest foes." He does not fear what men will say or do, but takes his position on the side of right, and holds it for God. A man like that is worth something in the world. He is a live fish. But many professed Anti-masons act as though they would like to say, "How do you do," "God speed you," and "Don't come this way again," all in the same breath. Wm. G. Brown, a staunch old veteran in the prohibition and anti-secrecy warfare, told me the other day, in thought, that he had found out long ago that "men are a little breed." I can remember a number of incidents of the past few months which crowd me to the same conclusion. I shall work here for a week or more yet.

THE NEW YORK WORK.

SCHUYLER'S LAKE, NOV. 3, 1889.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—The work moves on in the Empire State. The Houghton convention is an event of the past, but its influence dies not with the passing hour. Eternity alone can reveal this. Though not as largely attended by delegates and friends throughout the State as would have been, had all felt thoroughly the needs of the hour, yet there were men present, consecrated young men, who are soon to become leaders in the communities where they are called. As President Blanchard, now nearing the gates of the unseen, brought to them the truth as opposed to the lying fables of the lodge, with all the eloquence and earnestness of a dying saint, how could it be otherwise than inspire in them a love for the Redeemer who had protected him through all life's battles and now was his strength in declining years. Who knows, but from the Houghton Seminary shall go forth a David who with God's truth shall slay the heathen giant in our land. May God richly bless the good people of Houghton for their kind hospitality extended to the "strangers within their gates."

As the State Secretary has doubtless sent you a full report of the convention, it is not necessary to add mine. I wish, however, to congratulate the Association on their selection of State officers: Prof. A. R. Dodd, of Houghton, president; Rev. W. A. Hazelett, of Belmont, secretary; and Peter D. Miller, Wright's Corners, treasurer. As the president and secretary are both old Wheaton students, we know they have true reform blood and will never beat the drum for retreat. The treasurer has served us in the past and has never run to Canada with our funds, nor had an inclination that way. You can trust him, friends, with all of God's money you have to advance the work in this State. I hope you will send in contributions to further our work here at once, as funds are needed. Bro. J. B. Turner, of Ontario, sends a letter to me pledging $2. Send all State contributions to Peter D. Miller, Wright's Corners, Niagara county, N. Y. Money orders or checks should be drawn on Lockport, N. Y.

I came down here for work in Otsego county by special request. On the way I called on a few friends. Being entertained by our faithful friend, Henry De Jough, at Rochester over night, I learned of the state of reform in that city, which would not be very encouraging to one having faith only in humanity. I hope to be able to do some work there in the near future. I much regretted my inability to meet Father Geo. W. Clark, who, I learned, was in the city and in usual health.

Spending Sabbath at Utica, special notice was

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE LUTHERAN SYNODS.

OXFORD, Ohio, Oct. 29, 1889.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—Last Friday evening I lectured in Wittenberg College, Springfield, O. This is under the control of the Lutheran General Synod. This body has 150,000 members in the United States. In 1866 the General Council was organized. They seceded on account of the language used by the General Synod. The General Council use the German language exclusively. They have 400,000 members. The Missouri Synod originated with a German colony, and are called Lutherans likewise. They have about 400,000. When the war broke out in 1861 a division occurred in the General Synod corresponding to the Presbyterians North and South. Then there are many independent churches calling themselves Lutheran. The Lutherans in the United States are reported at 1,023,000. Wittenberg has 240 students. Dr. Helwig, the Prohibition candidate for Governor, was the president before Dr. Ost.

On Saturday evening I lectured in the Western Female Seminary, Oxford, O. This is under the control of the Presbyterian General Assembly. It is conducted according to the Holyoke system. This system is fifty-two years old. They have many such schools in America, ten in South Africa, several in India, Australia and elsewhere. The Oxford Seminary is full this fall. They expect to build a library at a cost of $50,000. Miss Tucker, the principal, is an efficient organizer and a capable leader. The work is prospering in her hands. We met her brother, Rev. Mr. McKee, there. He spent eleven months in the Kentucky mountains as missionary. He found families of twelve living in a one-room cabin. The father would spend $50 for a gun while his wife and children were in rags. They regard education as a nuisance, and the first principles of cooking have not been learned. He preached three sermons a day for thirty successive days, and taught the men to fence their yards and the women to cook in the intervals.

On Sabbath morning I preached in Morning Sun, O., United Presbyterian church, Rev. Mr. Hume, pastor. This is a fine congregation. The Hopewell U. P. congregation had no preaching, and they came in filling the house. The pastor was away assisting Rev. Robb of Jamestown, O., at his communion. At 3 p. m. I lectured in Miami University to a fine audience. At 7:30 p. m. I preached in the U. P. church, Rev. H. A. McDonald, pastor. The lights in the Presbyterian church went out and they came over. The freshman class of the Western Female Seminary came in, and we had a full house. Rev. James Cooper, an old friend from Cedarville, O., took part in the services. Rev. Dr. Osborn was present. His daughter, the wife of Rev. Dr. Thompson of New York, the predecessor of Rev. George P. Hays, D.D., in the Second Presbyterian church of Kansas City, was there. It was an inspiring audience. On Monday evening, I lectured in the City Hall before the W. C. T. U. on the Liquor Traffic. If the large and appreciative audience is an index of the temperance sentiment in Oxford, then it is high. J. M. FOSTER.

CHURCH AND STATE.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—"There is no one in America that favors a union of church and state." So say prominent members and representatives of the "National Reform Association" and of the "American Sabbath Union." On the other hand, certain newspapers and public speakers do not hesitate to charge upon these same societies that they are seeking just such a union. This charge is bitterly denied, and is sometimes denounced as a slander. Now it is doubtless true that the brethren on both sides of this controversy are strictly honest. Those who make the charge sincerely believe it to be true, while those on the other side as honestly believe the charge to be unfounded.

This unpleasant controversy, like many others, has probably arisen from mutual misunderstanding. The words "church" and "state" are used by all in the same sense; but the phrase, "a union of church and state," seems to be differently interpreted by different writers. Is it not high time that the readers of the Christian Cynosure, and religious reformers in general, should endeavor to come to an agreement in the use of words and phrases of so much importance.

Rev. J. M. Foster, who represents the "National Reform Association," in an article on "The Relation of Church and State," published in a late number of this paper, sets forth his own views and, presumably, those of that association, in a manner sufficiently clear. He says: "The church will recognize the good offices of the Christian state; and the true state will formally acknowledge its obligation to 'serve' the church." This is certainly plain enough; but he makes his meaning still plainer when he quotes Rev. Wm. Milroy, with approbation, who says, in reference to "The duty of the state, as such, to enter into alliance with the church of Christ, and to profess, adhere to, and maintain the true religion." "Ever since Christianity became a power among the nations of the world, the minds of legislators have been occupied with the difficult question: Can church and state enter into mutual alliance and yet each prosecute, untrammelled, its respective ends; and exercise, uncontrolled, its important functions? Though the verdict of the Christian people of the United States, if called to-day to answer this question, would probably be overwhelmingly in the negative, yet we conceive the pious, profound and sagacious men of the Second Reformation, more than two hundred years ago, solved the problem correctly, answering in the affirmative. And not only so, but for a brief period in the land of the covenants they presented to the world what has nowhere else been witnessed, the solution in practical operation." To show that Bro. Foster endorses this quotation, we need only cite his own fervent prayer that follows it: "May our land soon be thus in covenant with God, and in a state of friendly recognition and co-operation with the church of Christ!"

Now the church of Scotland, properly so called, was always, and is now, an "established church." As is well known, that established church was the only one in Scotland with which the government was "in a state of friendly recognition and co-operation." How, then, can Bro. Foster deny that he is in favor of an establishment of religion? The church of Scotland was just as much "established" under the Second Reformation as it had been before, though her rights were less curtailed than formerly. She still drew her temporal support from the treasury of the nation; and it may well be doubted whether the wisest of them ever dreamed of the "voluntary" system of church support. Certainly they never uttered a single protest against the "union of church and state."

Not only the Established Church of Scotland believed in her own establishment, but the various bodies that seceded from the establishment still believed in the principle. Even as late as the year 1843, when the "Free Church of Scotland" was organized, the revolt was not against the principle, but what was regarded as an abuse of the state's power over the church. Says Mr. Inglis: "It is necessary to notice that the Free Church thus constituted held strongly to the principle of a religious establishment."

That Bro. Foster is himself in favor of something of the kind is apparent from his own statements in the article before us. He says: "The expenses of the church in carrying on her aggressive work, it—the civil government—meets in whole or in part out of the public treasury."

Now I am not arguing against religious establishment, or other forms of the "union of church and state." Bro. Foster quotes numerous passages of Scripture to prove his points; and it is a fair subject of discussion whether these passages are misapplied or not. My object is to show that prominent advocates of "Sabbath" laws, and other forms of religious legislation, are in favor of some kind of a union of church and state. I do not believe that all the members of Bro. Foster's own denomination, nor even a majority of the association which he represents, are completely in harmony with his utterances on this subject; but inasmuch as so large and respectable a number of their leaders have avowed the determination to persuade the state, "as such, to enter into alliance with the church of Christ, and to profess, adhere to, and maintain the true religion," can it be wondered at that many people have come to the conclusion that these organizations are themselves in favor of a "union of church and state?" And is it fair, or honorable, to denounce those editors and newspaper writers who have made this charge as liars and willful defamers? Of course, Bro. Foster would deny that he favors the union of church and state. So do all those who advocate the Blair "Educational Bill;" others take the opposite view. All which shows the truth of what was remarked above—that the phrase in question is used, by different persons, in very different senses. My own opinion is, that what the National Reform Association desire and are laboring for, would be in itself, or would necessarily result in, a "union of church and state," as I understand the phrase. Others no doubt think differently. Brethren, let us try to understand one another. JOS. W. MORTON.

AN ILLUSTRATION FROM SHERMAN

BELLAIRE, O., Sept. 24, 1889.

EDITORS CYNOSURE:—It is almost impossible to get white people to read good moral reform papers of any kind. Their excuse is lack of time. Every year brings new evidence of the need of education on this subject. The people of this place are so much taken up with the lodge business that they have crowded the church into the one day of the week; and, not satisfied with that, they must have annual sermons preached to them. They go to the church in a body, with their bibs on, headed by a drum corps, for fear people would not see them. It may be the preachers think the same way General Sherman did when on his way to the sea. On Saturday evening an Episcopal minister came to him and said, "General, I am in a dilemma. Your troops have taken possession of the town, and I have announced to preach to-morrow, and our church requires us to pray for our rulers." "Whom do you consider your ruler?" asked the General. "Jefferson Davis," said the minister. "Well, you just go ahead, and have church by all means," said the General; "for I don't know any one that needs praying for worse than Mr. Davis." Yours for reform,

W. McCoy.

MONTREAL STUDENTS DISCUSSING THE LODGE.

CONGREGATIONAL COLLEGE, MONTREAL, Can.
EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—I seize every opportunity of placing myself on record as opposed to secret societies. At present the agitation here is in its infancy, but the outlook is promising. Last session I brought the matter before the McGill University Undergraduates' Literary Society, but the members fought shy of it. The subject is, however, coming up shortly for another discussion. The above-mentioned university is one of the leading educational institutions in Canada, having an attendance of over 700.

I have placed the Cynosure on file in the Congregational College, which is affiliated with McGill. Already the result there surpasses my anticipations. Some of the students are greatly interested in the subject, and as it is to be presented in the form of a debate in their Saturday Club, the discussion will likely be quite animated. Some opinions expressed are very radical; in fact the only stubborn defence of secretism comes from two persons, the one an Odd-fellow, the other a Freemason. They caution us to be very careful how we speak on such a subject, and declare their determination not even to attend the meeting when it is discussed, a significant commentary on the righteousness of their position.

Students express their astonishment at having heretofore heard so little on so vital a question. Your publications are eye-openers to the careless and unwary, and should be much more widely circulated. Trusting that God's richest blessing may be with you in your efforts, I remain yours sincerely,
S. WINFRED MACK.

AN APPEAL FROM THE DARK CONTINENT.

DEAR FRIENDS OF THE CYNOSURE:—We in Africa have an adage which says, O soro fun eni tebi un pa lati wi bi akara ti ri—"It is painful for an hungry man to describe the quality of bread." Now, I intend to describe the quality of that thing which we most need with the Gospel; but being too much in need of it, I feel the task, though delightful, yet a painful one.

European travelers in Africa, though they differ in many points, yet all agree that educated Africans are lazy, and all consider labor as a disgrace. But they are unmindful of the fact staring them in the face, that while the missionary gives the Negro education, he never has taught him how to work for his daily bread; and in many instances he has been educated far beyond the position which it is possible for him to fill in life. Imagine a school of 1,000 African students plodding through the dead languages of ancient Greece and Rome, spending three years theoretically through the propositions of Euclid and the next two in the construction of Hebrew verbs, neglecting entirely their native languages, ignorant of everything around them, understanding more the construction of dead languages than the speech of several millions dwelling with them in the same continent. What would you call them? I say they are unmade men. They live the lives of other men, and think with the minds of other men. They have left the channel through which God intends them to move. The tilling of the soil, and the earning of sustenance with the sweat of the face, is no more the law of their existence; but an aspiration to live like a Diogenes as a hermit, or like Socrates or Solon, as a philosopher.

We now appeal to our friends in America to assist in the building up of our undone race, by assisting us in a practical manner to teach our youths that labor is no disgrace. We are establishing an institution for this purpose, in which we also include Mohammedans as scholars. Our object is to bring the Mohammedans under Christian training and influence; and we do not doubt that under the present system, which we have so providentially effected, we shall be able to win many of them into the kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ. The Mohammedans as a rule are all temperate men, as the test of membership in their mosque is sobriety and freedom from alcoholic intemperance. One of the rules laid down for the institute is also opposition to all secret societies. We hope to move on those lines; lifting up Christ by our influences and characters, and leaving the result to our kind Saviour, who hath promised, "If I be lifted up from the earth, I will draw all men unto me." May God save the Mohammedans, and bring us all as one sheep under one Shepherd, Jesus Christ. Amen.

We earnestly hope this work will meet with the Christian liberalities of all who, in the congress of churches in Chicago, promised to aid in the establishment of this institution. Your fellow laborer,
J. AUGUSTUS COLE.

TRICKS OF THE JESUITS.

YORK, Pa.
EDITORS CYNOSURE:—It is now in order to find out how many tricks the Jesuits can invent to fool our unsuspecting American citizens. The old trick of omitting the name of Christ from quotations is well known. The cunning trick of carrying the Bible in public processions is also familiar to our anti-secret friends. This, of course, is to allow the lookers-on to infer that secret society men love the holy book and obey its instructions.

The Ancient Order Knights of the Mystic Chain have just had a grand exhibition of secret society piety, virtue, etc., in York. Some credulous people believe that this "Ancient Order" is older than the Masonic, and just exactly seven times as honorable, etc. Other say they look Romish and have a popish smell about them; and they certainly do not look in the least degree like true American troops.

These "bold and holy Knights" have several "castles" in York. They are not air castles; but real, solid brick fortresses. And Don Quixote, or the Arabs, or even the Patagonians would have a big job on hand if they should be silly enough to venture as far as the famous old city of York, with war-paint on. To thoroughly convince "the rest of mankind" that they believe in Christianity and do not belong to Leo, they have just had an exciting raffle at York Castle, in which a family Bible was "chanced off" to one who must be very much in need of "more light." Yours, etc.,
EDWARD J. CHALFANT.

PITH AND POINT.

THANK GOD FOR DELIVERANCE.

I wish to testify of the sense I have of the care of God since I have come to trust him alone. Leaving the deadening influence of the lodge was the best thing I ever did short of declaring for Christ at the first. The pathway is not smooth by any means. Not at all; but the struggle is glorious and the assurance of victory more precious than all the good of earth. No more bondage for me. Thank God for deliverance.—J. B.

HELPED INTO THE LIGHT.

I have moved from Hot Springs and am living in Searcy. I love the Cynosure. It has caused me to leave all secret societies, and enroll my name with the army of opposers of secretism.—REV. JAMES H. HOKE, Searcy Arkansas.

NEXT THE BIBLE.

I want to tell you how pleased I was in opening the Cynosure to-day. I take several religious papers, but I would give up all for the Cynosure if pressed to choose. Next to the Bible the Cynosure satisfies my religious craving. Bold and fearless in its utterance for the right, it commands my admiration, love and respect. I pray that the Lord may raise up multitudes of friends to the Cynosure, and make it a mighty power in the good cause it so eloquently advocates.—J. P. RICHARDS, Wheaton.

PETITION AGAINST THE LODGE.

Brother Hinman held a State Convention at Seneca-ville last week. It was a profitable meeting and I trust will accomplish much good. I have been trying since his meeting to get signers to the petition asking our rulers to recall the Masonic charters and make it illegal for them to take such oaths. I think it would be well to give our platform a place in the Cynosure, and inform the people that it is ours, and that we intend to stand by it forever, and we do not allow any one to steal it from us. I think our people should send in encouraging words concerning this matter.—JOHN LEEPER, Seneca-ville, Ohio.

LITERATURE.

NEW WORDS AND NEW MUSIC FOR THE SANCTUARY. By Robert Lowe Fletcher. Price 30c. New Music Publishing Bureau, Chicago.

The Gospel meeting, either for salvation from general unrighteousness, or from the special sin of intemperance, has made popular a peculiar class of music, of which there is a large variety and quantity before the public. This collection is finely and attractively printed, and is intended as a supplement to the larger collections already in use. The style of music seems finely adapted for solo singing in Gospel meetings, and the spirit of the words and of the music to which they are adapted is excellent. Mr. Fletcher is himself a very interesting man. As representative of a large publishing firm in one of our Western cities, he is traveling widely through the country. He is an earnest worker in city missions, and is recognized as a welcome helper in the Pacific Garden Mission in this city. He is a thorough Christian, and stands for his Master against the lodge. Beside his musical publications he has also prepared an excellent tract for general circulation. His musical collection has grown out of his experiences in Christian work and is a very commendable work.

ALDEN'S MANIFOLD CYCLOPEDIA. Vol. 16, pp. 632. Price, cloth, 60c., for the set, $7.50. John B. Alden, New York.

The sixteenth volume of this handy cyclopedia extends from Galvanized Iron to Gog and Magog. This odd beginning and ending illustrates the scope of the work, taking in as it does the very latest discoveries of science and the remotest traditions of antiquity, and all between, including an unabridged dictionary of language as well as a cyclopedia of universal knowledge. The small handy volumes, contrasting so remarkably with the usual unwieldy quarto or octavo volumes of other cyclopedias, the large handsome type, the neat, strong binding, are features which everyone can appreciate; and not less will the majority of readers appreciate the wonderfully low price.

Scribner's Magazine for November contains a third African article—a valuable addition to the notable papers of Professor Henry Drummond and Joseph Thomson. Col. H. G. Prout (Baroud Bey), an American Governor-General of the Equatorial Provinces of Africa, and a trusted friend of General Gordon, writes of that little known region under the title "Where Emin Is." Emin Pasha was chief medical officer during Col. Prout's administration. It was to Emin's province that Stanley recently made his perilous journey, and from it he is now advancing to the coast by the Masai route described in the October issue of this magazine. The author has thrown new light on the character of Gordon, whom he reverences as "the least selfish, the most magnanimous, the most generous, and the bravest man it has ever been my fortune to know." Prof. J. Russell Soley, U. S. N., discusses "The Effect on American Commerce of an Anglo-Continental War"—showing, in a striking manner, how some of the principles of international law which England has been active in establishing during this century, will react to her own disadvantage and peril. Dr. M. Allen Starr writes of "Electricity in Relation to the Human Body," drawing the line very sharply between its legitimate use and quackery. William Henry Bishop describes the picturesque features of the old Spanish University of Salamanca, and the modern student-life there. The illustrations are from recent photographs, and show types of modern Spanish students, both boys and girls. Dr. James E. Picher, U. S. A., tells of "A New Field of Honor"—the Sanitary Corps of both the regular army and National Guard, which is organized for the relief and care of sick and wounded. The modern humane appliances are described and their application in peace and war clearly explained.

Vick's Magazine for November puts us in remembrance that our National Thanksgiving is hastening on, and fruits and flowers must add their attractions to the joyful day. Several articles on small fruits will be read with interest and profit.

MASONIC RELIGION AND PHILOSOPHY

AS EXPRESSED BY LODGE AUTHORITIES.

"Writing out the Masonic ritual is not proper. The esoteric part of the ritual is oral and should be so kept."—Voice of Masonry.

"The Faith of Masonry is the purest known to man; and it is so simple that any people having a decided bias towards the truth may readily accept it."—Masonic Chronicle.

"The Masonic Home Journal also confesses experience with willful non-paying and vilifying subscribers. Ah, yes, we too, in sixteen years, a large number, and they are the fellows we mean when we allude to the rotten-hearted in the fraternity."—Voice of Masonry.

"Templar Masonry implies and requires a belief in three things:

"First—The divinity of Christ.

"Second—His vicarious atonement.

"Third—Salvation through that belief and obedience to 'the word,' and a life patterned after that of the Saviour.

"That we all fall short of our model, does not change the model."—Grand Commander Buck, Kansas.

The Masonic idea of the antiquity of the order is thus illustrated in a lodge organ: "A brother, discussing ritual with another, of mature membership, urged that certain words and passages therein were not grammar, or found in the dictionary. The other replied, 'I want you to know that Masonry existed before there was a dictionary or grammar.'"

"Although the Masonic institution cannot and does not mingle in the conflicts and political parties, or engage in conspiracies against the state or nation, it must, of necessity, by its great moral influence, affect materially the social and political progress of a people. For many years the fraternity was the sole depository of the grand idea which is now rapidly becoming the supreme thought of the present generation that the people are the primary source of all sovereignty."—Victorian Freemason.

"The opinion expressed by our contemporary is the correct one. Masonry both in Canada and the United States is altogether too cheap. If the initiation fee was raised to $50 on this continent the craft would be more respected than it is, simply because a better class of people would be admitted to its ranks, and those so permitted to know its mysteries would value more highly than they do at present the luxury they are favored to share."—London Free Press.

"The Grand Master is entirely right in saying that the first and indispensable qualification of a candidate for Masonry is that he must have faith in God, but this fact does not warrant the implication that he may properly be required to define the Deity as the God of the Hebrews, any more than he can be required to define Him as the triune God of the Christian. Masonry requires the candidate to affirm God; it does not ask and the law does not permit it to ask him to define him, for the wise reason that definitions breed sects, to the inevitable defeat of the avowed purpose of the landmark 'whereby Masonry becomes the center of union, and conciliates true friendship among those who must have remained at a perpetual distance.'"—Joseph Robbins, P. G. M., in Ill. G. L. Report.

"We think that Bro. Robbins is amending—no, changing the landmarks, when he persuades his Grand Lodge that in Illinois a Mason cannot be disciplined for ridiculing the Bible. If there is any landmark in Masonry, it is that a profane can be made a Mason only by taking an obligation upon a Book of the Law which he regards as containing the law of God. Bro. Robbins' position is not that there is another such book, but in effect that there is no such book. It may be that a Mohammedan may be made a Mason upon the Koran; but if he should be, and then should ridicule the Bible in its capacity as the Great Light in Masonry in American lodges (as was the fact in the Illinois case) he would deserve expulsion for his unmasonic conduct in ridiculing and denouncing the Book upon which his brethren were made Masons. The Grand Lodge of Texas requires its subordinates to place upon their altars the Bible as the Book of the Law; when, therefore, they require candidates to declare their belief in the Divine authenticity of the Bible, they take only proper measures to ascertain if the candidate can take, in one of their lodges, the necessary obligation to make him a Mason. If there was a Mohammedan lodge, with the Koran on its altar, the same inquiry as to the Koran would be proper and necessary."—J. H. Drummond, P. G. M., and P. Sov. Gr. Com. of Northern Jurisdiction.

MIASM AND MALARIA.

"Miasm" literally means a noxious or poisonous exhalation from the earth, and although invisible and impalpable, scientific men have determined some of its laws. Breathed into the lungs, miasms enter the blood and cause the intermittent fever generally known as "malaria." The system is more liable to absorb the poison after sunset or before sunrise, than at any other time. If a healthy condition of the blood is maintained by taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, one is much less liable to be attacked by malaria, and Hood's Sarsaparilla has cured many severe cases of this distressing affection. Read the following from a

WELL-KNOWN RAILROAD MAN.

"I would be pleased to state for the benefit of those who are living in sections where malaria is prevalent, that Hood's Sarsaparilla cured me of one of the worst cases of malaria fever, and I believe that what it has done for me it will do for others. In 1886 I was taken down with that dreaded disease. I put myself in the care of the best doctors I could obtain, and after a time they frankly told me that they had done everything they could for me, but without any apparent benefit. They then sent me to a noted physician who was then stopping in St. Louis, but with no better results. I had to resign my situation as agent and operator for the Missouri Pacific Railroad. I had lost 66 pounds and

SPENT OVER $300.

At last I accidentally met a traveler for C. I. Hood & Co., who advised me to try Hood's Sarsaparilla. I bought six bottles for $5 and after using two I thought I was no better. I began to itch and break out, but I determined to use up what Sarsaparilla I had on hand. Before the third bottle was gone I began to feel better, and continued to mend till I had used twelve bottles, when I had more than gained my usual health and weight. I soon obtained another situation and consider myself a well man." J. M. MILLER, Agent Wabash & Pacific Railway, Lodge, Ill.

CATARRH CURED.

A clergyman, after years of suffering from that loathsome disease, Catarrh, and vainly trying every known remedy, at last found a prescription which completely cured and saved him from death. Any sufferer from this dreadful disease sending a self-addressed stamped envelope to Prof. J. A. Lawrence, 88 Warren St., New York, will receive the recipe free of charge.

THE N. C. A. FUNDS.

The General Fund is that from which the running expenses of the Association are paid. From it the agents on the field are supported.

The Foreign Fund is that from which the foreign demand for literature against the lodge is supplied to missionaries.

The Free Tract Fund clearly states by its name the object for which contributions are solicited. Millions of pages have been distributed by means of this fund.

The Cynosure Ministers' Fund. The donations to this fund have enabled the Association to send many copies of the Cynosure to the ministers of the South, especially to pastors of colored churches. The result has been a blessing to them and their churches.

Contributions to any or all these funds are urgently solicited.

FORM OF BEQUEST.—I give and bequeath to the National Christian Association, incorporated and existing under the laws of the State of Illinois, the sum of — dollars for the purposes of said Association, and for which the receipt of its Treasurer for the time being shall be sufficient discharge.

The Christian Cynosure.

J. BLANCHARD, EDITOR.

HENRY L. KELLOGG, ASSOCIATE EDITOR.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 7, 1889.

THE SENIOR EDITOR, after three months' travel in New York and New England, rejoices to be "at home" again; and hopes to make the information obtained available for the benefit of our readers and the good of our holy cause. The progress of the anti-secret and anti-saloon reforms, in spite of the silence of the press and the pulpit, is steady and sublime, though quiet as the working of leaven in meal. The spread of knowledge by the mighty increase of travel, and the increase of intelligence which cheap postage gives the people through the mail, make the very sky a sounding-board, and the silent air a telephone. And the motion and progress of truth seems almost independent of the once potent power of types.

CYNOSURES FOR NEW ENGLAND.—The N. C. A. Board of Directors have ordered four thousand copies of the Cynosure to be sent to Christian ministers and people in New England in four weeks preceding the Congress in Tremont Temple, Boston, Dec. 11 and 12 next. The senior editor has attended important meetings in the East, and the four next issues of the Cynosure will give the people of New England information which they greatly need, concerning their Mission Boards and National Congregational Council, and the life and welfare of the churches as affected by the secret lodges. This series of four issues will, D. V., commence next week. Those who receive them, of course gratuitous, are requested to circulate the information which they convey, as widely as possible.

"CONGREGATIONALISM CHANGING."

The Advance, under this caption, says that the New Departure (Andover) brethren object to the American Board, that is a close, self-perpetuating corporation, independent of the churches, except as the churches can withhold funds. They demand that it (the Board) shall become a representative body, like the lower house of Congress. This change could be made by allowing State associations or mass conventions to fill vacancies when they occur in the Board. But the Advance hints that if the Board should be made, by representation, a quasi mass convention, so liberal as to send missionaries to teach the heathen that they may have as good a chance to repent and be saved hereafter as here, the other party (which is the great majority) who believe that this life is the only place to prepare for the next, might turn the National Congregational Council into a representative body, and force Andover to cease teaching their doubts for doctrines, and hypotheses for truth. So the Advance thinks that the representation asked for by the Liberals, by making Congregationalism mandatory, instead of advisory, would make it a sword with two edges: one to cut off "post-mortemism," the other to lap away the power of the Board's committee to reject missionaries who do not know but there may be conversions in hell!

The above is a specimen of the discussions in Board and Council meetings of this denomination, which are now absolutely non-committal on the great practical questions which are agitating the churches of Christ. There are three secret, Christless lodges to one church in the United States. Millions on millions of dollars are paid to save heathen in Asia and Africa, and more rum is sent in Christian bottoms to those heathen lands,—far more, than enough to counteract the work of the missionaries. And the lodge religions of America are as much more dangerous to and destructive of human life and salvation than the lodge religions of Asia and Africa, as thieves in the house are more dangerous than thieves outside. The great meetings lately held in New York, Worcester, Buffalo and Chicago put not one proposition in their programs to teach the people not to vote for parties which license liquor, or to shun lodges which exclude Christ.

When a woman was anointing Christ for his burial the disciple who carried the money of the infant church raised the question of supporting the poor. The devil had entered into that man. And it is his device ever since to enter church leaders who will keep up an excellent appearance of doing something which is not the work which Christ has in hand, and which needs to be done. When Satan was preparing to fill eighty-two Southern graveyards with Northern dead, the Presbyterian General Assembly was kept by their leaders discussing whether to re-baptize converts from Romanism (supposing there were any); and whether a man might marry his deceased wife's sister. Prentice, of Louisville, said, "That is a question for the deceased wife's sister herself to answer." And while 571 secret lodges in Boston are disintegrating its 342 churches, a council of 450 Congregational ministers from forty-two States were listening to Dr. Noble, of Chicago, on the importance of teaching Congregational principles in China and Japan. And here in Chicago, while five wretched men, sworn to obey a secret lodge, are being tried for their lives for murdering Dr. Cronin in obedience to their lodge oaths, the American Missionary Association, which its Secretary Whipple used to say "was born for reform," meets, discusses, votes and adjourns, without a word of instruction or encouragement for its ministers and churches in the South who are struggling against the minions of the lodge, though they well know that they can no more "elevate" the colored people while they are badgered, befooled and taxed by the lodges, and their daughters debauched by their night picnics, than they can save Mexicans while under the shadow of their confessional, and in the hands of their priests.

THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION ANNIVERSARY.

This interesting association has concluded a harmonious annual session in this city. Its funds are in a good state, $376,000 having been donated. Nearly $37,000 have been received as income from the Daniel Hand fund, leaving a healthy balance of $4,000 and upward in the treasury. It was a beautiful sight to see all shades of human complexion represented by the speakers on the platform,—yellow, black, bronze, red and white; and the testimony given by the speakers against the blind venom of caste was earnest and able.

We regret to record that in a program running through days, no hint or allusion was contained protesting against the paganism of the lodge. We conversed with representatives of the ex-slaves from the South, and their united testimony is; that the secret lodges, often led by men destitute of religion and morals, are creeping in and corrupting their churches, and turning the black people back toward paganism and superstition. These men come up to the anniversary of the American Missionary Association as children to a mother, and have left in sorrowful amazement, that here in Chicago, where lodge assassins are on trial for a delegated murder, with which secret Southern clans have made them but too familiar, not one word has been spoken against the Masonic lodges, which in their lodge-room closets used to keep the garments of their Ku-Klux murderers!

The Mountain Whites, in Tennessee, were ably and eloquently represented; and their loyalty and sufferings during the slavery war moved the audience to tears. But no instance of their cruel torments, inflicted by rebel traitors, exceeded in savagery the case of the Southern Union man, near Little Rock, Arkansas, who was robbed of $2,000 and murdered; and the bandit who killed him was cleared by our Union officers at Little Rock, who were Masonic brethren with the rebel cutthroats who plundered and killed him for his allegiance to the Union flag. Further notice of the A. M. A. anniversary will be taken in the four numbers of the Cynosure ordered for New England.

LETTING IN THE LODGES.

Rev. J. M. Snyder, who has been a captain in our Union army, and a brave opponent of secret societies, writes thus in the Wesleyan Herald, Oct. 1st ult.:

"I believe that no person who loves the Lord Jesus Christ and obeys the Gospel of God, our Saviour, ought to be deprived of church membership." "The rule excluding Odd fellows and Masons could be defended, because they are religions in themselves; rivals of Christianity with Christ left entirely out." "But tens of thousands of Good Templars, Sons of Temperance, Loyal League, G. A. R.'s and many others, are liable to no such charge, and millions of men will, no doubt, be happy in heaven." "I have always contended for the New Testament ground."

We answer: So do we, and so should all. But the question is, "Do these members of secret societies, whom Mr. Snyder sends to heaven by millions, 'obey the Gospel of God, our Saviour?'"

The miscalled "Grand Army of the Republic," to which Mr. Snyder reputedly belongs, with its perpetual extension in "The Sons of Veterans," who belong to no army, never did, and, likely, never will, are simply a perpetual secret order, "yoked together with unbelievers." They serve no military end. They were organized after the fighting was done. They are not needed to help poor soldiers. The United States helps them, and all citizens back them with patriotic pride. Besides: Our "poor soldiers" will soon all be dead. The motive and end of this spurious "Grand Army" and Sons of Veterans, which is the same with the motives of other secret orders, is selfishness; that is, to "have a good time," be out nights, wear toggery and titles, and, on the part of their leaders, to get money, gain votes, and so promotion.

All such organizations tend to kill Christianity by rivalry, as, in Romish countries, holidays and celebrations prevent either religion, intelligence or good morals in the masses. For whatever brings men together in crowds, if it does not purify, corrupts them. There is nothing purifying in shams. And the "G. A. R." is a sham.

But what amazes us is that so fine an understanding as that of Bro. Snyder's does not see that the simple fact of a G. A. R. pledge to conceal their initiation and proceedings is, in itself, anti-Christ. It falls on a pure soul like the purple rays of the spectrum on the white nitrate of silver, turning it dark. It tramples on the example of Christ, who "in secret said nothing."

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

THE UNITED PRESBYTERIAN PASTORS OF BUFFALO.

BUFFALO, N. Y., Oct. 28, 1889.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I have just conversed with Revs. Dodds and Rusbridge, pastors of the First and Second United Presbyterian churches in this city. Their statement concerning a letter from our agent, W. B. Stoddard, in the Cynosure, Oct. 10, shows that Mr. Stoddard was mistaken in two particulars, viz.: Rev. Mr. Rusbridge is not and never was a Mason; and Rev. Mr. Dodds did not intend to defend the lodge.

The case, as they state it, is this: Caledonia U. P. Presbytery invited Mr. Stoddard to sit as a consultative member; voted to hear him at 8:30 o'clock, and did hear him a little after nine; and Rev. Mr. Rusbridge, who was in the chair, approved of Mr. Stoddard's remarks. But they are both comparatively new in their churches here, and the city is crawling with secret lodges. They did not think it best to admit Mr. Stoddard to speak in their churches as he has in a multitude of others; and in a somewhat brief and not well-considered conversation, they said they did not think it wise to discuss Masonry; that stirring the subject would increase the lodges, etc. This, though not intended, was an attack on Mr. Stoddard's mission, and the National Christian Association, which he represents. Moreover, one of the brethren said: "There is some good in the lodges; that if destitute and a Mason among strangers, he would sooner expect aid from the lodge than from a U. P. church, if a minister of that order."

This is what we have all been accustomed to hear from Masons; and it is, in verity, comparing the lodge and church to the disparagement of the church. Knowing how the U. P. churches and colleges in the West have stood bravely against the lodges, and as both parties were, perhaps, a trifle heated by friction of ideas, and especially as these two brethren say they "know nothing about Masonry," Mr. Stoddard felt bound to defend the U. P. church, and reprove what was actually a defence of the lodge. But these brethren appear to be sincere and capable men and ministers of Christ; and when they have looked into the organized deism of the lodge, and see that it is disintegrating their churches, this episode will turn out to the furtherance of the truth of Christ.

J. B.

THE N. C. A. BOARD MEETING.

The quarterly meeting of the N. C. A. Board was held on Thursday afternoon, but a quorum not being present, the business discussed awaits another meeting for final action. The matters considered were a loan of $500 to Bro. I. R. B. Arnold, the petition to Congress, the distribution of copies of the Cynosure in New England, and the disposition of a tract of land in Dakota donated to the N. C. A. The time was largely occupied with general discussion which was full of interest and zeal for the cause. An interesting feature of the meeting was the presence of a number of friends from abroad. They were Rev. C. C. Foote, of Detroit; Rev. Byron Gunner, late of New Iberia, La.; Rev. W. J. Gladwin, missionary from India; and Rev. Joseph Gomer, of the Sherbro mission, West Africa. The latter was invited to address the Board, which he did briefly. He told of the good effect from the reading of the Cynosure among friends in this country. The United Brethren missions in Africa occupy the whole Sherbro country. They have 400 baptized converts and 5,000 on their seekers' list. They occupy 361 villages and are now protected by the British government from native wars. All the probationers are required to cease from all heathen practices, secret societies, liquor drinking, etc.

The reports from Secretary Stoddard and Pres. J. Blanchard were intensely interesting, showing that the discussion of the lodge is taking deep hold upon the convictions of Christian people. At the same time the dread of unpopular discussion was in many places as strong as ever. This was particularly manifested in the late great national meetings of the Congregational churches in Worcester, New York and Chicago.

THE CRONIN TRIAL.—The taking of testimony had occupied nine days last Saturday, and the attorneys for the State had examined over sixty witnesses. There is some disappointment that they have not yet been able clearly to establish the connection of the Clan-na-Gael with the murder. The testimony seems to stop with the men on trial, whom every one knows are not the principals in the case. Does Mr. Longenecker intend to shield the lodge, satisfied if he can convict its tools who are under indictment? The facts of murder has been proved and the testimony has woven a strong cord about Burke and O'Sullivan. But Beggs, the senior guardian of Camp 20, Clan-na-Gael, has so far escaped very serious connection with the case, so far as the evidence goes. There is much more to be presented, and this aspect of affairs may change any day. The reports of confessions by Burke when he was in jail at Winnipeg to fellow prisoners are very sensational, and they so corroborate one another as to give them a very serious aspect. Not much of this evidence can be used in court, but it helps prepare the public mind for conviction. In the face of all the evidence before the coroner and in the criminal trial, there are yet frequent meetings of "Trianglers," or friends of the prisoners. At a meeting Sunday they started a subscription to aid in the defense, or the attempt to defeat justice; and the men engaged in this business are some of them respectable citizens.

—Rev. John Levington, of Michigan, is preparing a new book on "The Essential Oneness of all Secret Societies." It will be issued soon by the Wesleyan Publishing House, Syracuse, N. Y.

—Rev. R. G. Young, of Indianola, Iowa, in an article of great merit on the consecration of the Christian for the Master's work, in the Christian Instructor, writes very faithfully of separation from the entanglements of the lodge. He says: "In order to evangelistic work it is also necessary that we be free from false covenants and vows that intercept the divine covenant. A man that is at heart a Freemason, or an Odd-fellow, or is enthralled with any such profane covenant, is thereby disqualified for a full consecration to Christ. The idea that the Masonic oath is sacred, that God esteems it with favor, and that its faithful observance is regarded by him as worthy of his approbation, is most wicked. So of all professedly charitable symbols of like nature. They necessarily degrade the individual to an allegiance with the devil and with hell. Unless a man break or deny such an allegiance he cannot justly claim consecration to Christ."

PERSONAL NOTES.

—Rev. W. J. Gladwin spoke on the Sabbath in the Halsted Street M. E. church in this city, which grew out of a mission Sabbath-school founded and maintained by S. A. Kean, the N. C. A. auditor.

—Rev. S. Smith, a veteran of two ages of reform, is now pastor of the Wesleyan church of Oberlin, Louisiana. He was formerly located near the town of Kellerton, Iowa, noted for its Masonic outrage in June, 1881.

—"Mother" Pond, president of the Saratoga, N. Y., W. C. T. U., says: "I wonder what Prohibitionists want with secret societies." There is some hope that the good Dr. Potter of Elmwood Hall, Saratoga, will quit the Good Templars.

—Rev. I. J. Lansing and Mr. Chairman Diekie of the Prohibition National Committee spoke lately in the great Washburn Hall, Worcester, with great power of argument and invective, showing the hypocrisy of the Republican party, pretending temperance, while every child knows if it should lose the liquor vote it is dead.

—Rev. S. F. Porter returned on Friday from North Dakota in excellent health and good spirits, ready to begin his Southern journey. The plan of his work is being carefully laid off, and he has an almost youthful animation in undertaking what a few years ago would have been a formidable enterprise for a young man in the vigor of his strength.

—A brief dispatch from Tonica informs us of the shocking death of Bro. T. W. Baird, formerly a prominent citizen of Tonica, Ill., later residing in Vermillionville. "Shot and killed" was the message, and up to the time of going to press there are no further particulars. Bro. Baird was an earnest reformer and faithful Christian, and his sudden death is lamented by a wide circle of friends.

—Mr. C. B. Knight of Worcester, Mass., is expecting to spend the winter season in the South, in connection with a colonization enterprise at the new town of Demorest, Ga. This town is built up by a company which will prohibit drinking, gambling, and prostitution. It is pleasantly located, with railway connections, in northeastern Georgia, in the vicinity of iron mines, old gold diggings, and with a fine water power.

—Rev. J. P. Richards of Fort Scott, Kansas, has in the mercy of God arisen from a bed of intense pain, which for weeks threatened to be a bed of death. He is now by advice of his physician traveling by easy and careful stages in Illinois and Wisconsin, with the hope that a change of scenery and employment will reinvigorate his system. He expects to attend the meeting of the Illinois Association at Elgin this week, and take in later the National W. C. T. U. convention in this city. He will then spend some in Wisconsin among friends.

—Joseph Cook has recently purchased the summit of Mount Defiance, in his native town of Ticonderoga, N. Y., where Burgoyne erected the batteries which drove General St. Clair out of Fort Ticonderoga. It is Mr. Cook's intention to have a monument erected on this height commemorating the soldiers from Ticonderoga who died in the Civil War, and with tablets in honor of Samuel Champlain, Montcalm, Lord Howe, Ethan Allen and others whose exploits have made the soil of Ticonderoga historic. The outlook from this summit on the Adirondacks, Lake George and the Green Mountains is extensive and magnificent.

—Rev. Byron Gunner attended the annual meeting of the American Missionary Association in this city last week, and proposes to spend a few months lecturing through the North on the situation of the colored race in this country. He is urged to this by several pastors of Cleveland, Ohio, where he lately lectured. The colored people of that city and Oberlin are also deeply interested, and have subscribed to a fund to meet expenses not otherwise paid. The Cleveland Leader published Bro. Gunner's address, and accompanied it with a half-column editorial. Sabbath evening he addressed a large audience in the College hall at Wheaton, which was thrilled with horror at the atrocities visited upon the black race in large portions of the South.

given of my address in the Free Methodist church in the evening. As a result I had a good audience, some 300, largely young people being present, and good, I believe, was accomplished. Rev. O. M. Owen and family, with others, made my stay here very pleasant.

Reaching this town, in conversation I learned that one Rathbun had lectured and preached here, and was that night to show the people how they made Masons. Feeling an interest in the matter, I proceeded to look the man up, and found him on the street giving out N. C. A. tracts. As we had both changed since our last meeting, I hardly knew him, nor did he at first recognize me. Elder Rathbun looks much better since he has partially recovered from his various Masonic mobbings. He contemplates again engaging in our reform work. He feels that while the life of a pastor is much more pleasant, he can not be true to his faith and keep silent in regard to this great and crying evil. The lectures have not been as well attended as they probably would have been had not there been an Indian show here at the same time, but the interest has grown from the first. Your agent has spoken twice, and is billed for Sabbath services. My intention is to remain here some days and see if something can not be done for the salvation of this community from lodge rule. The lodge controls; the churches are nearly dead. Three churches, not a resident pastor, not a regular meeting in two and only occasionally in the third (the M. E.)—this is the situation. I find Bro. Byron Tunnickliff interested as ever in our cause. Friends in this part of the State wishing work should write me here at once. For Christ and reform, W. B. STODDARD.

A Congress of Churches will be held in Tremont Temple, Boston, December 11 and 12, 1889, to consider the relation of the Secret Lodge system to Civil Liberty and the Christian Religion.

OHIO.

To the friends of the Anti-secrecy reform in Ohio:—The undersigned, having undertaken to act as agent for the Ohio Christian Association, respectfully appeals to all who are interested in our great reform to aid in the prosecution of the work. There is in our State a vast field and, in many places, an open door. But the work cannot be carried on without means. All subscriptions should be sent to Rev. E. Thompson, secretary and treasurer, Senecaaville, Gurnsey county, Ohio.

H. H. HINMAN.

—Mrs. Clara C. Hoffman, of Missouri, writing to the Union Signal from Connecticut, says: "The Christian Union has furnished the liquor dealers a fresh editorial, setting forth the beauties of high license in Massachusetts and Pennsylvania, and opposing prohibition. This leaflet and one by Prof. Sanborn Cobb in the Princeton Review are scattered as plentifully as autumn leaves." It is suggested that in gratitude the Liquor Dealers' Association ought to adopt the Christian Union as their national organ.

There should be a general uprising and expression of American sentiment against all secret oath-bound organizations like the Clan-na-Gael. It should be a criminal offence to belong to them. —N. Y. Mail and Express.

THE HOME.

THE DAY OF GOD.

This is the day of light:

Let there be light to-day:

O Day-spring, rise upon our night,
And chase its gloom away.

This is the day of rest:

Our failing strength renew;
On weary brain and troubled breast,
Shed Thou thy freshening dew.

This is the day of peace:

Thy peace our spirits fill;
Bid Thou the blast of discord cease,
The waves of strife be still.

This is the day of prayer:

Let earth to heaven draw near;
Lift up our hearts to seek Thee there:
Come down to meet us here.

This is the first of days:

Send forth Thy quickening breath,
And wake dead souls to love and praise,
O Vanquisher of death.

—John Ellerton.

IS IT FATALITY?

No one can fail to have observed strange facts in relation to the observance of the Lord's day, or the Sabbath, as it is called. During our war it was noticed that, in a large majority of cases, in which a battle was fought on Sunday, the tide turned against, and the decision proved fatal to the attacking party. It may have been only a coincidence, but it is a marked coincidence. It seems strange that from Bull Run to Gettysburg, the army that forced the attack on the Lord's day, in almost every case, was greatly broken and defeated before the battle ended. Exceptions to the rule may be found, but the instances of the kind we mention are so numerous, so signal, that they cannot fail to draw attention.

The great number of fatal accidents occurring on Sunday has often been spoken of by persons writing on the subject. They have shown that, without any assignable cause, the number of accidents occurring on Sunday is much greater than any other day of the week. Making all due allowance for the exemption from labor and the leisure enjoyed on this day by persons in the lower walks of life, and the disposition to strong drink by men not at work, we have a singular fact to account for, because statistics show the accidental death on Sunday is very largely in excess of casualties on any other day of the week. We may not be able to build a theory upon this fact alone, and we would not press it beyond a legitimate use. If we should find that on Friday more persons were drowned than on any other day of the week, and could find no plausible explanation of it, we should think it strange. So of Sunday. There are less persons exposed to accidental death on that day than on any other, and yet the deaths are more numerous. Even the secular press has its attention called to the fact, which it states, but cannot explain, only on the vague ground of coincidence. The Boston Globe, a few weeks ago, had this paragraph:

The record of last Sunday's drowning accidents in New England is long enough to make superstitious people wonder if there is a peculiar fatality attending Sunday swimming and boating. At Westboro, in this State, a young man of 25 years was drowned while boating. Two young men in Pembroke, while engaged in the same amusement, met the same fate. A saloon-keeper of Providence was drowned while bathing. A young man of Arlington, Mass., although a good swimmer, suddenly sank without any known cause, and never came to the surface again. At Woburn two young women were drowned by the upsetting of a sailboat. At Biddeford another sailboat capsized, and another young woman met her death. In Worcester a young laborer fell from a boat and was drowned. All these drownings occurred on a single Sunday, and it is probable that the list here is far from complete. It is suggestive, to say the least.

Now, while we would not, in our ignorance of divine providence, say that these and similar cases are instances of God's displeasure at Sabbath-breaking, we would ask why it may not be so? When secular papers talk this way, it is time for us to think. God has hallowed the Sabbath day, and made it holy. He has in the organic law of human society, commanded us to "remember the Sabbath day and keep it holy." He has, in his Scriptures, denounced the most severe punishments on those who violate the Sabbath. He has restricted the use of the day, and promised blessings to those who properly keep and observe it.

Then why may we not expect his judgments to fall on those who trample his law under foot, and take his day for unhallowed things? Why may not a Sabbath-breaking corporation, that uses Sunday to increase its dividends, expect that somewhere along the line of its operations it will meet with failure and disaster? Why may we not expect a merchant who keeps his business going seven days in the week to come to bankruptcy and commercial ruin? Why may we not expect men and women who makes the Lord's day one of pleasure and sin, to meet with some manifestation of that righteous abhorrence of sin which fills the heart of God?

If anything is sure, it is that trifling with the one day that God has reserved for himself, and around which he has put so many restrictions, will meet with divine displeasure. God says so, and gives us the reasons why he is displeased with such as abuse holy time. We become unbelievers when we doubt what God has said about this sin.

The Sabbath is God's day; it is, also, man's day. The Creator, when creation's work was done, set apart one-seventh portion of time for man's good. To save it from profanation and abuse, to keep it for man's best interests he put it into the Sinaitic code; made it a part of the religious life of the world. To insure its wise use, he commanded men to keep it holy, he threatened woes on such as profane it, he guarded it and hallowed it, that man might have it preserved, not only for his worship, but for the good of the creature whose mind and body were to be benefited by it. God has made no provision for man's temporal good of more value and significance than that which provides a day of rest. The laboring man who toils all the week, from Monday morning to Saturday night, should bless God for making this wise arrangement for his benefit, for it is found that men cannot labor, with body or mind, seven days in the week without breaking down. Doubtless, the reason why so many business men succumb at fifty, when they should live and keep their faculties until four-score years, comes from the fact that they have no Sabbath rest. Sunday, if not like all other days, is not kept according to the Lord's wise arrangement. Business pushes into it. The strain of the week is not broken when Sunday comes, and the mind, robbed of its needed rest, breaks. Journalists, merchants, literary men, laboring men, should note the fact that they go on with their work on Sunday at their own peril.

Looking at the subject in this way, we do not think it strange that God should mark with his displeasure the course of those who trample on his law, and take the time which he has reserved for worship and religious recreation, for worldly pleasures or manual labor. The Sabbath-breaker is at war with God, and God has providence on his side. Every violation of the Sabbath is an insult to God, a defiance, and the man who violates the day should expect God to punish him.—Christian Inquirer.

THE SABBATH STRONGER THAN ARMIES.

Count Montalembert, one of the most eminent of French statesmen, once wrote:

"Men are surprised sometimes by the ease with which the city of London is kept in order by a garrison of three small battalions and two squadrons, while to control the capital of France, which is half the size, 40,000 troops of the line, and 60,000 National Guards are necessary. But the stranger who arrives in London on Sabbath morning, when he sees everything suspended in that gigantic capital in obedience to God—when, in the center of that colossal business, he finds silence and repose scarcely interrupted by the bells which call to prayer and by the immense crowds on their way to church, then his astonishment ceases. He understands that there is another curb for a Christian people besides that made by bayonets, and when the law of God is fulfilled with such a solemn submissiveness, God himself (if I dare use the words) charges himself with the police arrangements.

Rev. Dr. Charles S. Robinson, pastor of the Memorial Presbyterian church of New York, and the compiler of some of our best church hymn and tune books, says: "There is such a thing as religious dissipation. You will indulge in it if you ride three miles in a horse-car on the Sabbath to church when there is a church within two blocks. I have traveled all over creation and back again, and let me tell you that you don't want the French or German Sunday over here. In no other language save your own are there words that correspond to our 'wife,' 'comfort,' or 'home.' The French for wife is ma femme, literally, 'my female.' How do you like that? O no; you don't want foreign customs here. You must resist their impertinent encroachments. How? I cannot tell you the details. But just let me tell you that you needn't have a foreign Sabbath in your city if you don't want it. The devil will fly from a determined opposition. I heartily sympathize with you in your efforts, but I am afraid I have talked sentiment this afternoon and haven't done you much good. Let me give you this one thought, however: You will stand steadily against these encroachments when you care enough for the Lord's day to set yourself at work for it."

A WORD OF ENCOURAGEMENT TO A BOY.

Immediately after the battle of Fair Oaks, in which I was wounded, I obtained a leave of absence and went to Maine, my own State, to remain there till I should again be fit for active service. During the period of my convalescence, at the request of Governor Washburn, I visited different parts of the State and held public meetings. The purpose was to solicit volunteers and encourage them to push to the front and fill the vacant places which disease and disastrous war were constantly making.

When so engaged at the town of Rockland I was entertained by a worthy family. As we were conversing earnestly in the household about topics that then absorbed universal interest, a little boy of some seven or eight years came and seated himself near me. His bright face lighted up with manifest ardor when any story of the war was related.

Noticing the clearness and fullness of his large eyes, and the marked expression given to his handsome, ruddy face when they were raised, I called his attention to this effect, and told the lad that I would give him a motto. It was, "Look up!"

Ten years afterward, when stationed in Washington, I was standing one evening near the doorway of a large hall and gazing upon the happy faces of the people, young and old, gathered there for social entertainment. A young man, straight and tall, with head erect, came toward me and accosted me with a pleasant smile of recognition.

"Why, General—, you have quite forgotten me. I am Ollie F., of Rockland. Don't you remember giving me a motto during your visit at my father's in 1862?"

I could not then recall the incident, so I shook my head, vexed at myself. How one dislikes to forget what another seems so plainly to remember!

"You gave me the words, 'Look up.' They are my motto."

The scene was revived in my memory, and the beautiful family picture, of which the little boy formed so striking a part, came back to me.

He had, indeed, been looking up in body and in mind.

It is wonderful how a word, a smile, or even a gesture often affects the character of a child.

You may be walking along the street. You meet a child apparently in deep grief. The child's grief is real, and often deeper than we, who would measure it by the petty cause, are wont to think. You take him by the hand, lift him up, lead him gently along and turn his mind away from his sorrow by your tact. In nine cases out of ten you have thus won a child's heart and given it a new direction—an upward impulse. It helps him to "look up."

Give a bright boy a good maxim, a Bible maxim; get it fixed in his memory with rootlets in his heart; it becomes of more value to him than gold.

"My mother taught me when a very small boy those four words, 'Thou God seest me,' said a marked Christian gentleman, "and they have often stopped me when I was just on the point of yielding to a temptation. They were the means of my giving my heart and my life to the Master's service."

Once during our war my command had met with a terrible disaster, and my heart was almost crushed. Complaints were numerous and denunciations were bitter. I felt as if the clouds of darkness had enveloped our cause, and that there was little hope for it or for me. As I entered my tent in this gloomy frame of mind I happened to raise my eyes to the hanging tablets attached to the inner tent pole. Some kind Christian soul had given them to me. There was a motto for each day of the month. I read the old words taught me in my plastic childhood. "The Lord is my shepherd, I shall not want."

"Sure enough!" I exclaimed. Hope returned. The clouds already began to break, and even then in that valley I caught glimpses of the hilltops of ultimate success for the precious cause. It is good for the body to look up. It gives dignity and grace to the carriage. It is better still for the spirit. David said, "I will lift up mine eyes unto the hills from whence cometh my help." It was the same up-looking that brought the humble shepherd lad to be king of Israel, and to become a type of the Immanuel, the King of men.

Let us then ever encourage the children and each other to "look up," for great visions are in store for them and us!—Gen. O. O. Howard.

"BOYS WILL BE BOYS."

"Boys will be boys." We resent the old saying,
Current with men;
Let it be heard, in excuse for our straying,
Never again!
Ours is a hope that is higher and clearer,
Ours is a purpose far brighter and dearer,
Ours is an aim that should silence the jeerer:
We will be men!

"Boys will be boys" is an unworthy slander;
Boys will be men!
The spirit of Philip, in young Alexander,
Kindles again.

As the years of our youth fly swiftly away,
As brightens about us the light of life's day,
As the glory of manhood dawns on us, we say:
We will be men.

When "Boys will be boys" you exclaim with a wink,
Answer us, men!
How old are those "boys?" Is their age, do you think,
Fifty or ten?

It may be the boys with whom you used to go
Considered wild oats not unpleasant to sow;
But how looks the harvest you hoped wouldn't grow,
Now you are men?

"Boys will be boys?" Yes if boys may be pure,
Models for men;
If their thoughts may be modest, their truthfulness sure,
Say it again!

If boys will be boys such as boys ought to be—
Boys full of sweet-minded, light-hearted glee—
Let boys be boys, brave, loving, and free,
Till they are men!

DO YOUR BEST.

"When I was a little boy," said a gentleman one day to a friend with whom he was talking, "I paid a visit to my grandfather. He was an aged man, and wore a black velvet cap and knee-breeches, with large silver buckles at the knees. When I went to say good-bye to him, he took me between his knees, kissed me kindly, and, laying his hand on my head, said: 'My dear boy, I have only one thing to say to you. Will you try to remember it?' I looked him in the face and said, 'I will, grandpa.' 'Well,' said he, 'it is this: 'Whatever you have to do, do the best you can.' This was my grandfather's legacy to me. It was worth more than thousands of gold and silver. I never forgot the words, and have tried to act upon them."—Ex.

LETTERS OF RECOMMENDATION.

A gentleman once advertised for a boy to assist him in his office.

Nearly fifty applied for the place. Out of the whole number, he in a short time chose one and sent the rest away.

"I should like to know," said a friend "on what ground you chose that boy. He had not a single recommendation with him."

"You are mistaken," said the gentleman, "he had a great many."

"He wiped his feet when he came in, and closed the door after him; showing that he was orderly and tidy."

"He gave up his seat instantly to the lame old man who entered; showing that he was kind and thoughtful."

"He took off his hat when he came in, and answered my questions promptly and respectfully; showing that he was polite."

"He lifted up the book, which I had purposely placed on the floor, and placed it on the table, while all the rest had stepped over it, or shoved it aside; showing that he was careful."

"And he waited patiently for his turn, instead of pushing the others aside; showing that he was modest."

"When I talked with him I noticed that his clothes were carefully brushed, his hair in nice order, and his teeth white as milk."

"When he wrote his name, I observed that his finger nails were clean instead of being tipped with jet like the handsome little fellow in the blue jacket."

"Don't you call these things letters of recommendation? I do; and what I can tell you about a boy by using my eyes for ten minutes is worth more than all the fine letters he can bring me."

TEMPERANCE.

WHAT IS AN INDUSTRY?

If, upon our streets, there stood a man from morning to night, and from night to morning, with glass and spoon, mixing a little hot water, a little brandy, and a little sugar, and when well mixed would pour it into the gutter, but for every glass thus mixed he would require from some one of our laborers, mechanics, business men, or professional gentlemen, ten cents; how long would the community submit to his operations, even though he plied them industriously? The Common Council would be appealed to for the protection of a free and intelligent people against his robberous outrage. But, how circumstances alter cases! He goes before the Council, pays the price, takes out a license, fits up a room, puts on a white apron, mixes a little hot water, a little brandy and a little sugar together, takes the ten cents as before, then pours the mixture into a man, and man and mixture go together into the gutter; and we call the work he is doing an industry; which the industrious and order-loving must give their "cool cash to support." We should ponder well these truths. Reflect upon what this traffic, for which we take "blood money," is sending by way of the gutter to ruin and death. First, and least, millions of money that should give home comforts to wives and children. The principles of free government, for which our fathers died. That is not all; to keep full the ranks of the 200,000 drunkards annually created by this death-dealing traffic, one boy out of every five, through city, town and country, must be given; one girl out of every five throughout the land must be laid upon the altars of sorrow, misery and lust, that this industry of our Christian civilization of the nineteenth century may go on. If famine or pestilence was sweeping through our land, smiting every fifth boy and girl, taking food, clothing and shelter from millions of other people, how we would mourn. Christians would appoint their days of fasting and prayer, that the hand of the avenger might be stayed. Infidels would rail out against the God whose existence they doubt, for dealing in heartless cruelty with the creatures of his creation. The responsibility and results of this traffic will be laid at some one's door. Shall it be at yours or mine? That we may answer this question in safety to our own souls, let us devoutly pray to the God of wisdom to see ourselves and our connection with this evil as he sees it.—Narcissa White Kinney.

A WHITECHAPEL VICTIM.

The Pall Mall Gazette says: In his speech at the Presbyterian Synod the other evening the Rev. John MacNeill created quite a sensation by telling the following tale: He was speaking of temperance, and said that last Sunday, when he preached a temperance sermon at the Tabernacle, he received a letter that had been written by a lady on the danger of the use at communion of fermented wine. The lady in her letter told a sad story of an inherited passion for drink. There were four or five of them—several brothers and two sisters—the children of intemperate parents. Her sister had unfortunately inherited the craving, and before she was fourteen had taken to drink. The others became converted and did all in their power to cure their sister, but it was of no use. The sister at length married comfortably and children were born. But the craving for drink grew greater and greater, and at length she was sent to a home for inebriates, where she stayed a year. She left apparently, said the sister, a changed woman. Soon after, however, her husband caught a severe cold, and before going out one morning drank a glass of hot whisky—taking care, however, not to do so in the presence of his wife. Then, as was his custom before leaving, he kissed his wife. At once the fumes of the alcohol passed into her and in an hour she was a drunk and roaring woman. She went from worse to worse, and at last left her husband and her children, one of them a cripple through her drunkenness. The husband died two years ago, a white-haired and broken-hearted man, though only forty-five years old. "Need I add," said the sister in her letter, "what became of her? Her story is that of Annie Chapman, one of the recent Whitechapel victims. That was my sister!"

DIPSOMANIA, OR THIRST-MADNESS.

The periodical desire for strong drink which sometimes besets individuals, otherwise moral and exemplary, is a species of paroxysmal mania beyond the control of the patient. It is quite certain that there are thousands of cases of remittent drunkenness, which presents the specific symptoms of disease. The periodical drunkard is not an habitual dram-drinker. But at particular times he appears to be attacked with a thirst-madness which deprives him of the power of volition, and hurries him into the most terrible excesses. During the interval between the paroxysms, he may be a perfectly sober man.

For many weeks, or even months, he may have steadily refused to taste a drop of liquor; may, indeed, have felt no inclination for it, but on the contrary regarded it with disgust. And yet, when the fit comes on, the raging thirst for alcohol utterly paralyzes his conscience and his will. A man in this condition is a monomaniac, and should be treated as one. If put under proper restraint at the commencement of this furor, the dipsomaniac, in nine cases out of ten, might be tided over his difficulty in the course of a week, and a perseverance in the course at the recurrence of the hallucination would probably eventuate in a complete cure. It is not easy to persuade the world that all drunkenness is not voluntary. The law does not recognize dipsomania. It treats all inebriates alike. This seems to be unjust, though it is hard to say where the line should be drawn between free-will access and that which proceeds from an uncontrollable mania.—Munford's Magazine.

"Unless a powerful political party outlaws the liquor traffic, there is reason to fear that municipal misrule may imperil republican institutions in all the larger American cities, and in the States under the control of such cities, and become so virulent as to be incapable of being put down at last only by military force. It is for Americans, who believe in government of the people for the people and by the people, to see that such government is made so wise and strong as not to perish from the earth. There is growing up in the liquor traffic a power that already has its clutches upon our throats; and a loss of time in organizing a national reform may be the loss forever of an opportunity to save our nation from being wrecked by municipal misrule."—Joseph Cook.

At Indianapolis, Ind., Oct. 15, a sale was made of the Leiber, Maus and Schmidt breweries to a company in which English capitalists are represented, for $2,500,000. A large part of the money has been paid and the rest is to be paid over in a short time. The Schmidt and Leiber concerns were sold for $1,000,000 each and Maus for $500,000. The total output of the three breweries is about 110 barrels daily.

Cases of drunkenness among children in Berlin are becoming very common, according to a letter in the London Standard. The new and startling vice is supposed to be fostered by the pernicious habits of parents of giving alcohol to extremely young children, and allowing them to drink wine and beer like adult persons.

A jury at Monticello, Ill., Friday, fined William Goddard, a saloon-keeper at Bement, $8,000 and costs for continued violation of the law in selling liquor in Piatt county.

THANKSGIVING PROCLAMATION.

By the President of the United States—a proclamation:
A highly favored people, mindful of their dependence on the bounty of divine Providence, should seek fitting occasion to testify gratitude and ascribe praise to Him who is the author of their many blessings. It behooves them to look back with thankful hearts over the past year, and bless God for his infinite mercy in vouchsafing to our land enduring peace, to our people freedom from pestilence and famine, to our husbandmen abundant harvests, and to them that labor a recompense of their toil.

Now, therefore, I, Benjamin Harrison, President of the United States of America, do earnestly recommend that Thursday, the twenty-eighth day of this present month of November, be set apart as a day of National thanksgiving and prayer, and that the people of our country, ceasing from the cares and labors of their working day, shall assemble in their respective places of worship and give thanks to God, who has prospered us on our way and made out paths the paths of peace; beseeching Him to bless the day to our present and future good, making it truly one of thanksgiving for each reunited home circle as for the Nation at large.

In witness thereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the city of Washington, this first day of November, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighty-nine, and of the independence of the United States the one hundred and fourteenth.

By the President: BENJAMIN HARRISON.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The word of inspiration, vs. 1, 2. We notice (1) David's humility. The old pagan heroes claimed to be sons of the gods, and tried to veil their low and obscure origin in the mists of fable; but the fine gold of David's noble nature was not alloyed by any such absurd pride. He never forgot that he was the son of Jesse, and had once kept his father's sheep. (2) His glory is all in the Lord. If he refers to his exalted station it is to make it an occasion for praising Jehovah, who had so wonderfully raised him up from his low estate. (3) To his virtue of humility he adds knowledge. Though it may seem like boasting, he will not deny what God has done for him. (4) He is filled with the Spirit, so that God uses him as a mouth-piece. "His word was in my tongue." Other psalms tell us how his daily and nightly meditation was in God's law. How it was sweeter than honey to his taste, and more highly esteemed by him than the most precious things of earth. God can speak through such men. They are like instruments in perfect tune, responding to every touch of the Master's fingers.

2. The universal King, vs. 3-5. These verses can sustain a double meaning. It is the picture of a just and righteous earthly government, and the blessings which spring from it; but the primary meaning, the substance of this sublime vision is only to be found in Christ. By a series of most beautiful and poetic images the blessings are foreshown which shall attend his universal dominion. The clouds of oppression and injustice shall roll away, and the poor of the earth, the down-trodden masses, will rejoice like the tender grass when the sun shines out after a refreshing shower. The covenant God makes with every Christian is as sure and eternal as the covenant he made with David, and every vision we have of his almighty power and goodness should make us exclaim with David, "This is all my salvation and all my desire," to be an heir of God and a co-heir with Christ in the eternal kingdom which he has promised. As justice and mercy are the foundations of Christ's throne, so they who would share it must do justly, love mercy, and walk humbly before their God." (Micah 6: 8.) This should prevent their engaging in any business that is hurtful to their fellow men, such as raising or selling tobacco, knowing that it is annually the physical and moral ruin of thousands. It will not only prevent them from putting the bottle to their neighbor's lips, but as Christian men it will prevent them from licensing others to do it. It will keep them from entering a secret lodge in order to gain unfair advantages over their fellow beings, whose poverty or principles will not allow of their joining. An heir of the heavenly kingdom should behave like a king. He should have faith in the high destiny that awaits him, "though he make it not to grow;" though poverty and misfortune attend him, and the fulfillment of the covenant must be looked for entirely outside the natural realm of sense and time.

3. The doom of the wicked, vs. 6, 7. The wicked are likened to thorns. They are not only useless but noxious. It is impossible to go through this world a neutral, and do neither good nor evil. It was only after sin cursed the earth that it brought forth thorns and thistles. So before paradise is restored sin must be destroyed. Heaven is wide, but there is no place in it for evil. The church is likened to a lily among thorns, and Christ has told us that the tares must grow with the wheat until the final judgment; but he also tells us that the separating process will begin before. There are signs which indicate that it has even now begun, and the solemn question which each should ask himself is this: "Have I separated myself from the world? Am I wholly the Lord's?"

PRACTICAL SUGGESTIONS FROM PELOUBET'S QUARTERLY.

CHRIST THE SUN.—What the sun does for the natural world, that he does for the spiritual world. (1) He is the source of light. (2) He is the source of power. Nearly all the power in the world comes directly or indirectly from the sun. (3) He is the source of life. "We know that light is life-generating and health-sustaining; that without it man becomes blighted, even as the parched grass of the field." (4) He is the source of comfort and cheer. (5) He is the source of the beauty of holiness, as all the glories of color come from the sun. (6) He shines everywhere, enlightening all the earth.—P.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—Mr. Moody was present at the State Y. M. C. A. meeting at Topeka, Kansas, last month. The farewell meeting was one long to be remembered. Just in front of the platform sat Charles L. Helmick, Charles E. Mails, and E. Kingman, of Kansas, and R. Coddington, of Nebraska, all of whom leave America in December with Rev. H. Grattan Guinness of London, as pioneer missionaries to the Sudan, in Africa. All spoke briefly, and gave their parting messages to the young men of Kansas. Their words touched many hearts, and their spirit of devotion led many to consecrate their all to the Master's service. Probably the most striking feature of the convention was the spirit of prayer which seemed to prevail everywhere.

—Mr. T. K. Cree, an assistant of the evangelist Moody in the great tabernacle meetings of 1876, writes thus to the Watchman from Paris: "Pere Hyacinthe, who came out of the church of Rome some years ago, and who created no little stir in America, has a small church near Notre Dame. He was the most eloquent preacher in the Catholic church and Notre Dame was crowded every time he was announced to preach. He is now neither Catholic or Protestant. His service is quite like that of the Catholic church, with acolytes, candles, incense, etc. He draws good audiences, but many are English and Americans who are attracted by his reputation and eloquence. Had he come boldly out of the Catholic church and been filled with the power of the Gospel he could have moved France as no other man I know of could do."

—Rev. Dr. and Mrs. H. M. Scudder, formerly of Plymouth church, Chicago, have been compelled, through the illness of the latter, to leave their self-sought scene of usefulness in Japan, and have returned to Southern California.

—Dr. Wm. Johnston writes enthusiastically in the Midland of the meeting of the Woman's United Presbyterian Board in his church at College Springs, Iowa.

—The general statistics for the whole Lutheran church of the country are 4,633 pastors and professors, 1,636 parochial school teachers, 7,543 congregations and 1,163,746 communicants.

—The Chicago Bible Society recently held a special meeting and organized for the more systematic prosecution of its work. A committee composed of representatives of most of the evangelical churches was appointed. It is desired to set at work thirty or forty agents for distributing the Bible and doing missionary work in the homes of the people in and about this city.

—The Christian church held the annual meeting of their Foreign Missionary Society in Louisville, Ky. This church has done and is doing a good work in many parts of Catholic Europe, in Mohammedan countries, and in India and China and Japan. It has in foreign fields 6 missions, 30 stations, 69 missionaries, and 3,000 communicants. During the last year $62,000 has been expended, 7 new missionaries employed and 617 converts have been added. A great work has likewise been done in the home mission field.

—The State Christian Endeavor conventions held in October of this year have been larger and more enthusiastic gatherings than any similar meetings ever held. In one week State conventions were held in New York,

New Jersey, Connecticut, New Hampshire and Massachusetts. In every State audiences assembled that crowded the largest church or hall in the city where the meeting was held, and without exception the societies were reported as growing more rapidly and healthily than ever before.

—The Swedish Augustana Synod reports 291 pastors, 288 parochial school teachers, 582 congregations, 74,234 communicants and 11,506 children in their parochial schools. The contributions of this synod for one year are also worthy of notice. For educational purposes $16,414.48; for home missions $15,901.63; for foreign missions $6,607.39; for orphans and church extension, etc., $27,749.54; making a total of $66,673.04 for what is usually termed benevolence. This synod supports 8 institutions of learning and 8 institutions of mercy.

—Dr. A. T. Pierson, late of Bethany Church, Philadelphia, sails for Great Britain, Nov. 9, in response to a loud call from the Central Committee in Edinburgh, which conducted his missionary campaign in Scotland in 1888. After a few months spent in England, Scotland and Ireland, he expects to return to this country and will be open to any call of God, and to any work which may seem to be of God. The session of Bethany church proposed that their pastor should retain a sort of unique connection with it as a sort of missionary pastor or bishop; that thus he should go freely wherever called of God to stir up greater activity in the church at large. But on mature consideration Dr. Pierson foresaw that such a relation might interfere with both the calling of another pastor, and with his cordial acceptance of such a call, and in order to leave the field without any such hindrance, he preferred to sever his connection entirely. When a new pastor is called, should he coincide, such a missionary bishopric may be instituted, and the previous pastor be invited to resume connection with the church in this new relation.

—The Record of the Free Church of Scotland states that there are 47 Protestant Jewish missionary societies in the world, employing 377 missionaries among the Jews, and spending about a half-million dollars annually. There is, therefore, about one missionary for every 17,000 Jews. About 80,000 copies of Delitsch's Hebrew New Testament have been distributed in Eastern Europe and Siberia, while of Salkinson's Hebrew Testament two editions of 200,000 have appeared. It has been estimated that fully 100,000 Jews have, during the century, been brought into the church of Christ.

—During the past year British Foreign Missionary societies have contributed $6,134,000 for work in pagan and Mohammedan lands. Of this amount $2,300,000 came from societies connected with the Church of England; $1,885,000 from English and Welsh Nonconformists; $1,014,000 from the Presbyterians in Scotland and Ireland.

—A lady who has labored for fifteen years in Ceylon writes: "A marvelous change has taken place since the winter mission of 1887. Many of the planters, who were considered a very difficult class to influence, have come out grandly on the Lord's side, and now carry on work among their own gangs of coolies. Moreover, the power of God has, of late, been remarkably manifested among the soldiers stationed in Ceylon, and several meetings for prayer are held weekly. So we have very great cause for thankfulness, but we are not satisfied, for much remains to be done. God is graciously sending us again his servant, Rev. G. C. Grubb, and we are praying for a mighty outpouring of the Holy Spirit on the Island."

—Dr. G. W. Knox believes that Japan will yet become the center of the Christian agencies that are to revolutionize the East. Last year the Japanese converts gave for church and missionary purposes a sum equivalent to $600,000 from 25,000 Christians in the United States, "a standard that no denomination has yet reached."

—The Japanese government has removed the tax from Christian churches, thus placing them on the same basis of Shinto and Buddhist temples. The barriers are breaking down. The mission of Col. Olcott, the noted theosophist, to Japan was a failure, while the visit of Secretary Wishard, representing the Y. M. C. Associations of the United States, was a grand success.

—Though faith in the old religions is certainly declining in Japan, yet there are still over 250,000 Buddhist priests in the empire—over eight times as many priests as Christians—and the old superstitions have yet a very strong hold upon the masses.

—Since March 1 the missionaries in the northwestern district of the American Sunday-school Union have established 395 Sunday-schools, with 2,347 teachers and 11,211 scholars, besides aiding 1,537 other schools. They have also held 2,295 meetings, made 10,490 visits to families, distributed 2,298 Bibles and Testaments, and traveled 100,760 miles.

—Among the converts to Christianity from Mohammedanism at Oromiah there are five Sayids, descendants of Mohammed, who are held in special awe and reverence. They attribute their conversion to reading the New Testament.

—Rev. Mr. Noyes, of Canton, says that $200,000,000 is spent in China annually on ancestral worship alone. He found that the ratio of gifts to income, in several families, ranged from one-fifth to one-third, and in no case was so small as one-tenth.

IN BRIEF.

The young wife of George Lear, of Fort Dodge, died lately in horrible agony, as the result of an explosion of kerosene. In her haste to prepare her husband's dinner she was filling a lighted kerosene stove when the can exploded, covering her with flames. She rushed into the streets, the wind fanned the flames, and her flesh was roasted till it dropped from the bones.

Mr. Richardson, the young Boston naturalist who recently made the ascent of a volcano near Toluca in Mexico, has received fresh orders from the British Museum to go to Sierra de Colima and gradually work his way down into Guatemala, making a thorough exploration of that republic, and next going carefully through Nicaragua. The journey will probably be of two years' duration.

Among the new small parks which the Legislature has provided for New York city is one which will convert to decent uses what is now, and has been for years, the very worst portion of the city. The large city block bounded by Muberry, Baxter, Bayard and Park streets, situated just north of Five Points, is to be condemned under the law of "eminent domain" and be hereafter used as a public park. It is now densely populated by the very lowest class of foreigners. Tenement houses, vile saloons, houses of ill-fame, and misery of every form and shape has its abode there. It will be a blessing to the city to have this plague spot changed and purified.

Says a Bangor, Me., special to the New York Times: The Canadian Pacific has perfected a time table for the running of a mail train which for speed will eclipse anything known to the history of rail-roading. No passengers will be taken, and it is to run from Vancouver or Port Moody, B. C., to St. John, N. B.—from the Pacific to the Atlantic—in four days. It was requested by the home government for the speedy transit of the English mail which passes between that country and China, Japan, Australia, and ports in the Indian Ocean where there are English interests. The experimental train will be given four days. Fourteen locomotives will be run, each doing about 250 miles. These or some of them are now ready for the rail, and will be distinguished by having red smokestacks, driving wheels, and running gear. Though not of extra weight, the capacity of the tender will be double that of ordinary machines. It is quite likely that the train will be put on as soon as the St. Lawrence freezes over.

The subterranean river recently discovered in France in the Miers District of the Department of Lot, has now been traced a distance of seven miles to a point beyond which the three daring explorers who undertook the task did not dare to venture, as the river there takes an abrupt plunge into the bowels of the earth to a depth impossible to fathom. It took three days and nights to accomplish this journey of seven miles and return, the greater portion being done in a folding boat made of sail cloth. Miers is in the heart of a wild and mountainous country, in the deepest recesses of which caves and grottoes are found, some of which appear to have been the abode of our troglodyte ancestors. The subterranean river was first discovered a month ago at the bottom of an abyss known as the pit of Paderae, and was then traced a distance of two miles. The whole seven miles so far explored are in utter darkness, except at the point where the river was discovered. It abounds in cascades and passes through a succession of grottoes sparkling with stalactites. Preparations are being made for further explorations.

Joseph Thomson tells in fresh and concise form, in the October Scribner, the story of his wonderful journey in 1883, from the African coast to Lake Victoria Nyanza, over a route never before trodden by a white man. Gordon, when Governor-General of the Soudan, had pointed out that through Masai-land lay the route of the future for permanent communication between the equatorial province—now famous as Emin's province—and the coast. The British Government inter-ferred with his project to open up this route, but the Royal Geographical Society sent Mr. Thomson to make the journey. The Masai, who hold this country, were reputed to be the boldest and most unscrupulous savages in Africa, and Stanley had said that the only way to cross Masai-land was "with a thousand rifles." Yet Mr. Thomson successfully made the trip with one hundred and forty men, and did not lose one of them by violence. His record of this perilous journey is a modest, clear, and rapid narrative, filled with the spirit of adventure. The illustrations, from the author's original negatives, give an adequate idea of the strange people and country.

There have been several decided changes in the amount and character of the circulating medium during the past year. In the first place the circulation has increased from $1,384,340,280 Oct. 1, 1888, to $1,405,018,000 Oct. 1, 1889, or $20,677,720. The principal change in the character of the money in the hands of the people is in silver certificates. The circulation is now $276,619,715, or $58,058,114 greater than a year ago. This increase is attributed more to the withdrawal from circulation of National bank notes than to any other one cause, although the increasing business demands of the country contributed materially to the result. The reduction of National bank note circulation since last October is $37,799,225. The total amount outstanding on the 1st inst. was $199,779,011. There has also been a decided decrease in the circulation of gold certificates, which has declined from $134,838,190 in October, 1888, to $116,675,349 on the 1st inst. Excepting silver certificates, United States notes have increased in circulation more than any other form of money. Of these there is now in circulation $325,510,758, which is $19,458,705 more than was in the hands of the people a year ago. The circulation of gold coin is now $375,947,715, or $1,382,149 less than it was last October. There are about half a million less silver dollars, and nearly a million dollars more of subsidiary silver in circulation now than at the same time last year. The amount of silver dollars now in circulation is $57,554,100, and the amount of subsidiary silver in circulation is $52,931,352.

HOPE FOR THE SICK.

One Remedy for One Disease.

(From Medical Journal.)

"The four greatest medical centers of the world are London, Paris, Berlin and Vienna. These cities have immense hospitals teeming with suffering humanity. Crowds of students throng the wards, studying under the Professors in charge. The most renowned physicians of the world teach and practice here, and the institutions are storehouses of medical knowledge and experience. With a view of making this experience available to the public, the Hospital Remedy Co., at great expense, secured the prescriptions of these hospitals, prepared the specifics, and although it would cost from $25 to $100 to secure the attention of their distinguished originators, yet in this way these valuable medicines are sold at the price of the quack patent medicines that flood the market and absurdly claim to cure every ill from a single bottle. The want always felt for a reliable class of domestic remedies is now filled with perfect satisfaction. The Hospital Remedies make no unreasonable claims. The specific for Catarrh cures that and nothing else; so with the specific for Bron-

Take Hood's Sarsaparilla 100 Doses One Dollar

The Chief Reason for the marvellous success of Hood's Sarsaparilla is found in the fact that this medicine actually accomplishes all that is claimed for it. Its real merit has won for Hood's Sarsaparilla a popularity and sale greater than that of any other blood purifier. It cures Scrofula, all Humors, Dyspepsia, etc. Prepared only by C. L. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass.

chitis, Consumption and Lung Troubles; Rheumatism is cured by No. 3, while troubles of Digestion, Stomach, Liver and Kidneys have their own cure. To these is added a specific for Fever and Ague, one for female weakness—a general tonic and blood-maker that makes blood and gives form and fullness, and an incomparable remedy for Nervous Debility." These remedies are all sold on an absolute guarantee to do what is claimed for them.

A circular describing this new method of treating disease is sent free on application by HOSPITAL REMEDY COMPANY, 279 West King street, Toronto, Canada, Sole Proprietors.

And besides it gives a clear, white light, 10 to 20 times size & brilliancy of any ordinary house lamp. Finished in either Brass, Nickel, Gold or Antique Bronze. Also

THE SECRET INSTRUCTIONS

OF THE JESUITS.

Published by an ex-Romanist.

This work is a translation from the Latin of the "Secret Instructions of the Jesuit Society." Its revelations are startling, showing to what depths of deceit the Jesuit priest and all connected with this Order of "Spies" and "Traitors" will descend to accomplish their unholy aims. It is printed in the original Latin with the English translation parallel, thus doing away with the anticipated charge of forgery by those who set a premium on murder and treason.

A history of the Order of Jesuits and their expulsion from every Catholic country is given; also, the reason why the Public Schools must go.

HOME AND HEALTH.

THE FOOD VALUE OF MILK.

For bringing up a family of children no other food product has a tithe of the value of good, fresh milk; and next to this in health and food value rank the cereal foods. Where milk is so plentiful as it is about most farm houses, it ought to be used to an unlimited extent. In summer, or in fact at any time, when "a drink" with a child means a cup of good, pure milk, the labor of the mother is very much diminished, and the prospect for the child's health is greatly increased. It will want little else, and needs little else, for milk is the perfect food that contains all the elements that the body needs for growth and sustenance. So give the children—and for that matter the big folks, too—all the milk they want, even if you do not sell a pound of butter in consequence. It will be money in pocket and health to the body in the end.

RELIEF FOR SEASICKNESS.—Dr. Ivan A. Mitropolsky, of Moscow, warmly recommends, on the ground of his personal experience, the following simple method for preventing or aborting all symptoms of seasickness. As soon as giddiness, nausea, etc., appear, the author shuts his eyes and begins to make deep and slow inspirations and expirations. In a few moments (sometimes after three or four respiratory cycles) the symptoms disappear, to yield to a comfortable subjective sensation. On their reappearance the same procedure is repeated again and again. If the recurrence be rather frequent, it is better to perform the procedure in a recumbent posture (with eyes closed). Since the time the author has begun to practice the method, he never yet suffered from vomiting when on board. Drs. G. C. Stockman and C. W. C. Prentice, having selected ten suffering passengers, each seated himself with five of them and "timed the breathing in the following manner: They (the doctors) raised the hand from the knee, indicating an inspiration, and down again for an expiration, thus timing the respirations to exactly twenty per minute. At the expiration of one hour the active symptoms in each case had entirely subsided." By this time the doctors had thoroughly educated their patients in the modus operandi of the cure. The cases continued to be permanent "cures" during the remainder of the voyage from Queenstown to the United States. The writers conclude by asserting that "the cure is infallible in all cases that persist in carrying it out."—Medical Record.

CURE FOR INSOMNIA.—A Swedish servant maid, finding that her mistress was troubled with sleeplessness, told her of a practice of the people in her country who were similarly affected. It was to take a napkin, dip it in ice-cold water, wring it slightly, and lay it across her eyes. The plan was followed and it worked like a charm. The first night the lady slept four hours without waking, something she had not done before for several months. At the end of that time the napkin had become dry. By wetting it again she at once went to sleep, and it required considerable force to rouse her in the morning.—St. Louis Christian Advocate.

Babyhood recommends that sponges used in the nursery, especially those used on the face, be occasionally put in boiling water for a few minutes. This is a simple enough precaution against what is known among medical men to occur sometimes (though not often)—the conveying of infectious matter to the eyes, causing inflammation and even serious eye diseases.

A New Castle, Pa., special says: A few days ago Mrs. John Platt, wife of Alderman Platt, while killing a rooster, received a scratch from one of its spurs. A few days later Mrs. Platt and a child she was nursing exhibited symptoms of blood-poisoning. The child died, and Mrs. Platt cannot recover.

In roasting meat, pour the grease out of the pan before it gets burned. It will be excellent for use in cooking.

For cleaning windows use chamois skin instead of cloth, if you wish a bright, polished surface.

The True Way To Reach Boils

TO CURE Eczema, Pimples, and Eruptive Diseases of all kinds is to purify the blood with Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Until the blood is cleansed, there can be no permanent relief from these troubles.

"Four years ago I was severely afflicted with salt-rheum, the itching being so incessant as to seriously interfere with sleep. Painful scrofulous sores appeared on my neck and the upper part of my arms, and from there the humor went to my eyes. My appetite being poor, my health rapidly failed. I began to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and before I had finished ten bottles I regained my appetite, improved greatly in strength, and was permanently cured of the salt-rheum and scrofula. I consider that what I spent for this medicine was well invested. The Sarsaparilla has indeed done me incalculable good."—Mrs. Caroline A. Garland, Deerfield, N. H., (formerly of Lowell, Mass.).

"My little niece was afflicted with a severe cutaneous disease, which broke out at intervals and resisted treatment. At last, we tried Ayer's Sarsaparilla. This acted like magic. She is now entirely cured and has been in perfect health for several months."—Margaret Peyston, Clarendon, Ark.

"For a long time I was afflicted with salt-rheum, and could find nothing to relieve me. A friend recommended saparilla, and after taking four bottles I was cured."—Edwin R. Tombs, Ogemaw Springs, Mich.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla,

Made by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.

And Carbuncles, take Ayer's Sarsaparilla. No other medicine produces such immediate and salutary results.

C. K. Murray, of Charlottesville, Va., was almost literally covered with boils and carbuncles. These all disappeared as the result of using only three bottles of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. This proves that the true way to reach these troubles is through the blood. "It is now over six years," writes Mr. Murray, "since I took Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and I have not had a pimple, nor boil, nor a sign of one in all that time."

"Last May a large carbuncle broke out on my arm. The usual remedies had no effect and I was confined to my bed for eight weeks. A friend induced me to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Less than three bottles healed the sore. Another effect of this medicine was the strengthening of my sight."—Mrs. Carrie Adams, Holly Springs, Texas.

"I had a number of carbuncles on my neck and back, with swellings in my armpits, and was tormented with pain almost beyond endurance. All means of relief to which I resorted failed until I began to take Ayer's Sarone bottle, of which medicine restored me to health."—S. Carter, Nashville, Tennessee.

A NEW TREATMENT.
Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membrane of the nose and Eustachian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact, and the result of this discovery is that a simple remedy has been discovered which permanently cures the most aggravated cases of these distressing diseases by a few simple applications made (two weeks apart) by the patient at home. A pamphlet explaining this new treatment is sent free by A. H. Dixon & Son, 337 and 339 West King Street, Toronto, Canada.

PAGAN COUNTERFEITS

IN THE

Christian Church.

A pamphlet of 52 pages, by Chas. A. S. Temple.

The following from Rev. H. H. Hinman shows his estimate of its contents:

"I have read with great interest 'Pagan Counterfeits in the Christian Church' by Chas. A. S. Temple. I regard the subject discussed as important, and its presentation both able and timely. There is a most manifest drift in all our Protestant denominations towards unauthorized ritualism and the substitution of human inventions in place of the simplicity of the Gospel, as given by Christ and his apostles. In calling attention to this tidal wave of formalism, the author has conferred a lasting benefit on the church as of Protestantism."

FARM NOTES.

The Cornell (New York) experiment station has been making a study of windbreaks in their relations to fruit growing. Inquiries were made of the leading fruit-growers of New York and Michigan, and the replies received are given in a recent bulletin of the station.

The most of the testimony is in favor of windbreaks for fruit plantations, but there is a decided difference of opinion among fruit growers as to their value. The bulletin gives the following general summary as the result of the investigation:

1. A windbreak may exert great influence upon a fruit plantation.

2. The benefits derived from windbreaks are the following: Protection from cold; lessening of evaporation from the soil and plants; lessening of windfalls; lessening of liability to mechanical injury of trees; retention of snow and leaves; facilitating of labor; protection of blossoms from severe winds; enabling trees to grow more erect; lessening of injury from the drying up of small fruits; retention of sand in certain localities; encouragement of birds; ornamentation.

3. The injuries sustained from windbreaks are as follows: Preventing the free circulation of warm winds and consequent exposure to cold; injuries from the insects and fungus diseases; injuries from the encroachment of the windbreak itself; increased liability to late spring frosts in rare cases.

a. The injury from cold, still air is usually confined to those locations which are directly influenced by large bodies of water and which are protected by forest belts. It can be avoided by planting thin belts.

b. The injury from insects can be averted by spraying with arsenical poisons.

c. The injury from the encroachment of the windbreak may be averted, in part, at least, by good cultivation and by planting the fruit simultaneously with the belt.

4. Windbreaks are advantageous wherever fruit plantations are exposed to strong winds.

5. In interior places, dense or broad belts, of two or more rows of trees, are desirable, while within the influence of large bodies of water, thin or narrow belts, comprising but a row or two, are usually preferable.

6. The best trees for windbreaks in the northeastern States are Norway spruce, and Austrian and Scotch pines, among the evergreens. Among the deciduous trees, most of the rapidly-growing, native species are useful. A mixed plantation, with the hardiest and most vigorous deciduous trees on the windward, is probably the ideal shelter belt.—Farm and Fireside.

NATIVE EVERGREEN TREES.

When we come to evergreens, I am inclined to place our native White Spruce among the first. It grows thriftily and fast upon the driest and lightest soils, is subject to no diseases, preyed upon by no insects, uninjured by the highest winds. Naturally, its southward range but slightly enters northern New England and New York, and I have even had lumbermen hesitate to name it when I have called their attention to it on my lawn, though some call it "Double Spruce." Its aspect is quite unlike the Black Spruce, the foliage being paler and longer, and standing out more at a right angle, like the Fir. It is decidedly to be preferred to the Norway Spruce, at least far north, and, I think anywhere. But while I put this first, the less hardy and much slower to get established Hemlock, the most soft and graceful of all evergreens, must at least have second place. Third, I would place the White Pine, and certainly would not exclude the rigid Pitch Pine. If you have the White Spruce, you will not care for Firs; but as a deciduous Conifer we cannot overlook our spiring Tamarac, the American Larch.—Vick's Magazine.

WIND BREAKS.

If the farmer has a barn, and a fence around it, let him plant, outside of that fence, a row of evergreens, closely together, so that nothing can injure them, and in a few years he will have such protection from the storms for his stock that no money could induce him to remove the trees. We know this to be a fact, and we further know that where such a "wind breaker" exists, no shivering stock is to be found. Of course we would not have these trees all around the barn, but just at those parts where storms are most prevalent. And where farmers have barns, or protection by buildings, and wish to have protection in some way, let them select some suitable field, and hedge it in with the same kind of trees, in the same way they would their barn yards, they will meet with success, as every person who has tried the experiment knows. Let these wind breakers be planted during the coming summer, and in a few years no farmer will complain of having no protection for his stock.—Prairie Farmer.

It was once supposed that scrofula could not be eradicated from the system; but the marvelous results produced by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla disprove this theory. The reason is, this medicine is the most powerful blood-purifier ever discovered.

A Happy Life.

28th THOUSAND.

Baptist Commendation.

"We are delighted with this book. It reaches to the very core of Christian experience, and is eminently experimental in its teachings. It meets the doubts and difficulties of conscientious seekers after the bread and water of life, but whose efforts result only in alternate failure and victory. The author, without claiming to be a theologian, sends out the results of a happy and rich experience to help others to a happy Christian life."—Baptist Weekly.

Presbyterian Endorsement.

"The book is so truly and reverentially devout in its spirit that it disarms criticism. It contains so much that is sound and practical, so much that, if heeded, will make our lives better, happier and more useful, that the intelligent reader who really wishes to lead a life 'hid with Christ in God' can scarcely fail to derive profit from its perusal."—Interior.

Methodist Word of Praise.

"We have not for years read a book with more light and profit. It is not a theological book. No fort is made to change the theological views of a unit. The author has a rich experience, and tells it in a plain and delightful manner."—Christian Advocate.

United Brethren's Approval.

"We have seldom met with a more interesting volume, abounding throughout with apt illustrations we have failed to find a dry line from title-page to end."—Religious Telescope.

Congregational Comment.

"It contains much clear pungent reasoning and interesting incident. It is a practical and experimental lesson taught out of God's word, and is worthy universal circulation."—Church Union.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

It is reported that the President has for some time had his eye on Judge Cooley as a likely candidate for the vacancy on the Supreme bench.

Samuel V. Holliday, commissioner of customs, in his report for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1889, shows the settlement of accounts amounting to $225,202,412. The amount paid out of the treasury on account of the bureau was $20,153,992.

Gen. Raum, commissioner of pensions, is making radical changes in the practice of his office, and has directed that in the future all claims involving large sums of money are not to be finally passed upon until he has reviewed them with the examiner having the case in charge.

It is said that the civil service commission has finally decided to prosecute the members of the Virginia Republican league who violated the law by addressing to the clerks in the departments a circular soliciting funds to aid Gen. Mahone in the Virginia campaign.

Saturday, President Harrison issued proclamations formally admitting the States of North and South Dakota to the Union.

COUNTRY.

Iowa stands this year at the head of the great corn-producing States—Missouri second, Kansas third, and Illinois fourth, the yield of the four being put at 1,141,000,000 bushels, or over one-half of the total corn product of the country.

Judge Parker of the United States District court for the western district of Arkansas, Nov. 1, sentenced nine murderers to be hanged on Thursday, Jan. 16, 1890. The murderers are two Negroes, six full-blooded Indians, and one white. The crimes were all committed in the Indian territory and within a year.

James Fennessy was fined $15 and costs at Cincinnati, O., Nov. 1, for attempting to give a performance at the People's theater on Sunday. In rendering his decision Judge Ermston said: "The offense, as defined by the statute, consists of the pursuit of an ordinary means of livelihood on Sunday. In this case it is clear. As far as I know, only saloonists violated the laws last Sunday, and I am satisfied that the feeling in favor of Sunday closing is general."

The striking miners belonging to the Progressive Union, who attempted to defeat the Knights of Labor miners who had a contract with the Columbus and Hocking Valley Coal and Iron Company at New Straitsville, O., have been beaten and have declared the strike off.

Mrs. Emma Beckwith has been nominated by the Equal Rights party for Mayor of Brooklyn, N. Y. She promises many reforms if elected, and agrees to devote her salary to paying the matrons of the various police stations.

John C. Raymond, formerly an architect and builder at New York, is on trial at New Brunswick, N. J., for arson, the list of his offenses being very long. His scheme, as alleged, was to buy houses, and then burn them to secure the insurance.

All of the railroads are complaining of the lack of freight cars. Many roads are hauling but a small per cent of their orders owing to a shortage in cars. One day last week one road was short fully 1,600 cars.

Nick Schaeffer was convicted at Topeka, Kan., Tuesday of violating the State prohibitory law by selling hard cider. Judge Guthrie in charging the jury said that it was a violation of the law to sell any liquid, under whatever name, which contained as much as 6 or 10 per cent of alcohol.

Edward S. Ebert, aged 90, a paralytic, fell into a fire at Shinnston, W. Va., last week and was fatally burned. The injured man claims in 1818 he helped to build the first house ever erected by white men on the site of the city of Chicago.

The two-mile steel bridge of the Illinois Central Road, spanning the Ohio River at Cairo, was formally tested on Tuesday, a number of officials and invited guests being presents. The test was in every way satisfactory, and the first regular train crossed the structure at 11 A. M., bound for New Orleans.

Because of the heavy snow-storm of last week in Eastern Colorado, all of the trains on mountain roads are more or less delayed. Between two and three feet is reported from Colorado Springs and neighborhood, and telegraphic communication with many sections is suspended.

About a month ago Mr. Richard Devall, of West Baton Rouge, La., was bitten by a little puppy which he found wandering on the road. Two of Mr. Devall's children were bitten at the same time. Friday Mr. Devall died of hydrophobia, and much anxiety is felt on account of the children.

An east-bound freight train on the Pittsburg, Fort Wayne & Chicago Railroad ran into the rear of the Chicago limited express coming east, Wednesday morning, near Beaver Falls, Pa. The engine of the freight train telescoped the observation car of the limited, and two freight cars were telescoped. A brakeman was instantly killed, and an engineer and fireman were seriously, but not fatally, injured.

The west-bound fast train on the Lake Shore, known as the limited, No. 1, was derailed Wednesday morning near Wawaka, Ind. A side-bar on the engine broke, and the separated parts, in flying around, so damaged the track as to derail the trucks of a forward car. This in turn pulled other cars off the track. Fortunately none of the cars tipped over, and only one passenger was injured, he receiving three broken ribs and a few scratches. The train was running fully sixty miles an hour, and the harmless result of the accident is considered little short of a miracle.

A freight train with two engines, while switching at Otisville, N. J., broke in two and thirty-five cars ran backward down grade about a mile east of Otisville at a speed of forty miles an hour, and ran into a west-bound freight train, wrecking the engine completely and twenty-four cars. One man was killed, one fatally and several severely wounded.

A terrible accident occurred Sunday near San Angelo, Tex., on the western branch of the Santa Fe system in Texas. Twenty-five passengers were injured, four fatally.

Word has reached Denver that a passenger train, snowbound near Easton, Col., was run into by a freight train Friday afternoon, and that a fireman, an engineer, and a passenger from Illinois were killed.

Coroner W. H. Turpin, of Kokomo, Ind., has concluded a searching investigation into the cause of the terrible wreck on the Lake Erie & Western Road here on the morning of the 25th ult., which resulted in the killing of three men and the burning of nineteen cars loaded with oil, coal, and general merchandise. The evidence showed that the switch had been pried open by train wreckers, and a verdict was rendered accordingly.

A passenger train collided with a freight at 10:15 P. M. yesterday near Glen Park switch, three miles east of Council Bluffs on the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Road. The engines of both trains were demolished and part of the passenger train and most of the freight train was burned. Two men were killed and fourteen others were hurt.

FOREIGN.

The Prince of Wales is visiting Egypt, and the young Emperor William, his nephew, is at Constantinople. There is presumed to be much political significance in these visits.

Pekin, China, is to be lit by electric lights. The Westinghouse Company, of Pittsburg, has secured a contract for a large electric light plant for Pekin. The machinery was shipped Wednesday.

A terrible disaster occurred in Glasgow, Nov. 1. The gable wall of a building that was being erected alongside a carpet factory was blown down. An immense mass of debris fell on the roof of the weaving department of the factory, crushing it and burying fifty girls and women. The latest estimate of the loss of life is that fully fifty persons have been killed. The loss of property aggregates £150,000.

This number of the CYNOSURE is sent to several thousands whom we hope may prove friendly to its principles, but are not subscribers. Their special attention is called to the argument on the editorial page and the notice of the meeting in Tremont Temple, Boston, Dec. 11 and 12.

The Prohibition vote last week showed in several States remarkable and encouraging gains. Virginia changes her 1,600 votes of last year to 3,000; Pennsylvania her 20,900 to 33,000; and Massachusetts her 8,700 to 14,500. The Democrats of Iowa have for years pronounced against the prohibitory laws of that State. Their partial victory makes the liquor harpies jubilant. But, if their success should convince the honest voters of Iowa that prohibition will be made successful only when it shall be sustained by a party which is in hearty sympathy with the principle, the victory may prove after all to be a defeat for the saloon. The union of the temperance forces of Kansas, Iowa, Nebraska and the two Dakotas will soon be formed and will be no inconsiderable factor in this campaign.

After President Harrison allowed himself to do honor to the Knight Templar Masons in Washington the other day, letters began to bring inquiries about his lodge relation. A reply was published that he was not a Knight Templar, or any other kind of a Mason or member of any secret society except the Grand Army, and he also had a nominal relation to a Greek-letter college society. But the papers say the letters have come in by the hundreds asking if he belongs to the Masons, and they answer for him that he belongs to no secret society. Perhaps they speak truly, and he has given up what fag ends of lodgery clung to him. But at least it is worth noting how people are inquiring about this question. If they are Anti-masons who write by hundreds President Harrison must understand that his fellow citizens are growing to dislike the lodge. If Masons themselves are writing there is but one conclusion—they want their supposed "brother" to give them an office.

The Mormons of Salt Lake City have just seen another of their Jesuitical schemes frustrated. Under the present district system of the public schools of the city, the Gentiles have secured control over several. To thwart this growing power the hierarchy plotted a redistricting which would long keep the schools in their control. It is not with any degree of complacency that they read the decision of Judge Zane the other day which put their scheme under injunction. Governor Thomas reports the public schools of the Territory in bad shape under Mormon rule. The tax does not pay one-half the expenses. In the poorer districts children are largely denied school privileges; and above all the Mormon authorities are proposing Mormon in opposition to public schools, which are likely to get away from the control of polygamists.

The discovery of Dr. Cronin's clothes and case of instruments last week in another catch basin caused a grim sensation in Judge McConnell's court. The States Attorney had nearly completed taking testimony, but now the utmost effort will be made to secure yet further evidence which may be hidden in a choked sewer. The effect of the discovery upon the prisoners was very marked. Like men whose sin is finding them out, they begin to realize that it is dangerous to trifle with law. One of the men is said to be evidently weakening and the prosecuting attorney hopes to secure a revelation from him which will uncover the whole plot and put the prime movers of this desperate conspiracy into the hands of the law.

The New York Voice says that "Dr. Cronin was a fearless, earnest Irish patriot in the best sense of the term." The Voice is getting reckless. The testimony before the coroner's jury in the Cronin case last June forced this condemnation from that able body: "In our judgment, all secret societies whose objects are such as the evidence shows that of the Clan-na-Gael to be, are not in harmony with, and are injurious to American institutions." The order was founded by a Mason on the Masonic model, combining in its methods of operation the infamous system of the Jesuits. It was in evidence before the coroner that the funds raised by this secret society were used for carrying on a dynamite war in England, and Cronin was murdered because he believed these funds were being diverted from such an atrocious purpose to the private ends of Alexander Sullivan and other political "triangles." If Dr. Cronin was such a patriot as the Voice describes, God save Ireland from her friends.

The momentary consternation in administration circles over the result of the State election of Tuesday last has subsided, and the landslide appears not to be so destructive as at first reported. Ben. Butterworth of Ohio, the Congressman who dared to speak like a man about the secret labor unions which are in control of some departments of the Government, gives an explanation of the unexpected result in Ohio, which will be read with profound interest. He says: "We have had for about two years within the Republican party in Ohio a secret political organization, the members of which were united by an oath compared to which the obligation that held together the robbers of the Rhine was a mild form of pledge. This organization became known to the outside world as 'The Strangers.' Their mission was to control conventions and fight all comers in the interest of the members of this secret clan. The membership was limited: for instance, in Hamilton county the limit was 150, and in all cases they were so distributed as to give them the widest opportunity and influence in controlling the party conventions. They became powerful, and as dictatorial as powerful.

To illustrate, of the 150 mentioned 107 hold fat places—either elective or appointive. Many good and worthy men joined under a misapprehension of the object or purpose of the organization." Mr. Butterworth adds that this organization is wide-spread in Ohio, and is riveting upon the Republican party the most infamous political practices. Let us hail this new testimony to the virtue and honor of our cause and the infamy of the lodge system. Such a pack of lodgery is a heavy addition to the camel-load the patient American public is bearing. The last straw will soon be put on, and then something will break down.

THE SALOON AND THE KNIGHTS TEMPLAR.

SOME FACTS FOR THE W. C. T. U.

BY MISS E. E. FLAGG.

The following advertisements are quoted from the Washington Post of Oct. 9, 1889:

WILLIGE'S KNIGHT TEMPLAR BRAND.

"Knight Templars and others who are sojourning with us can find the pure article at Willige's, 1320 Pennsylvania ave., northwest, south side. This excellent brand of whisky can be purchased at $3; regular price $4 per gallon, or 75c. per pint. This is acknowledged as one of the finest brands of liquor in the market. It is of excellent flavor and guaranteed to be strictly pure."

KNIGHTS TEMPLAR'S TONIC.

"The thousands of Knights Templar who are visiting our National Capital and Grand Encampment, perhaps would like to know where they can find the finest old Rye Berkeley Tonic. We would as a pointer direct them to James Tharp, at 818 F street, northwest, where they can be accommodated."

It is well known that Knight Templarism professes to be not only a religious, but a Christian order. If proof of this was needed the following words from an address by a Sir Knight, Rev. Joseph L. Tucker, D.D., delivered before the Grand Commandery of Alabama, should be sufficient:

"Look around upon this assembly of armed men; see you not everywhere the sign of the cross? What does it mean? Ah, it means that these men have struggled through all the wonderings and questionings of Masonry, and have found their full answer in the cross of Christ. It means that these men are not ashamed to confess themselves followers of the Nazarene,—that they are proud and glad to show the world that they have found the Messiah, God's answer to all questions, and that his name is Jesus Christ."

There are men walking our streets to-day, standing behind the merchant's counter or the mechanic's bench, who profess to have found Jesus Christ, and the world "takes knowledge of them that they have been with Jesus." But they never "struggled through all the wonderings and questionings of Masonry" to find him. They took a shorter route. And they do not use the tonics mentioned above, while so far as their votes and their prayers can accomplish it, they try to keep such drinks from being sold to others.

If the Society of Christian Endeavor, or any similar body, should visit Washington, would the rum-sellers of that city be likely to bid for their patronage? Would they head their whisky advertisements, Christian Endeavor Society Brand; or, Young Men's Christian Association Tonic?

The same paper contains the following items:

"As the Maysville Commandery of Maysville, Ky., passed by, they were greeted by a Sir Knight from the stand. 'Five, fifteen, twenty-two,' he called out. Many of the onlookers took the signal as one imbued with Templar secrets, but those for whom it was hurled only smiled and passed by. The mystic figures form a souvenir of Maysville Commandery of their trip to California in 1883, when five Sir Knights left the blue grass region for the Golden Gate, accompanied by fifteen musicians, and during their absence from home drank twenty-two gallons of whisky."

"The Grand Master (Roomer) retired to the rear of the stand, where he seated himself in rather of an exhausted and nervous condition. He was benefited by partaking of some of the contents of a little black bottle, which his son carried conveniently. It was whisky of the very first quality, and was not overlooked by the deputy Grand Master (Gobin) later on, when he had become chilled by standing in the chilly atmosphere to see the Knights of his State encampment pass by. Notwithstanding the elegant costumes they wore, they showed their love for simplicity by taking their portion of the animating liquid direct from the little black bottle, with head back and bottle up."

"Oakland and Los Angeles Knights kept open house last night at the Cochrane, 1325 F street, and dispensed California punch and cigars to all that called with the lavish hospitality for which the Golden State is so justly famous. It is needless to add that their quarters were crowded throughout the evening. They brought thirty cases of Los Angeles wines with them and receive forty cases more to-day."

Every man who takes this Knight Templar degree, whether a minister or a saloon-keeper, is required to drink wine from a human skull, and accompanying this act with the following oath:

"This pure wine I now take in testimony of my belief in the mortality of the body and the immortality of the soul; and as the sins of the whole world were once visited upon the head of our Saviour, so may all the sins of the person whose skull this once was, in addition to my own, be heaped upon my head, and may this libation appear in judgment against me, both here and hereafter, should I ever knowingly or willfully violate this my most solemn vow of a Knight Templar; so help me God and keep me steadfast."

It should be said in passing that no man can be made a Knight Templar who has not taken the first three degrees in Masonry, with their accompanying vows of secrecy and assistance.

On the day of the grand parade a half-holiday was granted to the government employes, and the Treasury Department covered with flags in especially prepared designs, which was never known to be done before except on occasions of a national character,—"an extraordinary recognition," surely, to quote the press, "of this powerful order." Evidently it is powerful at the seat of government if nowhere else.

It is a well-known fact that the kings of the rum traffic, the distillers and wholesale dealers, have a large representation in the order. No intelligent W. C. T. U. woman but knows that the saloon is straining every nerve to grasp political power. We have long since learned to put two and two together. This "extraordinary recognition" given by government to the Knights Templar would never have been accorded were not Masonry a force in politics, and the facts here given are proof enough how that power is wielded.

Women of the W. C. T. U., will the example of ministers and saloon-keepers lifting the wine-cup to their lips together at the grand banquets of this order, tend to strengthen prohibition? Is not such an association an ally of the saloon? And if its charity were not as false and hollow as its Christianity, would it extend the right hand of fellowship to that traffic, which, like a dragon, preys on all that is nearest and dearest to women? which rends from her home, happiness, even honor and life?

Sisters of the W. C. T. U., shall we frown or smile on an institution which is thus shown to be hand-in-glove with our greatest enemy? Shall we throw the weight of our influence for or against it? We cannot be neutral. "Every tree which my Heavenly Father hath not planted shall be rooted up."

A CONFESSION.

BY MALCOM FITCH.

"Confess your faults one to another, and pray one for another that ye may be healed." James 5: 16. Having trusted in my morality until the fortieth year of my life, with no other religion than that disseminated at Masonic altars, a light shone into my heart that convinced me that there was a God, merciful and gracious, long-suffering and abundant in goodness and truth; but who would, nevertheless (as I afterwards learned), "bring every work into judgment with every secret thing, whether it be good or whether it be evil." Soon after I united with a church whose leading members as well as myself were "married to the daughter of a strange god," and the light that was in me ere long became darkness. Though I read the Scriptures daily and prayed earnestly for deliverance, I continued under the spirit of bondage to fear about two years, when in the providence of God I attended a camp meeting where the Gospel trumpet gave no uncertain sound. At this meeting I was convinced of the incompatibility of Masonry with the Christian religion, and being determined, like Caleb and Joshua, to follow the Lord fully, every thing must make way for his coming. Accordingly, on the last day of the meeting I renounced Masonry, and promised the Lord on my knees that I would never have anything more to do with the lodge. The next morning as I was alone on my farm the Spirit of the Lord came upon me, and liberty like day broke on my soul and fired all my faculties with glorious joy. I felt that I was indeed an "inhabitant of Zion," and was impelled to "cry out and shout," for the Holy One of Israel had taken up His abode in my heart. I had received the spirit of adoption and become a habitation of God through the Spirit, as it is written: "And what agreement hath the temple of God with idols? For ye are the temple of the living God; and as God hath said, I will dwell in them and walk in them; and I will be their God and they shall be my people. Wherefore come out from among them and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing; and I will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty." 2 Cor. 6: 16-18.

The command "come out from among them" had been complied with, and the promise "I will receive you" was fulfilled in my experience. After this wonderful deliverance from the snare of the devil, in order to maintain my acceptance with God and "go on unto perfection" I found it necessary to lay aside every weight. Among these "weights" was life insurance, and the church that kept me so long in bondage. I am now kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation, permitted to dwell in the secret place of the Most High and abide under the shadow of the Almighty, counting all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Jesus Christ my Lord. Amen. "And they overcame him by the blood of the Lamb, and by the word of their testimony; and they loved not their lives unto the death." Rev. 12: 11.

HINTS TO ANTI-SECRECY LECTURERS.

BY ONE OF THEM.

The claim so often made by members of lodges that our efforts to expose and destroy their orders do but add to their numbers and strength, is, in the main, uncandid, misleading and false. Else why are they so averse to discussion, and why do they strive to prevent attendance on our meetings? And yet I think that, like many other falsehoods, it has in it an element of truth. The lodges, when exposed and derided, put forth special efforts for protection. They work constantly and secretly and reach a class of men that are not greatly influenced by moral considerations—men who, but for the emergency, the lodge would not seek to initiate. In all our larger towns there is such a class who stand ready to grasp at anything which offers them a little notoriety and promises them a standing in a "respectable order."

Then, too, they take advantage of and misapply some of our arguments. It is common for us to affirm that a large percentage (three-fourths) of our public officers are Freemasons, and that but for Masonry most of them would never have attained their positions. We claim, and justly, too, that it is utterly unfair that such proportion of officers should be selected from about one-twentieth of our voters. But the average young man, who has political aspirations and no very marked Christian convictions, will say; "If this be true, then my road to success is evidently through the lodge, and that it cannot be a very evil or dangerous road is seen in the fact that so many intelligent men have gone before me and so few of them have found occasion to repudiate their Masonic covenant." When we use this argument, we ought always to add that the great majority of Masons gain no office, and lose much financially, by becoming members of the order.

The reason why there are so few Masons who make a renunciation, is the same as that of the beasts for not coming out of the lion's den. When the fox saw that all the tracks went in and none came out, he wisely concluded that the supposed sick lion had devoured them; for truly Masonry eats up men's candor and destroys the moral sense of those who have sold themselves for its benefits.

I want to offer the following hints to those who lecture:

1. Our first and greatest efforts should be to convince intelligent Christians that the entire lodge system is unchristian. We should dwell especially on the Christless character of the religion of the lodge, on its evil associations, its systematic selfishness, its yoking of believers and unbelievers, and the tendency of the entire system to supplant Christianity and subvert and destroy the influence of the Christian church. While this class of arguments will have little weight with unbelievers, and be quite lost on the hoodlum element, they can hardly fail to influence true Christians.

2. In lectures intended mainly for citizens irrespective of religious character, we should dwell mainly on the economic relations, the vast expenditure and small return, and that the lodge can be, and sometimes is, used for the perversion of justice and the oppression of those who are not members. Nor in so doing do we need to impute evil motives to, or impeach the character of, the average lodge member.

3. We ought to avoid all over-statements and all affirmations, however true, that we are not prepared to sustain by such evidence as will at least convince the candid hearer. Unfair and uncandid men we will always find ready to take advantage of the slightest lapse from the most perfect accuracy.

4. We should always maintain a thoroughly candid, dignified and Christian spirit, speaking with all assurance and aiming not to provoke but to convince our opponents. We ought to assume that they are reasonable men and have been simply misled by false influences. We may fail to convince them, but we shall not fail to reach the unprejudiced.

5. We ought always to be thoroughly familiar with our subject, and be perfectly sure of what we expect to say. Especially we should be accurate in our quotations and be able to prove them. Remember that there is no book that has so great influence on the world as the Bible, and none that can be used so effectually to destroy the power of the lodge.

THE MASON'S FAMILY.

[From the Keystone, Masonic organ.]

We have heard it asserted that a Freemason has no business to be married, or to have a family. Why not? Are the six hundred thousand Freemasons in the United States to be relegated to the positions of bachelors or widowers? Are the brethren who are not married to remain single, and those who are, to have proceedings commenced against them to sever the marriage tie? What is the meaning of this wholesale indictment against the members of the Masonic Fraternity?

It is alleged, we are told, that Freemasons are "never at home"—"hardly ever." Is this true? For if it be true, there is some ground of complaint, since no man who possesses a family has any right to absent himself from it continuously. If he has a wife, or children, or both, they have a mortgage upon him for life, payable in daily interest installment of kindly attention. He is not his own man, for he is their husband and father; he belongs to them, as well as to himself. There is thus a joint interest in his person, possessions and time.

But what is the foundation for this charge, that some Freemasons are better known abroad than at home?

It is replied, that it is due to the multiplication of Masonic degrees, which are about as numerous, or as "Thick as autumnal leaves that strew the brooks

In Vallombrosa."

We have had a "Masonic Register" sent to us to prove it. Its title page reads as follows: "Masonic Register, Maitland, Ontario, Canada. Thirty Masonic bodies meeting under warrants, conferring a total of 282 degrees."

Thirty Masonic bodies! If these bodies meet once a month, that would fill every night in the month, so where could the Mason's family find a spare night awarded it? With his presentation of the matter our sympathies are all with the Mason's family. But while the rest of creation is probably not afflicted as Maitland, Canada, is with so-called "Masonic" bodies, some other sections with which we are acquainted appear to be aspiring to attain that distinction. The truth is, there is too many mis-called "Masonic" bodies everywhere, and Ancient Craft Masonry suffers from it, together with Mason's families. There is a craze for inventing new societies composed of Master Masons. Their inventors forthwith dub them "Masonic," which they are not. No society is Masonic simply because its membership is composed of Masons. It is "principles, not men," that make Masonry, and no one, by diluting even these principles, and serving them up in a different shape, or by making Masons the constituents of a new organization, can thereby extend Masonry.

But suppose a brother indulges only in what by common consent is regarded as "legitimate" Masonry, in Lodge, Chapter, Council and Commandery. Suppose he is active in all of these bodies at the same time, and an office-holder. Necessarily he is a busy Mason. Then add to these regular duties the incidental ones of committee work, funerals, and the like, and probably it were as well if he were a bachelor instead of a benedict. It possibly is a question of suffering—whether it shall be brethren, living and deceased, and their widows and orphans, or his wife and children. Which shall it be? It should be neither. One's duties should be so assumed and so adjusted that they may not interfere with each other. This can be done. That brother is more than foolish who holds official station in all of his Masonic bodies at the same. Thereby he does not do justice to them, to himself, nor to his family.

We confess we sympathize with some Mason's families. The man who takes only breakfast regularly, supper occasionally, and dinner never, at home (except on Sundays), and is but the "sleeping partner" in the household firm, and not statedly that, might almost as well remove to Maitland, Canada, and join all of its thirty "Masonic" bodies.

There is another matter in which Mason's wives and families are overlooked, and this by the craft itself. Of course it goes without saying that a woman cannot be a Freemason, nor receive any so-called "side degree" which will communicate to her a particle of Masonry. Nor can she rightly be present at any meeting of a lodge convened for work of any character whatever. But we have often thought that Freemasons should not be as chary as they are, of granting to their wives and daughters an opportunity to share in reunions with their husbands and fathers who are members of the craft, upon occasions that are not official. The least that Masonry can do is to grant some pleasure of this description to those from whom they ask so much.

RUN BY RINGS.

An eminent statesman, Disraeli, said that the world was managed by secret societies and organizations. This is doubtless true. Cliques, lodge rings, corporations, syndicates, sectarian societies, labor unions, with all their various machinery of manipulation, intimidation, speculation, excommunication, robbery, murder, strikes, boycotts, and everything of the kind, doubtless exercise a controlling power over many of the affairs of this world. But because the world is thus managed, is no good reason why Christians who "are not of the world" should manage or be managed in the same way.

Some good men take part in these movements to accomplish good ends. But they are trying to fight the devil with fire, and he can stand more of that than they can, and they are pretty sure to be defeated in the struggle. He knows the ground better than they do, and has more secret plots and plans than they, and will give them odds and still defeat them.

Christians have a better path open before them, the path of openness, truth, sincerity, righteousness and peace. The world lieth in the wicked one, and all its plans and contrivances and promises are uncertain and disappointing. He who looks to God and him alone can be independent of worldly complication and will stand when these have fallen to rise no more. What honest men want, is not secret plotting but open testimony. If half the time spent in secret cabals were spent in the open denunciation of wrongs, it would do more good. If you know things are wrong, out with it and tell the truth. This is better than dark-lantern tactics, which place the control of the many in the hands of the few, and often cause evils greater than those they cure.—The Christian, Boston.

THE CARDINAL'S "SLEIGHT OF HAND."

Cardinal Manning's recent attack upon the American common school is not an argument against the schools, but a specious plea for the Roman Catholic purpose to get control of public money for the use of their purely sectarian schools. His use of the statistics of arrests and convictions in New England and the six Southern States he selects for illustrative sophistry is very neat jugglery.

Unquestionably there has been of late years a large increase of crime in New England, but there is reason to believe it has not quite kept up with the increase of the foreign-born population—nearly all Roman Catholic. The next census will make this point clearer.

In 1860 there were in the six New England States of foreign-born people, 469,330; in 1870, 648,001; in 1880, 793,612. (In Boston, 1880, there were native-born, 248,043; foreign-born, 114,790; in Providence, native-born, 76,782; foreign-born, 28,075; and so in other cities.)

Consider now illiteracy in these States. In 1860 the test was "unable to read and write," and the score stood: Native illiterates, 8,743; foreign, 75,555. In 1870 and 1880 the test was "unable to write," and the score stood: 1870, native illiterates, 31,904; foreign, 163,949. 1880, native illiterates, 31,762; foreign, 160,851.

How about these people and the schools so derided by the cardinal? The census of 1870 tells us how they did in fifty "principal cities." In 1870 the native population of Boston was 162,540, and 40,075 "attended school;" the foreign population was 87,980, and 3,740 were reported at the public schools. Take Providence, Rhode Island, in 1870: Native population, 51,127, and 11,324 were at school; foreign population, 17,177; at school, 449. And so in other cities.

If anything is certain, it is certain that the foreign-born population in these States furnishes most of the criminals. His eminence did not go far enough with the facts to reach the truth—only far enough to make his point for Roman Catholic control of public school money for Roman Catholic schools.

But the people who attend the public schools make a better showing than those who went to the Catholic schools or none. The people who did not go to the public schools are the people who went most to the penitentiary. If the cardinal argues against education, the facts are against him; if against the New England common schools as compared with the schools of his church, the facts are equally against him. For his argument the wrong people are in the penitentiary.

What the cardinal says of suicide in New England is not an argument against education or public schools, but an argument against civilization. It is true enough that few Negroes commit suicide, as few of them become lunatics. Suicide and lunacy are not as common among Southern Negroes as among Southern white people; they are civilized diseases. Is it better, therefore, to revert to savagery?

Neuralgia, gout, Bright's disease, myopia, are civilized diseases; shall we therefore surrender civilization? Embezzlement and defalcation are civilized crimes; shall we therefore go back to the woods and barbarism? The organization of "trusts" and other devices for oppressing the poor are civilized piracies; shall we therefore become communists and turn the world over to anarchy? Buying elections by bribery is civilized treason; shall we therefore give up the ballot and go back to despotism?

Coincidence does not prove causal relations. Every year the law extends its range; new misdemeanors come into the catalogue of offences. And there is very great difference in the enforcement of laws. In some Georgia counties carrying concealed weapons and selling liquor to minors, and such like offences, are prosecuted and published every time a case is made. In some counties cases are rarely made, and convictions rarely follow. By Cardinal Manning's method we can easily prove by court statistics that the worst counties are the best—the worst have fewest convictions.

The absurdity of mistaking coincidence for proof of causal relations is too obvious to need illustration. Let one suffice. In Georgia convictions have increased as the use of "guano" has increased among the people. See what comes of using guano!

Suffer, kind reader, once more. Convictions in all civilized countries increase with the increase in the number of preachers. Is it the preacher, then, who does the mischief? There are not wanting able men who will take the affirmative in the argument.

No; the cardinal has given us nothing new. What he says has been said, and as well said, before. His argument is as old as Rome's antagonism to the enlightenment of the masses. The world knows Rome's doctrine on this subject by heart. Modern thought and liberty of conscience condemn and reject Rome's doctrine of education. She had it all in her hands a long, dreary while, and made a sad failure for the people; a success, perhaps, in cementing her power over the human soul.—Rev. A. G. Haygood, D. D., in Southern Christian Advocate.

SECRET DEATH PENALTIES.

It is an alarming fact that in some form of insinuation, or positive assertion, nearly, if not quite all, the secret societies of the country claim the authority of life and death over their members, or to "remove" them if the "good of the order" demands that "suspects" be quieted, lest their precious secrets be betrayed.

Some secret societies embody this claim of "capital punishment" as against "traitors" in bolder language than others. Freemasonry, in the most emphatic secret "death decrees," claims the right to cut throats, to tear open breasts and take out the vitals, to sever bodies in two, to smite off the skull, and in numberless barbarous methods suggests the slaying of those who reveal the "deep damnation" of the secret sworn bandit. Each degree has the death penalty embodied in its oath, making the initiate swear his own life away in an oath of assent to the most horrid butchery if he ever reveals any "part or parts, point or points" of the secrets of the "benevolent" order so boastful of its "charity."

This death penalty has been many times executed; how many times the world will never know. It was rendered in the Morgan trials—under the direction of special State's attorneys appointed for the specific purpose—too clear for doubt, that William Morgan was Masonically executed for revealing the secrets of the dark order.

Rev. Ensign B. Hill, a member of the Allegheny Conference of the Wesleyan Methodist church, was about to publish the secrets of Freemasonry to which he had belonged, and was last seen alive driving with his horse and buggy toward the village, where he was going to secure the printing of his book. A Freemason was riding with him toward night-fall, and that was the last ever seen or heard of Ensign B. Hill, or horse and buggy. His evident murder at the hands of Masons is one of the lodge secrets still oath-guarded by the fraternity.

Most, if not all, the minor secret societies of the country were originated in the brain of some leading Mason, or lodge of Masons, to serve as recruiting agencies for this parent of all vice and villainy. The spirit of destruction toward all traitors to vowed secretism is to a greater or lesser extent breathed into all the offsprings of this common parentage.—Wesleyan Methodist.

THE FELL CIGARETTE.—Yesterday another lad of eighteen died in consequence of smoking cigarettes. We don't know as it does much good to keep preaching the same sermon on this text. The boys ought to know by this time that the habit is pernicious, and have the strength of will required to break it if it has fastened upon them. If it be still a matter of doubt as to the ill effects of cigarette smoking when practiced by adults, there is no question about the harm of the habit for growing boys. Our advice to rosy and rugged Young America is to let the cigarette severely alone.—New York Daily.

The Senate of Michigan has passed the Rogers bill, prohibiting the sale of tobacco to minors under seventeen years of age, and the Jackson bill, prohibiting the manufacture and sale of cigarettes. Both of these bills have passed the House, and only require the signature of the Governor to become laws.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

The Inquisition in East Boston—The Lodges at a Catholic Funeral—Some Secret Order Notes—Our Rural Districts—The Australian Ballot System—An Intelligent Voter—Prohibition Gains in Massachusetts.

Most people suppose the Inquisition to be a thing of the past, and in its grosser features it is; but the boycott which seeks to take away from the head of a young and helpless family, his or her means of support, is the modern substitute for the boot and the thumbscrew. It is the contracting wall of the middle ages that slowly, surely, steadily kept advancing nearer till it pressed out the life of the victim, translated into our own times.

A widow in East Boston, who keeps a little shop where she sells confectionary and baker's goods, began to send her children to the parochial school, but unable to pay the cost of keeping them there, took them away and sent them to the public school. In consequence her customers, mostly Romanists, have been warned by the Catholic priest not to patronize her; and thus the little trade on which she relies to support her family is practically ruined. The British American is authority for the above, and no one who has any just idea of the grinding rapacity of the Romish hierarchy will be disposed to doubt that her case could be duplicated by many others.

In this respect Rome is unchanged and unchangeable, but there are indications that in one important particular her policy is slowly altering. She has kept up an outward show of hostility to secret societies, even so far as to disinter the bodies of members of her communion after they had been buried in consecrated ground when it was discovered that they had held concealed connection with any of these orders. Yet at St. James Catholic church, Harrison Avenue, Boston, last week (I am quoting an item from the daily press), "solemn and impressive services were held over the remains of William O'Brien, who was a prominent member of several societies. There were present several large delegations, among them twenty-three members of the P. B. O. Elks, forty from the Theatrical Mechanics, and representatives of the Knights of Pythias and Wapiti tribe of Red Men. The services were conducted by Rev. Fr. Nilan, who celebrated requiem mass. At the conclusion of the services the remains were conveyed to Calvary Cemetery."

The secret orders may yet honeycomb Rome herself, and thus hasten the final collapse of the papacy.

Three years ago the Improved Order of Red Men numbered in Massachusetts but 512 members. To-day it numbers 13,421. But no organizations have made such rapid progress as the new benefit orders, which, instead of waiting till their members are sick or dead, guarantee to pay each one a certain sum after so many years. This feature explains the phenomenal success of the Iron Hall. Many of the new fraternal orders reserve the right of unlimited assessments, and some, after paying a member ten dollars a week sick benefit, require the money back if he recovers, with six per cent interest; and if he dies they deduct the sum from the amount they paid his widow. This is certainly a curious kind of charity, and colder than the snows of January.

The Free Will Baptists in other days had a discipline that excluded even the members of the minor secret orders. A hopeful sign that it may yet restore the ancient landmarks, was the invitation at its recent national conference to Rev. Isaac Hyatt, of New Hampshire, to read a paper on Secret Societies. The essay which he prepared in compliance with this request covers nearly the same ground as his sermon before the recent New Hampshire convention, which is to be put in tract form. It is an exceedingly able document, candid and conciliatory in spirit, yet bold and uncompromising in its defence of the truth. Scattered broadcast, its keen logic cannot fail to stir thinking minds and do much to spread the light.

The Evangelical Alliance which is to meet in Boston the first week in December, will discuss, among other subjects, "The Needs of the Rural Districts." One having a more important bearing on our country's future could not well be selected. The forsaken farms of New England are rapidly passing into the hands of foreigners who seldom or never attend a Protestant church, and have no just estimate of the value of our free schools. The tendency is always to more and more retrogression. People of the better class will not settle where there are no churches or good schools; and hence the illiteracy and crime too often found in some of our country districts where whole families live year after year without Gospel privileges, yet needing mission work as much as those in heathen lands or on our western frontier.

The Australian ballot system was given its first trial in Massachusetts yesterday. Seventy temporary structures measuring 18 by 24 feet were erected in various parts of Boston, constructed especially to meet the requirements of the new law, each booth being made in twenty interchangeable sections, which are portable, and will occupy but a small space in storage. Twenty-four and a half tons of white paper were used for the ballots, employing nearly a hundred hands, and giving the State printers a good job.

The new system has on the whole worked very successfully, and Mr. Faxon is reported as saying, "The Australian ballot law is the best educator ever introduced in the interest of reform in politics. If worthy men are not nominated and elected it will be because the law-abiding citizen neglects his political duties by not attending the caucuses, and failing to cast his ballot on election day." Many voters did not understand its workings, especially in the country districts, and in the cities it sadly mystified some of our adopted fellow citizens. A middle-aged voter at the West End, of this latter class, after attempting to read the law for fully ten minutes, turned to the officer in charge of the polling room with the exclamation that "It was all a humbug."

"It would take me all day to read that, and then I'd not be after knowing what I should do."

When the operation of "the machine" was explained to him, he was agreeably surprised at its simplicity, and observing that one of the first things he learned to do on coming to this country was "to make me mark," he was ushered inside the rails, and duly making his X—it is needless to say after each Democratic name—he left the polling room in a highly satisfied state of mind.

Yet this intelligent voter can exercise a privilege which the Legislature of Massachusetts still persists in denying to a woman, no matter how many college degrees she can write after her name, or how wide her attainments in literature, science, or art!

The saloon-closing law was so well obeyed that there were only six cases before the Municipal Court the next morning, which is the smallest number known after an election or other public day for thirty years. But "Prohibition don't prohibit," say our high license friends. Oh, no.

The Prohibition vote showed a very encouraging gain, and had much to do with the smallness of the Republican plurality for Governor. Brackett's record on the temperance question has been so mercilessly shown up by Mr. Faxon that many temperance Republicans either stayed at home or scratched their tickets.

Meanwhile in spite of "set-backs" there is no doubt but that the political conscience of New England is being troubled, and Christian voters are beginning to see that in voting for men who uphold license they are throwing their ballots on the devil's side. Even the old serpent himself cannot fool men forever with so transparent a lie.

ELIZABETH E. FLAGG.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 8, 1889.

The leading Republicans now in the city are busy explaining the wholesale defeat of Tuesday. The President himself is silent and refuses to talk for publication as to the occasion of this Waterloo. Among his supporters, and especially such henchmen as the Indianapolis contingent, there are nothing but long faces. Of course, it is natural to say that a defeat of the administration party in an off year is due to the personal unpopularity of the President, but that excuse cannot fully account for the result of last Tuesday. One must look further to discover the true reason.

Corporal Tanner, erstwhile Commissioner of Pensions, with characteristic modesty, ventures the opinion that the result in Ohio is to be attributed to the rage of ex-soldiers at the way he has been treated by the administration, a reason most comforting to that gentleman. Assistant Postmaster-General Clarkson believes that fraud ruled in Virginia, and radical laws had disgusted the people in Iowa and Ohio. He believes that Mr. Foraker's popularity is matchless, and that he made a superb fight. All those who care to talk, and they are not many, say that the failure to divide all the spoils has had a great influence upon the rank and file of Republican party workers.

Ex-President Cleveland, who arrived Wednesday night to attend the Bayard-Clymer wedding, and who is accompanied by his wife, as beautiful as ever, is delighted with the result, and regards it, as all the other politicians do, from a personal standpoint. Blind to all the surrounding circumstances, he attributes it all to the tariff question. He says, "It is evident that the leaven of tariff reform has leavened the whole mass. The West, suffering from the unjust burden of tariff taxation, has awakened. The work goes on, and the people have given their verdict against the robber tariff."

The Republicans of Virginia, of whom it may be said that a greater number are fed at the public trough than are thus supported among the members of the party in other States, are not cast down by their defeat, but rather go about the public places telling of the "splendid fight" they made. Exactly what splendor is to be attached to a fight in which one is defeated by an increased majority is hardly visible to the naked eye. The truth is that the voters of Virginia are tired of William Mahone. A boss who has nothing to offer but the chance for spoils cannot hold a large party together because it is not possible for him to keep his promises. For nine years Mahone, during the Republican administration, has been filling the executive department with such political renegades as he could find in Virginia, who cared to turn their coats for a political appointment. The only error he made was one of judgment. There were not enough offices to go around.

REFORM NEWS.

THE SEVENTEENTH ILLINOIS CONVENTION.

In the midst of the conventions, State and National, which are crowding one upon another this autumn season, the Elgin Convention will be long remembered as one of the most interesting. We are sure that not all of them can boast of better speaking; and if God shall add his blessing, few will more remarkably affect our country and help establish the kingdom of God in the earth. If it was a meeting of successes, it was also of disappointments: and the first of these was met upon the threshold in the enforced absence of Dr. Wm. Wishart, of Monmouth, the president, because of illness. He wrote a cordial and cheering letter to the convention. His place was filled acceptably (only the speech lacking) by one of the vice-presidents, Dr. A. H. Hiatt, of Chicago. The Free Methodist church was well filled with an audience of several hundred, and the convention opened promptly with prayer by Rev. C. C. Foote, of Detroit, Mich.

Rev. George A. Milton, of Prospect Street Congregational church, Elgin, welcomed the delegates, in a handsome speech, to the hospitalities of the city, which he reminded them flowed with milk, if not with honey. He severely condemned Masonry, but between the order and its members he made a broad distinction.

The attraction of the evening was the College Contest. Four young men entered the lists for the prize, who spoke in the following order: J. G. Brooks, C. Seymour Bullock, L. M. Hiatt and Ira B. Stone. Mr. Bullock was from Northwestern University, Evanston; the others from Wheaton College. They hail respectively from Kansas; Detroit, Mich.; Wheaton and Morrison, Illinois. Revs. S. H. Adams, D.D., formerly of the Centenary M. E. church, Chicago; Alexander Thomson, chairman of the N. C. A. Board, and J. A. Richards, of Ft. Scott, Kansas, acted as judges. The young men acquitted themselves nobly, and each made for themselves advocates in the audience who would have awarded them the prize. Mr. Brooks would have gained it in an ordinary company of contestants; but the pleasing address of Mr. Bullock made many feel sure that he would bear it away; those who could appreciate a finely written speech pinned their faith on Mr. Hiatt, and the honors were again divided. Mr. Stone's forensic ability, his logical indictment of the lodge, and downright earnestness again made everybody hesitate. Who could tell where lightning would strike. The judges consulted and reported through Dr. Adams in favor of Mr. Stone with a warm commendation of all, especially Mr. Hiatt. The victor was called forward by the chairman and presented with the award, which he received with honest pride. During the consultation of the judges a collection was taken, committees appointed and the enrollment begun.

Next morning an earnest devotional meeting was conducted by Rev. J. J. Hales, of Crystal Lake, and Rev. Alexander Thomson, of Bartlett, was chosen temporary chairman. Various committees were appointed, and by request Secretary Stoddard made a statement of his work in Boston, preparatory to the Tremont Temple meeting, Dec. 11 and 12.

The morning address, by Prof. J. N. Bedford, of the Wesleyan Theological Seminary, on the "Selfishness of Lodgery," was an able argument, showing from the published and acknowledged principles of secret societies, as well as from practical observation, that the so-called benevolence of the lodge is a sham, and differs from true Christian charity as light from darkness.

The annual reports of the Executive Committee and Treasurer did not show an extensive campaign against the lodge during the year, and it was the decided conviction that the reform, as far as Illinois is concerned, is not receiving its due. The receipts for the year were under $300.

In the afternoon Rev. G. R. Milton was elected president; Revs. C. S. K. Chesbro and John Harper, vice-presidents; Alfred H. Hiatt, Jr., secretary; Ezra A. Cook, treasurer; and for seven additional members of the Executive Committee: Revs. B. F. Worrell, F. D. Christie, Prof. W. H. Fischer, Mrs. E. A. Cook, Mrs. A. E. Stoddard, and Mrs. Andrews. District vice-presidents, to represent each Congressional district in the State, were also selected.

The resolutions adopted were as follows:

Resolved, That the oratorical contest last evening, by College students, greeted by a full house, was a beautiful success, creditable to the four young gentlemen who spoke, to the city of Elgin, and the cause of Christianity and free government against the idolatry and despotism of the lodge. And we hope the brilliant experiment will be repeated and enlarged another year.

Resolved, That the thousands now being paid for the defense of the murderers of Dr. Cronin and the bribery of jurymen, when the culprits themselves are men destitute of means, proves that our lives and liberties are in imminent peril from the secret societies to which these men belong.

Resolved, That the fall of 1,500 Masonic lodges, which procured a similar murder, years ago, by popular discussion, proves the inherent weakness of the lodge before the people; and its horrible wickedness, as a system, of fraud, blasphemy and false religion makes it the duty of every Christian to enlist for its extermination.

The committee on State agent recommended the engagement of Rev. C. F. Hawley, who has for several years labored successfully in Iowa. The report was adopted. Rev. J. A. Richards of Kansas was consulted with a view to his undertaking this work, but his health would not at present permit it.

The presentation of Mrs. A. E. Stoddard's paper on "Work among the Children," suggested that an effort be made to secure instruction in the Sabbath-school against secret societies, and it was voted to recommend to the N. C. A. Board that the circulation of Miss Flagg's notes on the International lessons be made a specialty.

Rev. Alexander Thomson's address on "Obstacles in the Way and Hints how to Remove them" was very favorably received, and a vote to request a copy for publication was unanimously adopted.

During the afternoon, as if to fill up the measure of disappointment, a telegram from Col. George R. Clarke informed the convention that he could not be present in the evening. Sickness had detained Dr. Wishart, business of a most urgent nature hindered Dr. J. E. Roy as he was about taking the train to act as judge of the College contest. Revs. B. T. Roberts, editor of the Free Methodist, and S. H. Swartz of the St. Paul M. E. church, Chicago, were expected to speak and their attendance was promised, but they did not come. Perhaps they would have caused a surfeit of good things. Brief addresses from Rev. Byron Gunner of Louisiana, Rev. C. C. Foote of Detroit, Secretary Stoddard and Pres. J. Blanchard were of captivating interest, and will long be remembered by those who heard them. Mr. Gunner said that he had been prevented from joining the colored secret societies because of the influence of the Cynosure which he read in Talladega College. It was estimated that about 500 colored children are born daily, and so great is the influence of the secret lodges over the parents that a large proportion of these, he estimated 300, were practically born into the lodge.

Pres. C. A. Blanchard and Henry L. Kellogg were appointed delegates to the Boston Conference, with the request that they secure substitutes if unable to attend in person.

The addresses of the last evening were the climax of this interesting meeting. The house was again filled, and many were present who especially needed to hear the truths spoken by Mrs. M. E. R. Gleason of Massachusetts on "Narcotics," and by Pres. C. A. Blanchard. Mrs. Gleason spoke with thrilling effect on the tobacco curse, and its kin evils of opium, bromide, etc. Pres. Blanchard drew important lessons from the Cronin case and the ceremonies of Odd-fellowship, which his impressive and eloquent presentation sent home with convincing power. Rev. Mr. Milton was happy in his brief remarks as presiding officer, and with an occasional word intensified conviction or added variety and interest, and every delegate agreed the convention to have been the best for years held by the State Association.

WILL NOT ACCEPT THE CHALLENGE.

SCHUYLER'S LAKE, N. Y., Nov. 6, 1889.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—We are having an Anti-masonic revival here. Lectures and tracts have been given, books sold and Cynosure subscriptions taken, so the people for miles around are getting light and becoming greatly interested. As the Masonic lodge has gone to seed in this section, any one with spiritual discernment can not fail to see its evil effects. Saloonists, deists, Universalists, infidels, together with a very few professed Christians, worship at the Masonic altar in Schuyler's Lake. Is it at all surprising that the churches are rotting down?

After Elder Rathbun and your agent had lectured last week the following appeared in the Richfield Mercury:

"D. P. Rathbun has been holding evening meetings at the Methodist church, indulging in an innocent tirade against Freemasonry, to the amusement if not the edification of his audience. No attempt will be made to criticize his arguments, which were expressed in language extremely ungrammatical, at least, for a public speaker. Candid observers are of the opinion that he will not overturn the institution for some time to come, and express the belief that there will be at least one more session of the Grand Lodge."

A Universalist preacher by the name of Ward has appeared at public lodge installations as a Masonic champion. Elder Rathbun sent him a challenge to publicly meet and discuss the principles of his order. So far as I know, it has not been accepted. The little insult published in the Mercury is the only attempt at a reply I have seen. Dr. Fitch (a Mason) is the Schuyler Lake correspondent for the Mercury, and is the supposed author of the above.

Before preaching Sabbath I called the congregation's attention to the way the Masons had treated our efforts to get the people enlightened. Reading the Mercury item I remarked that it seemed a little strange that one so learned as this man attempting to criticize Elder Rathbun's address by designating his language as "extremely ungrammatical," should criticise in the same sentence he said he would not. This lie would not look so bold had he not said in the same sentence he would make "no attempt" to tell it. Surely lying comes easy when it appears with "no attempt!" I then and there challenged Dr. Fitch or any other Mason in town to meet this so-called "extremely ungrammatical" speaker or myself in public discussion. The doctor sends word that he will not accept the challenge. His state of mind may be evinced from the following statements made in the postoffice in the presence of witnesses: "Elder Rathbun is a perjured villain. Who would believe such a perjured villain." Evidently the doctor forgot by calling this name, he was admitting the correctness of the Elder's revelation. How could he be perjured, from the doctor's standpoint, unless he told the truth about Masonry!

Reader, do you not pity the unfortunate man who is led into this institution? Sworn to lie; to ever conceal that which he cannot conceal!

To-day I have met five zealous Masons; not one of them attends church regularly. All stated that they were not at liberty to discuss Masonry when I attempted to reason with them. Was the African in this country in a worse slavery than the man who belongs to an institution he is not allowed to defend in any other way than by insult and injury? Oh, what a bondage this!

I spoke Sabbath and Monday evenings in the M. E. church, Exeter, to good audiences. Tomorrow evening I speak in a school-house on Angel Hill, and Friday evening in West Exeter M. E. church. While at the latter place I am to be the guest of Elder Kashmer, M. E. pastor on this circuit. I have sold over two dozen pamphlets exposing the Masonic ceremonies, and taken several subscriptions to our paper here. May God help the right. W. B. STODDARD.

THE NEW YORK STATE CONVENTION.

HOUGHTON, N. Y., Oct. 23 and 24, 1889.

The convention was called to order by General Agent J. P. Stoddard, who conducted the devotional exercises; after which an election of temporary officers provided a chairman in Rev. A. W. Hall and secretary in W. B. Stoddard. The convention was addressed by Rev. J. P. Stoddard on the question, "Can a man be a Christian and practice the requirements of Freemasonry at the same time?" A general discussion followed, developing much interest. The evening session listened to a sermon by Pres. J. Blanchard, from the text, "He that hath my commandments and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me." This was followed by testimonials, and committees were appointed.

The Thursday morning session was opened in the Seminary with addresses to the students by Pres. Blanchard and J. P. Stoddard. After removing to the church, letters to the convention were read and the remainder of the forenoon session occupied in general discussion.

In the afternoon the following officers were elected: President, Prof. A. R. Dodd, of Houghton; for Secretary, Rev. W. A. Hazlett, of Belmont; for Treasurer, P. D. Miller, of Newfane. Executive Committee: Rev. G. L. Paine, W. B. Stoddard, C. H. Watson.

The report on resolutions and memorials, after careful discussion, was adopted item by item:

WHEREAS, The present condition of our country furnishes just occasion for deep solicitude and earnest prayer on the part of every Christian citizen, and

WHEREAS, The prevalence of infidelity, lawlessness and crime is largely due to the existence of secret combinations and orders, and

WHEREAS, It is the solemn conviction of this convention, that no government can safely tolerate within its jurisdiction any society or order, such as the Clan-na-Gael, Knights of Pythias, Odd-fellows, Freemasons, etc., which try, condemn and execute their members for offences unknown to the laws of the land; therefore,

Resolved, That we consider it the bounden duty of the civil authorities to protect its subjects from domestic conspiracies as well as from invasion by foreign foes, and we hereby call upon our National Government and all its subordinates to suppress all such orders as treasonable conspiracies, whose members ought to be disfranchised and made incapable of holding any office, as being subjects of a government foreign to the spirit and genius of our Republic.

POLITICAL ACTION.

WHEREAS, We believe it is time for us to prepare for and discuss political action in 1892; and,

WHEREAS, We regard our original American platform as decidedly the best ever put before the people of the United States; and,

WHEREAS, When in the providence of God we had no candidate of our own American party, we generally supported two excellent candidates of the Prohibition party against the liquor curse, to which we were devotedly opposed before there was a Prohibition party; therefore,

Resolved, 1. That we are in favor of putting American candidates for President and Vice-President in the field in 1892, unless the Prohibition party will promptly declare in favor of open action, and against standing as they now stand, part open and part secret. A house so divided against itself cannot stand.

2. That we respectfully request the Illinois Christian Association, soon to meet at Elgin, Illinois, to call a council of the Americans, to meet soon at Chicago or elsewhere, to fill the place of the beloved and now sainted F. W. Capwell, now deceased, who was chairman of the National Committee of the American party; and we request said National Committee by its new chairman to correspond at once with Mr. Dickie, chairman of the National Prohibition Committee; and to inform us speedily whether the Prohibition party will meet us on open, fair ground, and nominate no candidates who meet behind tyled doors, sworn or pledged to conceal their proceedings.

3. That in case Mr. Dickie gives us no such assurance, we request the new chairman of our National American Committee to call his committee together at once to take such action as may seem wise to them and report to the country through the press.

THE AMERICAN ANTI-SECRECY LEAGUE.

Resolved, That we cordially approve of the action of Mr. W. I. Phillips as superintendent of the Anti-secrecy League, the design of which is two-fold: To question candidates of all parties, and by all just and honorable means to prevent the election of candidates who are pledged to conceal their proceedings from their fellow-citizens. And we recommend a committee of three to obtain subscribers to the League and promote its objects.

GREEK LETTER FRATERNITY.

WHEREAS, We are authentically informed that Miss Frances E. Willard, president of the National W. C. T. U., is a member of a girls' Greek-letter fraternity, which meets with closed doors and pledged to conceal its proceedings from outsiders, even from their mothers, and,

WHEREAS, We learn from the same authority that the Wellesley Female College in Massachusetts, where the pupils number 600 or 700 girls, are now being drawn into such Greek-letter fraternity; therefore,

Resolved, 1. That we regard a society of girls pledged to conceal their initiation and proceedings from outsiders, their fathers and mothers included, as headed, though all unconsciously on their part, towards the morals of the seraglio and its secret harem.

2. That we request Miss Willard to withdraw from such a fraternity; and to aid Miss Schafer, president of the magnificent Wellesley College, in wiping this stain from the noble institution under her charge.

3. That we request Miss E. E. Flagg to lay these resolutions before Miss President Schafer; and send her reply in her New England Letter to the Christian Cynosure.

REPORT ON STATE OF THE WORK.

WHEREAS, There has been no agent actively in the work for five years, and seeing the pressing needs of such a work within the State; we, therefore, recommend that such steps as the convention may see proper to inaugurate be taken toward the appointment of a State agent, and the procuring of means needful to his support. Also recommending that a State Convention be held annually, which should be appointed at least two months prior to convening, and that such conventions be held during the year as may further our cause.

Rev. G. L. Paine, W. C. Boardman and F. L. Pressley were appointed committee on Anti-Secrecy League. The State president was appointed as delegate to the Congress of Christians to be held in Boston in December. Rev. A. W. Hall was appointed as alternate. The concluding prayer was offered by Pres. J. Blanchard. In the evening session there was an address by Rev. J. P. Stoddard on the subject, "Covenants."

WM. A. HAZLETT.

DEGREE WORK REVIVED.

Hiram Abiff had so long been remanded to the silence of the grave that some believed that Masonic violence had achieved a victory and he would not again be resurrected; but Schuyler's Lake, N. Y., has the honor of witnessing a resurrection after an interval of four or five years, and once more, for the edification of the public, he appears without as well as within the lodge. Rev. D. P. Rathbun of Blodgett's Mills, N. Y., came on the 26th ult., and, after lecturing one or two evenings on the religious and other aspects of Freemasonry and scattering hand-bills broadcast, gave the first degree to an amused and interested audience, but adjourned work in third degree for a few weeks. The fraternity regarded the preceding lectures with equanimity, but degree work excited the declaration that he "had better be about his business than trying to break up Freemasonry," a war cry and incitation to jacks to deeds of violence.

Mr. Stoddard, the Washington agent of the N. C. A., came a few days after Mr. Rathbun and aided in working the degree. He still remains to cut the feeders of the lodge on the exterior of the circle, while Freemasons endeavor at the center to distract attention. He promises to make his visits regular, and his services will be annually available to all in the county who wish them.

SPECTATOR.

CORRESPONDENCE.

PROHIBITIONISTS, AH-OY!

TRIM THE SAILS OF THE AMERICAN PARTY—ALL HANDS ON DECK.

AVALON, Mo.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—It is rather amusing at this late hour to see the leading political Prohibitionists, from Gen. Fisk down, trying to utterly ignore the lodge question. Even the Voice, posing as the model reform journal, chiding the churches, piously pointing out the duty of the praying voters, has not a whisper or syllable against this all-pervading, overshadowing evil of oath-bound lodgery. It has much to say about American principles, doctrines and institutions. It harps early and late of our "foreign citizens," and frames beautiful speeches as to how they should Americanize. It soundly berates the old parties and politicians for moral cowardice and unmanly indifference when the welfare of the country is at stake. Let the Dutch or Irish have a Sunday picnic and drink beer, and the Voice is trembling for the safety of our Christian civilization. But when the Knight Templar Freemasons traverse the length and breadth of the land on Sabbath, and have a big carousal, drinking whole car-loads of wine and whiskies before the eyes of the whole nation, the brave Voice, editors, reporters and correspondents are beautifully silent. The naughty Dutch and Irish, with their beer-drinking and Sunday-dancing, are a standing text for double headlines, a kind of red-rag arrangement for the great moral luminary. But when the "intensely Christian" Sir Knight Freemasons do the same things, and make a shameful national show of it all—well, that, in the eyes of the great Voice, is another affair entirely, not worth mentioning. The mixed lodge company, their libations of pure wine, their banquets, low-twelve suppers and conclaves, their Sunday lodges of instruction, funeral pageants and picnics, their Sabbath excursions from Maine to California, and their sworn affiliation with liquor-sellers and distillers, are nothing, absolutely not worth mentioning by boasted Prohibition leaders and papers. Strain at a gnat and swallow this monarchy-aping, un-American lodge camel—Sabbath-breaking, dram-drinking, mixed dancing, along with its national desecration, blasphemy and profanity. "Physician, heal thyself." Let the Voice try some of its own medicine. The hand of the lodge is on the Prohibition leaders and papers. The movement is honeycombed with active, designing secretists. Dr. Funk, the brave Gen. Fisk, and even Miss Willard, avowed Anti-masons, are afraid of these unprincipled secret tricksters, whose stock in trade is deception, hypocrisy and double dealing, and whose tongues of slander and calumny but few have the patriotism, grit and grace to challenge and defy.

With the Cynosure we believe the time has come to turn to political Americanism in solid earnest. The Prohibitionists may patch up their ship a little, but the lodge rats will see that there are holes enough to paralyze the sailing. The lodge pirates are aboard of the vessel, and the sooner Dr. Funk, Gen. Fisk and Miss Willard begin to call the roll and fire these false friends from the temperance ranks, the better for the great cause so dear to all real open-faced, open-hearted American Prohibitionists. Let every praying Anti-mason look well to the company he keeps.

THE MISSION AFLOAT.

YORK, Pa., Oct. 30, 1889.

EDITORS CYNOSURE:—I hope that all readers of the Cynosure, who are able to spare a dollar, will help our friend I. R. B. Arnold to obtain the Floating Chapel, which it seems to me is much needed for a successful raid upon the rivers. One who has already done so much effective service for anti-secrecy, anti-saloonery, anti-monopoly, anti-sun-worship, etc., should not be allowed to wait at Wheeling, W. Va., long for a little money to build a life boat to save our misguided fellow mortals. He must also be aided in obtaining a good supply of tracts, etc., for free distribution to those who cannot buy. And a fund to enable him to give Cynosures to colored ministers will certainly do much to pull off some hoodwinks south of Mason and Dixon's line.

I have sold more than two hundred of "Stories of the Gods" here; and I think this excellent pamphlet has helped much to open the eyes of religious citizens of York and vicinity. I desire to urge all friends of reforms to give promptly and liberally, in order that all who are willing and able to work can do so effectively. Those whose deeds are evil give freely on all occasions, when there is a demand for corruption funds. Millions for hoodwinks, regalia, beer, boodle, dances, and deviltry of all sorts! How much can we raise for I. R. B. Arnold and his interesting missionary expeditions, "away down south in Dixie?"

LITERATURE.

ALDEN'S MANIFOLD CYCLOPEDIA of Knowledge and Language. Vol. 17. Gogo—Haliography. Pp. 632. John B. Alden, New York.

The commendation of this work repeated with every new volume may be stale reading, but in this age of encyclopedias, of hasty acquisitions of knowledge, and difficulty of retaining the mass of facts and theories which a well-informed man is supposed to have always ready for use, makes a handy-volume cyclopedia of special value. No one investing in such a publication should fail to examine this.

A passage in the "Life of Lincoln," to be found in the November Century, shows what the South lost when Abraham Lincoln was assassinated. It is the first publication ever made of the draft of a message and proclamation which the President submitted to his Cabinet on February 5th, 1865. In it he proposed the payment of four hundred millions as an indemnity to slaveholders, complete pardon for political offenses, and the release of confiscated property except under certain circumstances. Such magnanimity was, however, too much for his counsellors, who "unanimously disapproved." Along with the document is given a full account of this best kept of Cabinet secrets. The first of the "Present-day Papers" is entitled "The Problems of Modern Society," and it has a preface signed by the group of philosophers and writers who are putting forth these timely essays. Dr. Langdon writes this paper. The other members of this group are Professor Shields, Bishop Potter, Drs. Munger and Dike, Seth Low and Prof. Ely. Mrs. Carter's description of "Street Life in Madrid" is the occasion of a frontispiece after Velasquez, and several striking Spanish studies by the American artists, Chase and Blum. Geo. Kennan has a chapter of "Adventures in Eastern Siberia," in which occur several passages of droll interest. One of these we copy in our temperance department. In a town of 4,000 inhabitants in Eastern Siberia, in a private residence, Kennan found one of the finest mirrors in the world with surroundings in keeping. One of the most curious articles which the Century has published is entitled "The 'Newness,'" and is by the late Robert Carter, himself an eye-witness of the vagaries of the transcendental movement in New England. Among the poems is one by John H. Boner on "Poe's Cottage at Fordham," which is accompanied by a picture of the cottage.

The November St. Nicholas appears in a larger and plainer type, and with more than enough extra pages to accommodate the increase of size without loss of material. "Intercollegiate Foot-ball in America," "Coursing with Greyhounds in Southern California," by C. F. Holder, and in "A Pueblo Rabbit-Hunt," by C. F. Lummis, we have some account of modern sports which have a barbarous side to their character, and which we hope will have little attractions for young readers. Elizabeth Balch tells the almost forgotten story of the boyish quarrel between Cromwell and the little prince whose death-warrant he was to sign in later years. "A Story of a Horse," by Capt. C. A. Curtis, and "A Race with a Wooden Shoe," by Frederick E. Partington, are strong, dashing pieces, and well illustrated by Remington and Hill, respectively.

The Evangelical Repository opens with an article by Rev. Dr. William Wishart of Monmouth, Ill., on the "Sin against the Holy Ghost," an interesting theological question, which Dr. Wishart discusses with his well-known logical force and careful analysis of Scripture teaching. Rev. J. Q. A. McDonnell writes on the important topic, "The Church and the Labor Problem."

A judge in a Chicago court is reported as saying: "Of all the boys in the reform school at Pontiac, and in various reformatories about the city, ninety-five per cent are the children of parents who died through drink, or became criminals through the same cause."

OBITUARY.

ANOTHER OF THE OLD GUARD DEAD.

On the 22nd inst., at Lecompton, Kan., Major JAMES B. HOPE, aged 61, was killed by a railway train.

He was walking on the track, apparently in a meditative mood, when, as he was entering a short bridge, he discovered a train a short distance behind him, as it came around a curve from behind a bluff. For an instant he paused and looked back in evident bewilderment, and then started to run ahead, evidently miscalculating the great speed of the train, which ran him down and mangled him to death before he got across the bridge. A veteran of two wars, that in Mexico and our rebellion, in battles by the dozen, seven times wounded, and in perils and sufferings of every description, yet by the favor of Him in whom he ever trusted he was permitted to return to a devoted wife and see his seven children grown to maturity—noble men and women. In spite of lodge discriminations in the army (of which the writer has heard him speak), and which seemed to disgust him with the whole secrecy system, he rose, by valor and faithfulness, to the rank of major.

A few years ago he became a "third party Prohibitionist," and has suffered more or less for his devotion to that party, of which he was a member at his death. But the "liberal" action in the U. B. church, of which, for a number of years he has been a useful and honorable member, was perhaps his greatest grief. With his characteristic valor and faithfulness he entered the conflict and fought a good fight, never wavering to the moment of his death in his devotion to the old church.

Among the severe wounds that he received during his soldier-life was one in the head and another through the body; but the severest wound, perhaps, was in his heart of hearts, which, Caesar-like, he received from treacherous brethren. Shortly after the U. B. General Conference of last May, he stood up in Quarterly Conference here in defense of the old church and its God-honored principles; and his brethren and fellow-soldiers of the war stabbed him from every side, declaring him and other faithful ones no longer trustees of the church,—“Not to be trusted,” they said. Shortly after this he and his friends were locked out of their usual place of worship for declaring for the old constitution and creed, under which they had joined the church, and which they had vowed to respect. Yes, and even locked out of the school-house, he with other old people worshipping wherever they could, with aching backs as they sat on board seats in the service of God for months past.

Not satisfied with turning him out of office, locking him out of every public place of worship, and excommunicating and persecuting him to the verge of the grave, liberalism, with characteristic malignity, has dipped its sharpened arrows in poison, as it were, by reflecting on his character after death, while his friends were yet in tears and smarting with wounds already inflicted. Surely the "liberals" are spreading themselves like a green bay tree. But God was evidently with him, and for weeks before his death he seemed to be walking with God, as evidenced in many ways, especially in his constant thanksgiving and praise to God, which seemed to increase up to the last. The day before he died he said to a brother, "I am now where I never was before. Whatever my enemies may say or do, I can love them."

One hour before his taking away he was talking with a saintly mother in Israel in regard to his Saviour and his hopes and fears. He spoke especially of three of his children, whom he feared were not living fully in God's favor, and for whom he constantly plead before a throne of grace. "Pray for them," he often said to us. Thus he was faithful to his country, to his church, to his family and friends, and to his Saviour, "Faithful unto death."

REV. ROBERT J. WILLIAMS.

The subject of this notice was born in Cataugus county, N. Y., May 17th, 1844, and died in Faribault county, Minnesota, October 31st, 1889. His death came by that slow but fatal disease, consumption, by which he has been failing and suffering and wasting away for a number of years. Nearly four years ago he went to Moose Lake in northern Minnesota, and later he went to Wallula, W. T., with his family with the hope of recovering his health. But alas! the disease had so far advanced that he was, on the 21st of August last, obliged to leave his home in Wallula. He had buried his wife the day before, whose illness had been brief. He leaves two children, who will be kindly cared for by relatives.

Bro. Williams was converted to God in February, 1865, and has lived a consistent Christian life. He has also been ardently opposed to all secret fraternities. I have been associated with this brother in the Methodist Protestant church for a number of years. We have labored together in camp meetings and have witnessed grand displays of God's power in our meetings. Truly we could feel that the Lord was with him, for he was always valiant and jealous for the truth. On the 24th of October, a few days before he passed away, I found him ready and waiting the Master's call. Jesus gave him victory over death on Thursday morning, the 31st of October.

His mother, Mrs. Lydia Williams, was present at the funeral of William B. Morgan in Batavia, N. Y., 1826. She passed before to the better land only a little over two years ago. Bro. Williams was a devoted man, and determined to live up to his convictions of right, and has made many friends. He was faithful in rebuking sin wherever he found it, and never was willing to compromise with sin in any form. Truly we shall miss him, for we shall not be able to find his like again. May the Lord enable us all to bow with submission to the Lord's will.

W. H. MCCHESENEY,
(Pastor of the M. P. church, Welcome Circuit).

THOMAS BARTON GALLOWAY, whose late residence was at Bloomington, Ind., passed to his reward on Oct. 8, 1889, in his 82nd year.

With his parents he removed from Kentucky to Ohio, near Xenia, in the first years of the present century. Their convictions on the question of slavery made it desirable to live among a people of similar convictions; hence the removal. Thomas imbibed the views of his father, and during a long and heated contest on that question, which was only settled at last by the stern arbitrament of war, he took an active and effective part. His house was one of the way-stations of the Underground Railroad leading from Dixey Land to Canada; and when the war began he gave one of his sons, whose life was sacrificed in the bloody struggle.

Mr. Galloway was by instinct a reformer, a staunch opponent of every moral evil. He was ever for discussion, either in private or on the rostrum, and he was no mean foe in the contest. Many a pro-slavery disputant felt the cold steel of his logic. Many a defender of the "peculiar system" retired crestfallen from the school-house debate. Of later days he had made himself familiar with the history and claims of Freemasonry, and had picked up the grips and passwords of the various degrees, and having a tenacious memory, he could have entered any lodge unchallenged where a stranger. He was a thorn in the side of the lodge wherever he resided. In his last years his natural strength of mind scarcely abated, though his bodily strength was much impaired. His newspaper reading was limited for some time to the Christian Instructor, Christian Cynosure, and New York Voice, with all of whose teachings he was in hearty sympathy.

He leaves an aged widow, who will not be long behind him entering the heavenly kingdom, and three daughters, all the guiders of the households of their husbands and children, and two sons.

May his mantle fall on one or both of them, as by the leadings of the Spirit they be led in the footsteps of an honored father.—J. H. L., in the Christian Instructor.

WHAT IS CATARRH?

Catarrh is an inflammation of the mucous membranes, and may affect the head, throat, stomach, bowels or bladder. But catarrh of the head is the most common, often coming on so gradually that it has a firm hold before the nature of the trouble is suspected. Catarrh is caused by a cold, or succession of colds, combined with impure blood. Its local symptoms are a sense of fullness and heat in the forehead, dryness in the nose and back part of the throat, and a disagreeable discharge from the nose. When the disease gains a firm hold on the system, it becomes chronic, and is then exceedingly dangerous and treacherous, liable to develop into consumption.

Fortunate is it that we have in Hood's Sarsaparilla the remedy for this ever increasing malady. It attacks at once the source of the disease by purifying and enriching the blood, which in passing through the delicate passages of the mucous membrane soothes and rebuilds the tissues, giving them tendency to health instead of disease, and ultimately curing the affection. At the same time Hood's Sarsaparilla builds up the whole system and makes one feel that he has taken a new lease of life.

THE N. C. A. FUNDS.

The General Fund is that from which the running expenses of the Association are paid. From it the agents on the field are supported.

The Foreign Fund is that from which the foreign demand for literature against the lodge is supplied to missionaries.

The Free Tract Fund clearly states by its name the object for which contributions are solicited. Millions of pages have been distributed by means of this fund.

The Cynosure Ministers' Fund. The donations to this fund have enabled the Association to send many copies of the Cynosure to the ministers of the South, especially to pastors of colored churches. The result has been a blessing to them and their churches.

Contributions to any or all these funds are urgently solicited.

FORM OF BEQUEST.—I give and bequeath to the National Christian Association, incorporated and existing under the laws of the State of Illinois, the sum of — dollars for the purposes of said Association, and for which the receipt of its Treasurer for the time being shall be sufficient discharge.

HENRY L. KELLOGG, ASSOCIATE EDITOR.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 14, 1889.

TO THE PASTORS OF NEW ENGLAND AND THEIR PEOPLE.

This is the first of four issues of the Christian Cynosure, ordered sent to you by the Directors of the National Christian Association, to interest you in, and inform you concerning a Congress of Churches and Christians to be held in TREMONT TEMPLE, BOSTON, December 11 and 12 next. The speakers who are to address this convention are taken from Baptist, Congregationalist, Methodist Episcopal and Universalist churches. The theme is the relation of the secret lodge system to our government and Christianity. And as the speakers are men of distinguished ability, these various denominations will be voiced. Old men are now living who remember, sixty-five to seventy years ago, when the Baptists led in the overthrow of the lodges; and two-thirds of these lodges—all north of the slave-holding line—gave up their charters, or suspended their active existence. J. Q. Adams, Daniel Webster, Edward Everett, and, later, Wm. H. Seward, Fillmore and Thaddeus Stevens,—indeed, every prominent statesman out of the slave States were opposed to the secret lodge; and under the lead of such noble men as Bernard, Stearns, Pease and others, every Baptist church in the city and State of New York excluded Freemasonry from their Christian fellowship.

As lodge worship is gentile, or demon worship (1 Cor. 10: 20), the fall of the Northern lodges was followed by the most stupendous and thorough revivals of religion this country has ever seen. The Spirit was, literally, "poured upon us from on high." Lodge meetings gave place to prayer meetings, and works of darkness to works of light. In six short years, from 1826 to 1832, so weak was lodgery and so mighty was truth and popular discussion, that in 1832 two hundred and twenty-eight thousand votes were cast for Wirt and Ellmaker, the Anti-masonic candidates for President and Vice President of the United States. A like proportion of our present poll would be three or four millions. And unless that mighty work had been arrested; if the worship of Christ had gone on supplanting the demon worship of the lodge, Christ's kingdom might now have come. But that mighty work was suspended. Slavery suppressed free discussion in the South, and the slave question swallowed all other questions in the North. In 1832, the year of the vote for Wirt, Garrison started his Abolition society in Boston. The lodge always takes both sides. Masonry hid under the slavery discussion in the North, and in lodge-rooms in the South, and in thirty years hatched a cry of howling furies such as Milton pictures issuing from the serpent Sin at the gates of hell. Ben Butler, at the time a Mason of 32 degrees, went South and proffered his Massachusetts soldiers to keep their slaves working, building forts and raising crops for rebel masters! And others, less manly and patriotic than Gen. Butler, as McClellan, Fitz John Porter and McDowell, on the Union side, fought with their right eye on political promotion and their left eye on our flag! And had not God in mercy sent us Anti-masons to man our government, as Sumner, Seward, Stevens, Chase (the law student of Wirt), and put Lincoln in the White House to send Charles Francis Adams and Thurlow Weed to choke off the British Lion, and put Grant at the head of our armies, our Republic would have been supplanted by Alexander H. Stephens's "Southern Empire, with slavery for its cornerstone!"

But the lodge serpent not only took both sides, but corrupted many of our soldiers before they left home. As Milton paints Satan

"— at the ear of Eve Squat like a toad," so the lodge-devil crept to the ear of our volunteers and whispered, "Join the lodge and you will get favors of rebels." And join the lodge they did by platoons. And that lodge swore them to have their throats cut or obey the signs of Southern Masons; and so these escaped the starvation of Libby and Andersonville, while hundreds of our boys who would not swear to obey the lodge, whose oath was put before that of country, died for want of food, while Masons were given double rations, such as they were. Names could be easily given of witnesses who will swear to such facts. Even Union chaplains were stript and sworn by regimental lodges, to get promotion from one side and favors from the other.

THE RETURN WAVE.

But if this were all the evil, it were trivial compared with the evil of the return of lodgery on the reflux wave of the war, hatched in Southern lodge-rooms. The writer was in a meeting in the town-house of Canandaigua, in sight of the jail whence Morgan was taken by Masons and murdered. An old man arose with tears and said, "Before the war there was not a Mason to be heard of in Canandaigua county. Now the county is crawling with them!" And yet Masons insult our understandings by telling us, "The lodge had nothing to do with the war, for there were Masons on both sides." So Byron describes his moral desperado:

— For Juan stood well with both sides,
As in Freemasonry, a higher brother.

—Byron's Don Juan.

And yet the wicked and the weak cite this damning depravity of the lodge in proof of its innocence!

Before the slavery struggle arose, churches in Boston, Chelsea and towns adjacent excluded Masons as moral lepers. And it is but few years since the writer was in Chelsea, when one of its churches were debating whether to receive a Mason, or repeal its rule! And a Doctor of Divinity who had been stript and sworn in Warsaw, N. Y., while Hon. Seth M. Gates, a renouncing Mason, was his leading deacon, went from the First Church pastorate in Northampton, Mass., and took, in Chelsea, four more degrees in Masonic blasphemy, up to the Royal Arch. J. M. Manning, about that time, pastor of the Old South Church, Boston, had been blindfolded and lead by a rope halter in the hands of such men as make up Boston lodges!

By such degrading apostasy Boston has now 571 lodges of various sorts to 223 churches, around that State House where, in 1834, when Anti-masonry had gone out of National politics, the people of Massachusetts, by their Representatives and Senators, enacted a law fining the administering or taking a Masonic oath not less than $50, or more than $200. And Daniel Webster said in a public letter that he "cordially approved" of that law.

RESPECTED BRETHREN IN NEW ENGLAND.

We fervently request you to meet in Tremont Temple, Boston, Dec. 11 next, and hear such men as Dr. Gifford, Dr. Miner, Dr. Lansing, and others like them, discuss this fearfully momentous subject. Go there and impanel yourselves as Christ's jurymen for God and our country. Do you, can you think that those 571 secret lodges are working nightly outside the State House, court house and churches, in Boston, and that they are not working inside of them?

But suppose your rights and reputations are for the present safe from the sworn partiality and proscription of those lodges, are they not disintegrating your churches? Do you not know that Masonry is organized deism?

The great Dr. Channing was shut from orthodox pulpits because he denied the divinity of Christ. But there were two sides to Christ's nature, a human and a divine. And while Dr. Channing's book against enslaving the man Christ Jesus was read in the U. S. Senate, though the author doubted the proper divinity of Christ, the orthodox Dr. Leonard Woods was in the American Board pleading for the slave-holder's right to the holy communion, and made Paul a justifier of American slavery. And now shall we practice the errors of both those great New Englanders and hold to the truth of neither? The lodge denies Christ, both the man who suffers and the God who saves us! It takes in Jews who despise him. And so, in the eloquent and true words of Dr. Edward Beecher, "by it" (the lodge) "Christ is dethroned, and Satan is exalted."

Five hundred and seventy-one lodges in the capital of New England draw your young men from Christ's prayer meeting, in the proportion of two-and-a-half to one. It swallows their money by thousands, consumes their time till the late hours of night, and turns them out on the street between two lights, one before the saloon and the other at the door of the brothel! And, if they chance to escape one of these roads to hell, it teaches them to loathe Christianity in the person of the preachers whom they have helped to blindfold, strip and swear to blanks for other men to fill. Please report at Tremont Temple, Dec. 11 next, prepared and pledged to God to learn the truth and obey it.

STUDY THE APOCALYPSE.

"Practically the prophetic parts of it" (The Revelation) "are almost, if not entirely, excluded from the Scriptures."—Moses Stuart. But this should not and need not be. For the same great scholar truly says: "The Apocalypse certainly breathes a precious, yea, a most noble Christian spirit."

Prophecies, like proverbs, are fulfilled by whatever fulfills them. And the ubiquitous Matthew Henry has said, as truly as quaintly, "The Scriptures hath many fulfillings." That the transcendently beautiful and sublime picture (Rev. 12: 1) of "a woman, clothed with the sun, the moon under her feet, and upon her head a crown of twelve stars," is a pictorial likeness of Christianity, developed in heaven and descending to earth, is plain and obvious. Christianity produced Christ, the "Man child," "caught up to God and to his throne." There is not, cannot be, any other (Rev. 12: 5).

And if the sun-clothed, star-crowned mother meant and means Christianity, and the dragon means Satan, the present deluge of secret orders, the organized deism of the lodge, is the teaching-force or flood from the devil's mouth which is sweeping Christ's churches away. But "the earth" (that is, the rural districts, not the cities,) will "help the woman and save the Christian religion." (See Rev. 12: 16.) There is more rational piety buried in the country graveyards in New England than in the United States besides, and God hears the prayers of the pious dead. Hence this appeal to the pastors and churches of New England, in this and following numbers. Read and ponder the Apocalypse.

THE NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

This great convention is meeting in Chicago as we go to press. It is a mighty gathering; in size, immense; in objects, noble; in speech, eloquent; in ability, surpassing; in methods, wise; in achievements, grand; in enthusiasm, sublime; in spirit, Christian. Yet, after all, defective, because human; and failing in a vital point—to stand by Christ, who is the truth, when none of the rulers and chief priests dare join themselves to his cause.

The convention opened with a prayer meeting Friday morning in the armory of Battery D. The vast hall had been used for a sale following the great Horse Fair in the adjacent Exposition building, and up to near midnight the night before the floor was covered with sawdust and prancing nags. Men and women were up all night transforming the place into a bower of beauty, roofed by flags and encircled with silken banners. Around the galleries are shields bearing the names of States represented, and beside each the silk or satin gold-fringed banner of each State organization. An immense stretch of canvass spans the west side of the hall, on which is inscribed: "No sectionalism in politics; no sex in citizenship; no sectarianism in religion; but all for God, for home, and native land."

On the opposite wall, below the gallery, is another banner with the quotation: God's curse upon high license; "Woe unto them that call evil good and good evil, which justify the wicked for reward." On either side of this bold and unmistakable expression of radical temperance principles are: "Illinois for God and Temperance;" "For God, Home, and Nation."

High above the east gallery is the design of a globe belted with a white zone, inscribed, "World's W. C. T. U." A white-robed angel of the new day of "woman's emancipation," bearing the palm branch, comes down a path of light toward this newly girdled earth. On Monday forenoon the sun peered through a dim window behind this angelic vision, and filled its face with a glory to which a delegate called attention, and the convention stopped business to cheer. Some irreverent men, however, remarked that the tint of the vision's face was of too ruby a hue for a W. C. T. U. angel.

The great platform is walled in by flowers, and holds an organ and grand piano and seats for some 150 people. The president's table is well advanced to the center of the hall, and in spite of the vast space most speakers could be heard in every part. Banners, designs, flags, maps, charts, etc., in luxurious profusion and disorder were suspended in the rear, each day adding to the accumulation. Among the finest and most striking was a large outline map showing in pure white the States and Territories where scientific instruction on temperance is a part of the statute law. In black were the rest; New Jersey and Indiana alone of the Northern States being yet in the dark. The vast stretch of the Territories gleamed with the color of purity.

The 320 delegates, National and State officers, superintendents, etc., made up a total of 463. Outside the rail which enclosed their seats was room for thousands on the floor and in the galleries. In the ante-rooms was an abundance of temperance literature, and a table for N. C. A. documents also.

Friday morning the sixteenth annual convention of the National W. C. T. U. opened at 9 with a prayer meeting for two hours, followed by a Bible reading by Miss E. J. Scovel of Nashville, Tenn. Her address was of great spiritual power, refreshing to every soul in the vast audience.

In the afternoon old men and women long famous in this cause were introduced,—Neal Dow, Mother Stewart, Mrs. Willard; then were presented the Canadian and English delegations, and Mrs. John B. Finch, who is "fraternal delegate" from the Good Templars, and made a brief speech lauding the work of that secret order. Gen. Dow was more honest. Speaking of the lodge temperance business and the honest and persistent purpose of the W. C. T. U. to destroy the drink traffic, he said, "I am very sorry the same thing cannot be said of all the temperance societies in this country. There is the Sons of Temperance, the oldest of all. Very nice people. We have great meetings and very nice results. Well, really, there is not very much result but the form. We have nice songs and all sing, and we have nice prayers, and then we turn about and vote the rum ticket, because you see we are non-partisan." Later among the letters were those of T. V. Powderly of the Knights of Labor, who very much needs the endorsement of Miss Willard and the W. C. T. U. to bolster up his declining order.

Miss Willard's annual report is of great length. It is all printed, but was but partially presented at different times to the convention. We will glance at it later. Monday morning, after a long, fidgety, but good-natured preparation, the vote for president showed Miss Willard to have 430 votes, J. Ellen Foster 11, and 5 scattering.

KNIGHT TEMPLARISM IN WASHINGTON.

During the month that has passed since the Knight Templar Masons were at the national capital much has come to the public notice revealing the real character of their twenty-fourth conclave. The lodge press regarded it as "the grandest demonstration of Templar Masonry that has occurred since the days of the unsuccessful crusades for the recovery of the Holy Sepulcher." Alas for the departed glory of Chicago since 1880. "Washington," say these organs, "was filled with such a flood of chivalry, intellect and beauty, as it never beheld before." But the brilliancy of this picture was very unevenly distributed.

An important delegation, that of Iowa, was flatly refused a place in the procession or in the meeting of the conclave, and had its picnic all alone. This gave us a picture of the despotic nature of all Masonry, as well as this particular branch of it. In 1886, at San Francisco, a change in the ritual was adopted which increased the prerogative of the head of the order. Several States protested at the proclamation of the "Grand Master" announcing this change; but Iowa was so earnest in objecting that the order in that State was declared in rebellion by that functionary, and were treated as rebels at Washington. They patched up a peace before going home. The lodge took back the protesting Iowans without any report of repentance, on the ground that they had been sufficiently humbled and punished.

The ritual which raised the quarrel was put into the hands of a committee, to be reported on in three years.

The conquest of this Masonic army was not universal. Thank God! their boast that the government is practically in Masonic hands is not wholly true. A correspondent writes: "There was some comment among visiting knights as to the absence of Masonic designs from the decorations on the public buildings. The local committee, in obtaining permission to decorate the Treasury and War Departments, said nothing about the character of the decorations to be put up, and when the decorators were about to swing to the breeze various Masonic emblems at the Treasury Department, they were told that nothing but the National colors could be displayed from the government buildings."

This leads us to speak of President Harrison and the part he took in this affair. Beside viewing the parade, he received these Masons one evening at the White House. It is not so long ago that many ladies of Washington have forgotten it, that the Knight Templars once before visited the city. Their conduct was so notoriously licentious that these same Washington women held a meeting to denounce the insult of this visit to their sex. Had Mr. Harrison remembered this his hand might well have trembled as it was shaken by these men of the lodge.

The liquor business may not have been so lively this year as in 1880 or 1883, but the facts presented by Miss Flagg elsewhere, and the fateful use she makes of them, are a reminder that the nature of this body is not changed. Nor is it to be changed. It cannot accept Christ and be Masonry; and without accepting him it will always be the plaything of the devil and his lusts.

—The Wesleyan Methodist says: "Many are raising the question as to the wisdom of union between all holiness anti-secret-society churches. Where there is neither doctrine or principle to divide, why not unite, is the thought." That is a good thought to have in mind until it takes shape in deed.

—Rev. R. N. Countee of the Tabernacle church, Memphis, writes a letter of deep interest which will appear in our next. He has been for some time prostrated with sickness, and is not yet fully recovered. His experiences as an opponent of secret orders, during the past few months, are unique and instructive.

—William F. Davis, whom we formerly knew as the evangelist among the woodmen, but later as the hero of Boston Common and Suffolk Jail, has printed a sermon preached on the Common, August 11, 1889, in which he refutes the various schools of infidelity and liberalism that directly, or by implication, deny the Word of God. Copies of this able argument can be obtained of Bro. Davis, whose address is Mt. Washington, Chelsea, Mass.

—Rev. William Hazenburgh of Johannesburg, in the Transvaal, South Africa, sends us a copy of the Standard, a tri-weekly published in that city. This number, issued Oct. 5th, is an immense sheet of fourteen large-size pages 20x26 inches in size. Advertisements fill most of the space, and give the paper the appearance of a Chicago Sunday sheet. If this paper is any indication of the business prosperity of the Transvaal, that section of the world must be full of money.

—Rev. A. J. Chittenden of the College Church at Wheaton announced his purpose a week ago to accept an offer, coming to him through the American Missionary Association, to remove to Grand View, Tennessee, to take charge of the church there and teach in the school. After visiting the place, and being convinced that the change would benefit himself and his family, he reluctantly concluded to sever his relations at Wheaton. The church with equal regret parts with a pastor whose service for seven years has endeared him personally to the people. As his work is to be of a missionary nature, they will continue in sympathy and prayer, at least, to maintain a co-operation with Bro. Chittenden; and in their affection and esteem Mrs. Chittenden will not be forgotten, however long they may remain in the South.

—The death of Mr. F. W. Baird of Vermillionville, Ill., noticed last week, was the result of a distressing accident. His daughter was the postmistress and lives near to his home. Fearing burglars on the fatal Saturday night, she had signalled her father, who started to her aid, but called back to his colored hired man to bring a gun. The young man complied, but, whether from accidental discharge, or supposing Mr. Baird to be a burglar in his excitement, the gun was fired, and the bullet entered Mr. Baird's eye, killing him instantly. Pres. C. A. Blanchard spoke at the funeral on Tuesday afternoon. The attendance for the country place was unprecedented, hundreds coming from the country round about. Bro. Baird was long a pillar in the church at Tonica, a faithful and honorable man, true to God and his conscience.

CHRISTIAN CONGRESS IN BOSTON.

A Congress of Churches will be held in Tremont Temple, Boston, December 11 and 12, 1889, to consider the relation of the Secret Lodge system to Civil Liberty and the Christian Religion.

Rev. A. J. Gordon, D.D., Pastor Clarendon Street Baptist Church, Boston, will preside at the opening meeting.

The following speakers have agreed to be present and address the congress during its sessions: Dr. A. A. Miner, Boston; Dr. O. P. Gifford, Boston; Dr. I. J. Lansing, Worcester; Dr. D. McAllister, Pittsburgh; and President Charles A. Blanchard of Wheaton.

All churches or other Christian assemblies accepting Christ as the perfect example and atoning sacrifice for sin, are respectfully requested to be represented by delegates at this Congress, and all persons desiring to hear a candid discussion of the subject are cordially invited to attend.

Signed by Rev. A. J. Gordon, D.D., Rev. A. A. Miner, D.D., Prof. L. T. Townsend, D.D., Rev. N. Boynton, H. L. Hastings, Rev. James M. Gray, D.D., Rev. J. W. Hamilton, D.D., Rev. Wm. Elliott Griffis, D.D., Rev. O. P. Gifford, all of Boston, and fifteen other pastors.

THE BOSTON CONGRESS.

Are you planning to attend or to be represented at the Congress of Churches and Christians in Boston, Dec. 11 and 12 next? I make this a personal question, because it is one in which every one should feel a personal responsibility, as it concerns every citizen of this country.

It is not simply the murder of an individual, and the measures adopted by a single organization to protect criminals that are to be discussed, but a deeply-rooted and widely-extended conspiracy of evil-doers, already threatening equality of citizenship in the state and purity of membership in the body of Christ. Shall the administration of law be dominated, and the simplicity of the church of Christ be perverted, and the streams of civil and religious liberty poisoned at the fountain-head by secret and insidious foes, or shall the enemies be unveiled and driven from the field, is the issue involved?

The field of our Republic has been sown with good seed, but while men slept an enemy has scattered tares among the wheat. "That old serpent, which is the devil and Satan," has not been idle for all these years. Impelled by great wrath he has gone out "to deceive the nations which are in the four quarters of the earth to gather them to battle." Mormonism, under its banner of a false religion; Jesuitism, steadily directing its energy to unite church and state under the rule of a foreign dictator; liquor trusts, holding political parties, and through them the nation, in its grasp; the secret lodge, combining a multitude of societies, varied in forms and names, all agreeing together in one common opposition to "that kingdom which is righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Ghost"—these all, with their kindred, are awaiting the roll call to assemble in the "multitudes for the day of the Lord in the valley of decision."

Such a crisis calls loudly upon the children of God to array themselves on the side of justice and judgment, and to "come up to the help of the Lord against the mighty." Who will volunteer and report for Boston, and help to make this a meeting that shall far surpass the Congress of Christians held in Chicago in 1887 in numbers and influence, and make it the grandest gathering in every respect that has ever been held on the line of the anti-secrecy reform? Before this reaches you I shall, D. V., be in Boston, where all letters addressed to me at the "general delivery" will receive prompt attention.

J. P. STODDARD,
Cor. Secretary N. C. A.

THE HOME.

HOW BEAUTIFUL UPON THE MOUNTAINS.

O how beautiful their feet,
Who upon the mountains,
Sound abroad the tidings sweet
Of life's flowing fountains.
Mercy, peace and plenteous grace,
Sweet as heavenly manna,
Now are offered to our race—
Shout, and sing hosanna!

Joyful tidings we have heard,
And with hearts o'erflowing,
Praise Jehovah for his word,
His salvation showing.
Soon His foes he will subdue
By his mighty power;
Soon he will make all things new,
Bright as Eden's bower.

Soon time's shades shall flee away;
Groaning, suffering, sighing,
Ne'er shall mar the perfect day,
There shall be no dying:
Life shall issue from the throne
Like a crystal river,
Death's dark bondage shall be done,
Life shall flow forever.

THE STUDENT MISSIONARY UPRISING.

[John R. Mott in the Missionary Review.]

One of the greatest missionary revivals since the days of the apostles had its beginning in July, 1886, at the Mount Hermon Conference of college students. Two hundred and fifty-one students from eighty-nine colleges of the United States and Canada had come together at the invitation of Mr. Moody to spend four weeks in Bible study. Nearly two weeks passed by before the subject of missions was even mentioned in the sessions of the Conference. But one of the young men from Princeton College had come, after weeks of prayer, with the deep conviction that God would call from that large gathering of college men a few, at least, who would consecrate themselves to the foreign mission service. At an early day he called together all the young men who were thinking seriously of spending their lives in the foreign field. Twenty-one students answered to this call, although several of them had not definitely decided the question. This little group of consecrated men began to pray that the spirit of missions might pervade the Conference, and that the Lord would separate many men unto this great work. In a few days they were to see their faith rewarded far more than they had dared to claim.

On the evening of July 16 a special mass meeting was held at which Rev. Dr. A. T. Pierson gave a thrilling address on missions. He supported, by the most convincing arguments, the proposition that "all should go and go to all." This was the key-note which set many men to thinking and praying. A week passed. On Saturday night, July 24, another meeting was held, which may occupy as significant a place in the history of the Christian church as the Williams' hay-stack scene. It is known as the "Meeting of the Ten Nations." It was addressed by sons of missionaries in China, India and Persia, and by seven young men of different nationalities—an Armenian, a Japanese, a Siamese, a German, a Dane, a Norwegian, and an American Indian. The addresses were not more than three minutes in length and consisted of appeals for more workers. Near the close each speaker repeated in the language of his country the words, "God is love." Then came a season of silent and audible prayer, which will never be forgotten by those who were present. The burning appeals of this meeting came with peculiar force to all. From this night on to the close of the Conference the missionary interest became more and more intense. One by one the men alone in the woods and rooms, with their Bibles and God, fought out the battle with self and were led by the Spirit to decide to forsake all and carry the Gospel "unto the uttermost parts of the earth." Dr. Ashmore, who had just returned from China, added fuel to the flame by his ringing appeal to Christians to look upon "missions as a war of conquest, and not as a mere wrecking expedition." In the last consecration meeting in the parlor at Marquand Hall, where the lights were extinguished and men were left on their faces wrestling with God in prayer, many a man said in answer to the call of the Lord, "Here am

I; send me." Only eight days elapsed between the "Meeting of the Ten Nations" and the closing session of the Conference. During that time the number of volunteers increased from twenty-one to exactly one hundred, who signified that they were "willing and desirous, God permitting, to become foreign missionaries." Several of the remaining one hundred and forty delegates became volunteers later—after months of study and prayer.

On the last day of the Conference the volunteers held a meeting, in which there was a unanimous expression that the missionary spirit which had manifested itself with such marvelous power at Mt. Hermon should be communicated in some degree to thousands of students throughout the country who had not been privileged to come in contact with it at its source. It was their conviction that the same reasons which had led the Mt. Hermon hundred to decide, would influence hundreds of other college men if those reasons were once presented to them in a faithful, intelligent and prayerful manner. Naturally they thought of the "Cambridge Band" and its wonderful influence among the universities of Great Britain; and decided to adopt a similar plan. Accordingly a deputation of four students was selected to represent the Mt. Hermon Conference and to visit during the year as many American colleges as possible. Of the four selected only one was able to undertake the mission, Mr. Robert P. Wilder of the class of 1886 of Princeton College. Mr. John N. Forman, also a Princeton graduate, was induced to join Mr. Wilder in this tour. One consecrated man, who has ever been glad to help on missionary enterprises, defrayed the expenses of their tour. During the year one hundred and sixty-seven institutions were visited. They touched nearly all of the leading colleges in the United States and Canada. Sometimes they would visit a college together. Again, in order to reach more institutions, they would separate. Their straightforward, forcible, Scriptural presentation came with convincing power to the minds and hearts of students wherever they went. In some colleges as many as sixty volunteers were secured. Not an institution was visited in which they did not quicken the missionary interest. By the close of the year, 2,200 young men and women had taken the volunteer pledge.

The movement has far outgrown the early expectations of its nearest friends. Even Dr. Pierson and Mr. Wilder at its inception could not claim over one thousand volunteers in the American colleges. To-day there are recorded 3,847 volunteers ready, or preparing, to preach "the unsearchable riches of Christ" in every land under the sun. A very large majority of them are still in the different college classes. Probably not more than five hundred have reached the seminaries, medical colleges and other schools for special training. Between one and two hundred have actually sailed for foreign lands. Well may Dr. McCosh ask: "Has any such offering of living young men and women been presented in our age? In our country? In any age or in any country since the day of Pentecost?" To-day, after over one hundred years of Protestant missionary effort, there are only about 6,000 ordained missionaries in the foreign field. If the church does not send out more than one-half of the present number of volunteers, it will still mark the most significant and encouraging chapter in the annals of the Christian Church since the Acts of the Apostles. But every one of the 3,847 volunteers is needed, and many more. Mr. Wishard writes back from Japan that 20,000 native and foreign ministers are needed in that fast-moving Empire before the year 1900 in order to keep it from infidelity. Dr. Chamberlain appeals for 5,000 missionaries for India during this century. "The evangelization of the world in this generation" is the watchword of the Student Volunteer Movement for Foreign Missions.

A correspondent of the Catholic Review makes an honest confession in the following: "No need is there to give the faults of the Negro; they are many and grievous; but no race among us can throw the first stone at them; and if now and then we read of dreadful atrocities committed by Negroes, they are far from the necessary outcome of their natural character, and nearly always may be laid at the door of the rumshop, the keeper of which is generally a white man, and we are sorry to add, far too often a Catholic."

THE PIONEER MISSIONARY TO THE SOUTH SEA ISLANDS.

The story of the Gospel in the South Sea Islands reads like a romance. John Williams was the pioneer messenger to so many of those jewels of the deep, and his "narrative of missionary enterprises" seems almost incredible, but every word can be verified by the testimony of successive visitors to those beautiful islands. His work of marvelous adventure, transcendent success and sudden martyrdom should be studied by every lover of missions.

John Williams was born near London in 1796, and murdered by the natives at Dillon's Bay, in Eromango Island, New Hebrides, in 1839, at the age of 43. Yet what usefulness was crowded into that short life!

Seventy-five years ago this iron-monger's apprentice stood at the corner of a street in London one Sunday evening, waiting for some wild companions. That was the man with whom the destinies of thousands of savage South Sea Islanders were mysteriously linked. His master's wife, going to worship, observed the lad, and, with difficulty, persuaded him to go to church with her, where he heard the words by which he was saved. His early love for practical and mechanical work developed in after years, into skill so many-sided as to greatly increase his influence over the simple-hearted natives that crowded around him in wondering admiration.

In 1817 he sailed, with his wife, for the Pacific, and in exactly one year cast anchor in the beautiful lagoon of Eimeo. Ten months later he was preaching to the people in their own tongue.

At the request of the chief, he chose Raratea as his first center. It was the largest of the Society group, politically supreme, and the stronghold of idolatry—the "Ephesus of that portion of Polynesia." Thence he bore the Gospel in succession to the Harvey and the Samoan clusters, and to over 300,000 souls.

He found that a ship, at his own disposal, was indispensable to the prosecution of his work; without it, "what prison wall had been so strong as that white and wailing fringe of sea?" And he set about making one with his own hands, with some help from the wondering natives. Marvelous is the account of the making of his own machinery and the building of his ship at Raratonga, where he spent a year. He had to sacrifice three out of his four goats to secure leather for a pair of bellows, and, to his dismay, when they were completed, ready, as he hoped, to blow the fire that should melt his iron, every particle of goat-skin was eaten off them in a single night by the hordes of rats.

Discouraged by no hindrances or difficulties, in less than four months the Messenger of Peace was completed, and bore him four thousands of miles to hundreds of thousands of heathens, whom he found sunk in idolatry, superstition and nameless pollution, practicing polygamy and infanticide, sluggish in intellect, and, when not at war, living in indolence. It would be difficult to find a people over whom a feeble faith, or a mere human philanthropy would have been more ready to bend in mingled pity, disgust and despair.

Believing that Christianity not only emancipates man from his vices, but most effectually awakens the torpid intellect, he looked to God for his blessing on the ministry of the Word, preached the Gospel faithfully, and used all prudent secular measures. He built himself a tasteful house, with due regard to ventilation, neatness and comfort. Outside were vine-shaded verandas, gardens and poultry-yards. Soon the natives began to rear houses after the same models; then a house of worship, holding three thousand, with an ornamented pulpit and ten chandeliers of turned wood, holding cocoanut shells for lamps. Gradually the whole aspect of the people was changed; all the idols were cast away; multitudes became Christians in heart and life. A code of written laws was formed, and trial by jury established, so that within three years Raratea became a Christian island, its sea-beach studded with white cottages, with their own schooner lying at anchor.

Williams's mechanical gifts, his rare ingenuity and fertility of resources, made him a missionary of a thousand. God had brought about a wonderful juncture in the history of missions, and had raised up the man to meet it. Even his joyful, hoping spirit, contributed largely to his success. "Like the sunny islands among which he sailed, his soul lived in a perpetual summer." He used to say, "There are two words in our language that I always admire, Trust and Try. You know not what you can or cannot effect until you try, and if you meet your trials in the exercise of trust in God, mountains of imaginary difficulties will vanish as you approach them, and facilities will arise which you never anticipated." This was the golden motto of his whole missionary life.

His short, bright, beautiful career closed in mid-splendor of his usefulness. Faith could only be silent when the bitter tidings arrived—that John Williams had received from the hand of his God the double crown of missionary and martyr.

His whole career furnishes another specimen of Gospel power. John Williams went to Aituaki island in 1821, and left there two native preachers. He found the natives very noisy and wild savages; some tattooed from head to foot, others fantastically painted or smeared with charcoal, dancing, shouting and madly gesticulating. They were cannibals, killing and eating one another. Eighteen months after, he again visited the island; and as he approached, canoes met his boat with Christian salutations: "Good is the word of the Lord! it is now well at Aituaki! The Good Word has taken root!"

On landing he found chief and people had embraced the Gospel, and had built a church 180x30 feet, in which he preached to about 2,000 people from John 3: 16. One such an example is an irrefragable proof of the Divine sanction upon foreign missions.—Missionary Review.

LEARN TO GIVE.

Learn to give, and thou shalt bind
Countless treasures to thy breast;
Learn to love, and thou shalt find
Only those who love are blest.

Learn to give, and thou shalt know
They the poorest are who hoard;
Learn to love, thy love shall flow
Deeper for the wealth outpoured.

Learn to give, and learn to love.
Only thus thy life can be Foretaste of the life above,
Tinged with immortality.

Give, for God to thee hath given;
Love, for he by love is known;
Child of God and heir of heaven,
Let thy parentage be shown.

"WHAT DID YOU SAY?"

In a beautiful New England village a boy about 10 years old lay very sick, drawing near death and very sad. He was joint-heir with an only brother to a great estate, and the inheritance was just coming into his possession; but it was not this that made him sad. He was dying, and his heart longed for a treasure more valuable than all gold.

One day I came into his room. I sat down by him, took his hand and, looking into his face, asked him what made him so sad.

"Uncle," said he, "I want to love God. Won't you tell me how to love God?"

I cannot describe the piteous tones in which he said these words, and the troubled look he gave me. I said to him:

"My child, you must trust God first, and then you will love him without trying at all."

"With a surprised look he exclaimed, 'What did you say?'"

I repeated the exact words again, and I shall never forget how his large eyes opened and his cheek flushed as he said:

"Well, I never knew that before. I always thought that I must love God first before I had any right to trust him."

"No, my dear child," I answered; "God wants us to trust him. That is what Jesus always asks us to do first of all. He knows that when we trust him we shall begin to love him. That is the way to love God—to put your trust in him first of all."

Then I spoke to him of the Lord Jesus and how God had sent him that we may believe in him, and how, during all his life, he tried to win the trust of men; how grieved he was when men would not believe in him, and how all who believed came to love him without trying at all.

He drank in all the truth, and simply saying,

"I will trust Jesus now," without an effort put his young soul into Christ's hands at that very hour; so he came into the peace of God which passeth all understanding, and lived in it calmly and sweetly to the end. None of all the loving friends who watched over him during the remaining weeks of his life doubted that the dear boy had learned to love God without trying to; and that, dying, he went to Him whom, not having seen, he had loved.—Juvenile Missionary Magazine.

TEMPERANCE.

A RELIGIOUS DRUNK IN SIBERIA.

From George Kennan's "Adventures in Eastern Siberia" in the November Century we quote the following: "We had no difficulty in getting post horses until just before dark Monday evening, when we reached the station of Turinopovorotnaya, about fifty miles from Chita, and found the whole village in a state of hilarious intoxication. Sleighs with young men and boys were careering hither and thither with wild whoops and halloos long lines of peasant girls in bright-colored calico dresses were unsteadily promenading back and forth in the streets with their arms around one another and singing khoro songs; the station-house was filled with flushed and excited people from neighboring settlements, who had evidently been participating in a celebration of some kind and were about starting for their homes; the station-master, who perhaps had not finished his celebration, was nowhere to be found; there was not a driver about the stables; and the 'starosta,' a short, fat old man, who looked like a burgher from Amsterdam, was so drunk that even with the aid of a cane he could hardly stand on his feet. In vain we tried to ascertain the reasons for this surprising epidemic of inebriation. Nobody was sober enough to explain to us what had happened. From the excited and more or less incoherent conversation of the intoxicated travelers in the station-house, I learned that even the village priest was so drunk that he had to be taken home in a sleigh by the soberest of his parishioners. If the station-master, the starosta, the village priest, the drivers, and all of the inhabitants were drunk, there was evidently no prospect of our being able to get horses. In fact we could not find anybody who seemed sober enough to know the difference between a horse and his harness. We therefore brought our baggage into the crowded station-house and sat down in an unoccupied corner to study intoxicated humanity and await further developments. Every person in the house was drunk, except ourselves and one small baby in arms. The father of this baby, a good-looking young Russian officer in full uniform, wandered unsteadily about the room, animated apparently by a hazy idea that he ought to be collecting his scattered baggage so as to be in readiness for a start; but the things that he picked up in one place he dropped feebly in another, and every minute or two he would suspend operations to exchange with his intoxicated companions fragmentary reminiscences of the day's festivity. Finally he seemed to be struck by a happy thought, and making his way in a devious course to one corner of the room he took up his saber, which was leaning against the wall, and carrying it to his intoxicated wife committed it solemnly to her care with directions to take it out to the sleigh. She was sober enough to remark, with some asperity, that as she had a young baby in her arms, and as the temperature out-of-doors was twenty degrees below zero, he had better take the saber to the sleigh himself. At this he clasped the sheathed weapon dramatically to his breast, rolled his eyes in a fine frenzy upward, and declared with emotion that the saber was his first bride, that he never would forsake it, and that, in view of all the circumstances, he would take it out to the sleigh himself. A moment later, however, he dropped it, and but for the supervision of his second bride would have forgotten it altogether.

"About eight o'clock, after watching for an hour or two such performances as these, I succeeded in capturing the starosta, and addressing to him some very energetic remarks. I sobered him sufficiently to make him understand that we must have horses at once or there would be trouble. While I stood over him with a verbal club, he entered us in the station-house book as 'Mr. Kennan and companion, citizens of Neighboring States;' and then going out on the front steps he shouted, as every sleigh-load of drunken men went past, 'Andre! Nikolai! Loshedei sei chas!' ['Horses, this moment!'] The only replies that he received were wild howls of derision. At every such outburst of hilarious contempt for authority, he would raise his shaking hands as high as his head with a feeble and comical gesture of helplessness and despair, and exclaim in maudlin tones: 'Fsei pyanni! Shto prikazhtie dyelet? Chisto nakazania!' ['They're all drunk! What do you order done? It's a regular punishment!']

"About nine o'clock the noise, tumult, and shouting in the village streets began to subside; the station-master, whose intoxication had taken the form of severe official dignity, suddenly appeared, and in a tone of stern menace wanted to know where the post drivers were and what all this disorder meant; the young Russian officer, who by this time had reached the affectionate stage of inebriation, kissed all the women in the room, crossed himself devoutly, and meandered out to the sleigh, followed by his wife with the baby and the saber; two intoxicated priests in long gowns, and high, cylindrical, brimless hats draped with black crape, alighted from a droshky in front of the door, allowed their hands to be reverently kissed by the inebriated young officer and his friends, and then rode off in a post sleigh driven by a peasant who could hardly keep his seat on the box; and finally, when we had almost abandoned the hope of ever getting away, a really sober man in a ragged sheep-skin coat emerged from the darkness and reported in a business-like manner to the station-master that the horses were ready for us. The drunken and irate official, who seemed desirous of vindicating his dignity and authority in some way, overwhelmed the unfortunate driver with abuse, and ended by fining him fifty kopecks—whether for being sober or for having the horses ready, I do not know. We piled our baggage into the sleigh, climbed in upon it, and rode out of the intoxicated settlement with thankful hearts. As the last faint sounds of revelry died away in the distance behind us, I said to the driver: 'What's the matter with everybody in this village? The whole population seems to be drunk.'

"'They've been consecrating a new church,' said the driver, soberly.

"'Consecrating a church!' I exclaimed in amazement. 'Is that the way you consecrate churches?'"

"'I don't know,' he replied. 'Sometimes they drink. After the services they had a gulainia [a sort of holiday promenade with music and spirituous refreshments,] and some of them crooked their elbows too often.'

"'Some of them!' I repeated. 'All of them, you mean. You're the only sober man I've seen in the place. How does it happen that you're not drunk?'"

"'I'm not a Christian,' he replied, with quiet simplicity. 'I'm a Buriat.'

"As a Christian—if not a member of the Holy Orthodox Church—I was silenced by the unconscious irony of the reply. The only sober man in a village of three or four hundred inhabitants proved to be a pagan, and he had just been fined fifty kopecks by a Christian official for not getting drunk with other good citizens and thus showing his respect for the newly consecrated edifice and his appreciation of the benign influence of the Holy Orthodox Faith!"

It is stated that 70,000,000 liter of whisky are consumed annually in Belgium, and that the amount is constantly on the increase. Within the last fifteen years the population has increased 14 per cent, but the use of alcohol 37, the number of the insane 45; of crime the increase was 74, and of suicides 80 per cent. With a population of about 6,000,000 Belgium annually spends 135,000,000 francs for spirituous liquors, and but 15,000,000 for public instruction. There are 5,500 schools, but 136,000 saloons.—Dr. Stucken-burg, in Hom. Review.

Cases of drunkenness among children in Berlin are becoming very common, according to a letter in the London Standard. The new and startling vice is supposed to be fostered by the pernicious habit of parents of giving alcohol to extremely young children, and allowing them to drink wine and beer like adult persons.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. Solomon's Petition. Vs. 5-9. It was a critical period in the history of the Jewish nation when Solomon came to the throne. The wars and conquests of David had opened the way to enter into commercial relations with other countries. The people were learning the use of foreign luxuries; the whole national life was enlarging; new questions of polity, home and foreign, would come up. Solomon saw this. He knew that more would be required of a monarch under these new and changed conditions, and his whole soul seems to have been burdened with the responsibility thus early laid upon him. Yet every one who studies this lesson has been given a kingdom to govern, i. e., himself. Like Solomon he needs the highest wisdom before he can bear successful rule even over his own spirit. To trace the parallel farther, the greater his advantages, the more his spiritual realm has been enlarged by superior facilities for knowledge; the more complex the task, and the more his need to pray Solomon's prayer. He will be called upon to solve moral questions unknown to those of a previous age, and pass unscathed through temptations which they in their simpler methods of living could never encounter. Solomon inaugurated his reign by a most solemn act of worship at Gibeon, "the great high place." David had brought the ark to Jerusalem and built a temporary shelter for it pending the erection of the temple, but the ancient tabernacle of Moses and the brazen altar still remained at Gibeon. Solomon does not seem to have had so clear an understanding of the spiritual nature of true worship as David. His tendency was always to an extreme ritualism, an outward pomp and magnificence which in the latter part of his reign was only a gorgeous covering for dead formality and inward corruption. High places had been condemned by the law of Moses because associated with idolatry, but the law seems to have been generally disregarded. The woeful effect of this neglect became apparent in succeeding reigns. The one thing which even the most pious monarchs failed to do was to tear down these high places, either because they feared the consequences of so radical an action, or from lingering superstition; and thus the people were being continually seduced into idolatry. Things the most innocent in themselves may become evil through association with villainess, and one evil left untouched may render abortive the best directed efforts of reformers. The lodge is the modern "high place," heathen in origin and association, but like those idolatrous shrines it is popular. The multitude see no harm in it, do not even know that the whole system is forbidden by the Word of God, and so even good men who are brave to attack other evils will shrink before this. Solomon sacrificed on the high places; so did Asa and Joash, but this did not make it right. It does not matter how many ministers or great men favor high license or belong to the lodge. They cannot change the law of God, though they may make it of none effect by their words and example.

2. The Petition Answered. Vs. 10-15. Our prayers please the Lord when we put self last and his kingdom first. This was what Solomon did. He sought before everything else to fulfill the object for which he was created; and none of us can do more, or ought to do less, than this. Solomon proved the truth of the promise, "Seek first the kingdom of God and all these things shall be added unto you." The greatest blessing must include the less. God loves to show his royal bounty by giving more than we ask, but he never grants indulgences to sin. The blessing can be forfeited. The prayer granted yesterday will not avail to-day. We must "walk in his ways," continually increasing our stock of faith and knowledge, or lose what we have.

HELPFUL THOUGHTS FROM PELOUBET'S QUARTERLY.

1. SOLOMON'S FOUR REASONS.—The same four reasons still exist why every child should make Solomon's wise choice. God has been infinitely merciful to him in the past. He is "heir of all the ages." God has given him a place and a work in the world. He needs a guide and helper; and the responsibility is great; the issues of eternal moment; life or death depends on the choice.

2. THE WISDOM OF THIS CHOICE.—1. Solomon asked nothing merely for himself, but everything for the best doing of the work put into his hands. This was noble and divine. 2. He sought real worth, not outward show. 3. The higher good brought with it all the lesser blessings, and doubled their value. 4. His choice was immortal. The things he chose could not be taken away except by his own will. 3. He that seeks for himself alone, becomes a malarial, reptile-haunted marsh; he that receives in order to give, is a river of pure, living water, bringing fertility and blessing wherever it flows.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—The annual meeting of the Sabbath Association of Iowa meets in the Central Presbyterian church of Des Moines, Tuesday and Wednesday of this week. Among the speakers are Governor Larrabee, Pres. C. A. Blanchard, V. A. Lawson of the Chicago News, and Revs. M. A. Gault, W. L. Ferris, T. P. Robb and C. R. Hunt.

—The Covenanters of Philadelphia have begun a small but handsome fortnightly paper, "The Ensign," for a special medium of intercommunication between the Reformed Presbyterian churches, and as an organ of their faith.

—Mr. Moody's meetings at Rockford, Ill., have brought out some old sinners. In his discourse Monday Mr. Moody said that he had just received a draft for $2,500 in a letter from a man who had been a Canadian smuggler, and who had been converted under his ministrations. Mr. Moody had told him that if his salvation were to be made sure he must make complete restitution to the government which he had defrauded. The man asked Mr. Moody to send this draft to the proper authorities of the government, and said it was the total amount out of which he had beaten the country.

—A Congress of Sabbath Rest was held during the Paris Exposition. More than two hundred members were present from France and foreign countries. M. Leon Say, frequently a member of the French ministry, and who may become Premier again, presided. President Harrison was elected honorary president. Letters were read from a number of distinguished persons in Europe and America. The position was taken by practical men that all the industries and trades should enjoy a day of rest, and railway managers insisted on a minimum of trains and rest for employees. A permanent bureau was organized to make needful preparations for similar congresses hereafter.

—The Congregational National Council, lately meeting in Worcester, adopted the following resolutions on Romanism. Had they spoken with as great emphasis on the saloon question, and especially against the lodge, their meeting would have been an epoch in church history:

WHEREAS, The authorities of the Roman Catholic church are making every effort to remove the children of Roman Catholic parents from our public schools and locate them in parochial schools, are, in fact, establishing everywhere large parochial schools which threaten to undermine our public school system, and which put in peril our American institutions, and are demanding what they are pleased to call their share of the public funds for the support of parochial schools; therefore,

"Resolved, That we will resist firmly and constantly every such effort on the part of the Roman Catholic hierarchy to overturn one of our fundamental institutions.

"Resolved, That, regarding the common public schools as the institution best calculated to unify and make homogeneous the various nationalities that make up our diverse population, we look upon the establishment of parochial schools, where the children of foreigners are instructed by alien teachers and priests, as a just cause of apprehension and a menace to our institutions.

"Resolved, That we will resist to the last the effort to appropriate the public school funds to sectarian purposes, and insist upon free common school education for the whole American people."

—D. L. Moody, the evangelist, has been engaged to hold a series of meetings in Dayton, Ohio, beginning Wednesday evening, November 13th, and continuing one week. The churches all unite in the effort, which we hope will reach and penetrate the duplicity that lingers about the U. B. Publishing House.

—The organ of the colored people, the Africo-American Presbyterian, praises the suavity and attractiveness of the Romish missionaries among the colored people, and contrasts it with the lukewarmness of the Protestants. It also informs us that the delicate attentions of the priests are likely to win favor; and that they will naturally entice many of the colored people away, unless the Protestants are more active.

—It is asserted by Rev. A. J. Gordon of Boston that ten of the largest and strongest churches of that city last year spent $19,000 for church music, and gave $6,000 for foreign missions. On this state of things Dr. Gordon makes the comment that "the church has come to be valued by many simply for the amount of enjoyment it can afford to its members, not for the amount of sacrifice and service it can move them to put forth." It would seem to be the first duty of a faithful ambassador of Christ placed in charge of such a church to preach so that these spiritual "sun fish" would either get converted or get mad and get out. Their influence upon the church is damaging in the extreme.—New York Witness.

—According to a statement of one of the trustees of the Brooklyn Tabernacle it has received from the insurance companies $129,450, which, with the value of the land on which the Tabernacle stood, $40,000, makes a total of $169,450 in assets. To be taken from this is $95,000, the cost of the new site; $61,000 mortgage on the old building, and $3,000, a floating debt. All this makes $159,000, leaving a balance to the church's credit of $10,000. About $6,000 has so far been subscribed in answer to Dr. Talmage's appeal. A congregation with only $16,000 to begin buildings which will cost not less than a quarter of a million must have a large measure of faith. If, after nearly twenty years since the second Tabernacle was built, such is the financial state of a church with over 4,000 members, it presents a record of meanness unparalleled. Dr. Talmage has a large salary; double that of any minister of his denomination in Brooklyn, and men of ordinary sensitiveness must wonder how he can appeal to the Christian public for $100,000 to help a church with such a large membership to erect the new house. Perhaps, however, the Congregationalist is right; for noting the fact before mentioned in these columns, that the Tabernacle people could last year only give $151 to home missions and $138 to foreign missions, it says that it "shows that they are suitable objects for missionary aid."—Christian Inquirer.

THE EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE.

Among the subjects to be discussed at the Boston Conference, the first week in December, is, "The Needs of the Rural Districts."

The public impressions of the country are gained from the car window. There is little knowledge of the real condition of many communities back among the hills, from five to twenty miles away from any railroad. In many instances these old centers of population have been depleted by removals to the new towns which sprung up along the lines of railway. The opening of the West has made farming less profitable in the older States, so that the more enterprising have forsaken the farm for the city or the West. The forsaken farm in many instances is bought by a foreigner, whose estimate of church and school is very different from that of the old American stock. With a waning population, the church and the school run down, which has a further tendency to drive away the better class who place a high estimate on religion and education.

There accordingly exists in many isolated communities a measure of religious destitution which is not commonly suspected.

Last summer the Alliance had made a careful canvass of forty townships in different parts of New York, which brought to light facts that fully justified the above statements.

Taking up the reports of these towns at random, we find one with a population of 620, and an average church attendance of twenty-five in each of two churches.

The next shows a population of 1,267, and an average attendance of sixty in one church and forty in another, i. e., the total church attendance in the township is less than one in twelve of the population.

The next report of a town in another county shows a population of about 2,200, and an average church attendance of 357.

In another township, for a Protestant population of 2,783, there are eight churches, whose total average attendance is 565.

The greater portion of the population in the townships investigated never attend church. The only possible way to reach them with Christian influence is to carry the Gospel to the home.

If one in ten of the members of Evangelical Protestant churches in the United States would visit ten families a month, we could carry the Gospel into every home in the land twelve times a year.

This co-operative family-to-family visitation is the work which the Evangelical Alliance is helping the churches to inaugurate.

What is known as the "Newberry bill" went into effect yesterday in the State of Missouri. In substance it prohibits dice, cards, pool-tables, billiard-tables and bowling alleys, pianos, banjos, and other musical instruments in saloons where liquor is sold. Chairs and tables are also forbidden, and singing in a saloon is made a misdemeanor, as are also all games of chance for drinks or money. Sparring and wrestling are also prohibited, and upon conviction of any violation the license may be revoked and the saloon closed.

The avowed object of the law is to reduce the attractions which saloons now offer, especially to youth.

A protest from the Personal-Rights League, or "Brewers' Body Guard" is now in order, and the brewers' organ, sometimes known as the Tribune, may be looked for to vigorously assail this effort to deprive "the only place where a poor man may go assured of a welcome"—to-wit, the saloon—of its charms and seductions.—Daily News.

IN BRIEF.

Cottonwood Falls, Kan., is out of debt, has money in the treasury, and will levy no tax the ensuing year for municipal purposes. It has a woman City Council, though this fact, which is mentioned incidentally, as a matter of course cuts no figure in the case. Certainly not.

The citizens of Taylorsville, Neb., recently tarred and feathered old Jason Mitchell, and then rode him on a rail. Instead of resenting this treatment, Jason seemed to enjoyed it. This puzzled the boys very much until the old man sued twenty-five of them for $100 damages each, and got it. Then they began to see that Jason really had the most fun.

Probably the smallest republic in the world is the one which declared its independence on August 9, at Franceville, one of the islands of the New Hebrides, and elected M. Chevilliard its President. The inhabitants consist of forty Europeans (including a solitary Englishman, a missionary), and five hundred black workmen employed by a French company. The new flag of the Republic having been duly hoisted, the French gunboat Saone landed a detachment and saluted the flag.

At Camden, N. J., Henry Brown and Miss Mary Morgan stood before the Rev. Mr. Clayton to become man and wife. A portion of the service had been already read when the bride uttered a loud scream. She was seen to raise her hand and point towards a corner of the church. The next moment she fell to the floor in a swoon. Her mother, who died four months ago, was opposed to the match. Miss Morgan says that just when she was about to pronounce the binding words she raised her eyes and saw her mother's ghost pointing the finger of warning.

Dr. Joule, the illustrious scientist, whose death was recently recorded, was an occasional visitor to his old friend, Sir William Thompson, at Glasgow University, and the story is told that on one occasion, when Sir William was bringing out his sounding machine, in which steel wires take the place of the ordinary lead line, he showed Dr. Joule a bundle of pianoforte wire, telling him at the same time that it was "sounding." "What note?" inquired Dr. Joule, not quite understanding. "The deep C," promptly replied Sir William.

Scientist Joule, who recently died in England, was almost unknown to the public, though competent men of culture rank him with Newton and Darwin. He discovered the law of conservation of energy and the mechanical equivalent of heat. His scientific achievements should have made him wealthy and famous, but he lived in seclusion near Manchester on a pension of $1,000 a year, granted him by Lord Beaconsfield. He was seventy years of age when he died. Now that he is dead, England, with characteristic enthusiasm, recognizes him as a genius, and the British press eulogizes him warmly.

According to a computation just issued by the eminent statistician, Dr. Ernst Engel, the cost in human life of the different wars that have taken place during the last thirty-four years is 2,253,000 souls. The Crimean War cost 750,000 men, the Italian War (1859) 45,000, the Danish War (1864) 3,000, the American Civil War—the Northern States 280,000, the Southern States 520,000; the Austro-Prussian War 45,000, the Franco-German War—France 155,000, Germany 60,000; the Turco-Russian War 250,000, the South African Wars 30,000, the Afghan War 25,000, the Mexican and Cochín-Chinese expeditions 65,000, and the Bulgaro-Servian Insurrection 25,000. This list does not include mortality from sickness.

The following extract from a letter by a well-known resident in the north of China, on the devastations of the Yellow river, appears in the North China Daily News: "It is an awful scourge! Bands of ruthless robbers, hundreds of wild and ravenous beasts are nothing to this devouring river—devouring human habitations, men's lives, fields of waving grain, and gardens of luscious fruit and varied food in its horrid course, laying waste in a day or two (as in the present instance) over 100 towns and villages, involving 300,000 people, and submerging from 2,000 to 2,300 square miles of fertile fields, not counting the ravages on the northern side, or waste land. And the worst of it is that while this will relieve it for the present, yet it may break out any day westward at 100 different places. For, as all know, owing to the makeshift policy of 100 generations, damming it up for the time being, there are miles and miles of its bed in many different districts from ten to twenty feet above the level of the surrounding country. I feel sure this inundation will excite the indignation of the whole civilized world, more especially since it is obvious that the officials' persistency in closing the breach at Chengchow without clearing the river exit to the sea seems as if they were absolutely careless whether it destroyed another part of their country or not. I hope this indignation will take voice, and that all who have any relations with the Chinese, officially or otherwise, will make their minds known."

CATARRH.

Catarrhal Deafness--Hay Fever.

A NEW HOME TREATMENT.

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membrane of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact, and the result of this discovery is that a simple remedy has been formulated whereby catarrh, catarrhal deafness, and hay fever are permanently cured in from one to three simple applications made at home by the patient once in two weeks. N.B.—This treatment is not a snuff or an ointment; both have been discarded by reputable physicians as injurious. A pamphlet explaining this new treatment is sent Free by A. H. Dixon & Son, 337 and 339 West King Street, Toronto, Canada.—Scientific American.

Sufferers from Catarrhal troubles should carefully read the above.

HOME AND HEALTH.

CONSTRUCTION OF HOUSES.

The kind of house we live in has very much to do with health. Indeed, so much of our time is necessarily spent within doors that a healthy house and a healthy home are indispensable. The first great design of a house is to modify the conditions of the weather. Protection from rain and from heavy winds is the first idea. Next to this is protection from severe cold or intense heat.

Our first consideration as to the house is to prevent dampness. We do not mean by this that a house can be prevented from responding in some degree to outside conditions of moisture, but it must be so constructed as not to favor continued dampness. It must have capacity for quick drying, and to prevent mold, mildew and any of the conditions of continuous dampness. One of the essential prerequisites is a dry ground so that the house may not continually be drawing moisture from it. We know of a house well built, but resting on a water-soaked foundation, in which by capillary attraction the walls in the second story often showed dampness. We have seen an undrained cellar, even on Murray Hill, causing a damp basement and a moldy under-cellar. Where there cannot be complete drying of the foundation, not only should the cellar wall be laid in cement, but it should have an inner cement lining, and with a cement cellar floor. A damp course should be laid above ground so as to intercept wetness and prevent it from passing to the upper walls.

It is the porosity of bricks that gives to them their special advantage as building material. The air permeates them, and so has a chance to dry out the moisture; yet even these are best if protected from long storms. The old mode of a brick filling in and a board inclosure was very favorable to dryness. When stone is used it should be tested as to its porosity, since very dense stone always makes a damp house. An owner of an iron furnace once conceived the idea of building for his workmen houses made of the slag from the furnace; but the houses proved too damp to live in.

All houses should in some form have an air space between the walls and the inclosure. Hence it is never right to plaster directly on the brick. Where there is space this serves as a kind of general drying-room surrounding the house. As the wall is retentive of heat, this also aids the process. Where houses are built of wood, with air space and hard walls, the plan of sheathing now in use or the employment of an impermeable paper adds much to tightness. Yet the need of porosity is not to be lost sight of. It is recognized that a house may have its walls papered or painted so thickly as to make it damper.—Independent.

A SUBSTITUTE FOR MATCHES.

Countless accidents, as every one knows, arise from the use of matches. To obtain light without employing them, and so wipe out the danger of setting things on fire, a contrivance is now used by the watchmen of Paris in all magazines where explosive or inflammable materials are kept. Anyone may easily make trial of it. Take an oblong vial of the whitest and clearest glass, put into it a piece of phosphorus about the size of a pea. Pour some olive oil heated to the boiling point upon the phosphorus; fill the vial about one-third full, and then cork it tightly. To use this novel light, remove the cork, allow the air to enter the vial, and then recork it. The empty space in the vial will become luminous, and the light obtained will be equal to that of a lamp. When the light grows dim, its power can be increased by talking out the cork and allowing a fresh supply of air to enter the vial. In winter it is sometimes necessary to heat the vial between the hands, in order to increase the fluidity of the oil. The apparatus thus made may be used for six months.

If that lady at the lecture the other night only knew how nicely Hall's Hair Renewer would remove dandruff and improve the hair, she would buy a bottle.

WHY COUGH,

WHEN a few doses of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral will relieve you? Try it. Keep it in the house. You are liable to have a cough at any time, and no other remedy is so effective as this world-renowned preparation. No household, with young children, should be without it. Scores of lives are saved every year by its timely use.

Amanda B. Jenner, Northampton, Mass., writes: "Common gratitude impels me to acknowledge the great benefits I have derived for my children from the use of Ayer's most excellent Cherry Pectoral. I had lost two dear children from croup and consumption, and had the greatest fear of losing my only remaining daughter and son, as they were delicate. Happily, I find that by giving them Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, on the first symptoms of throat or lung trouble, they are relieved from danger, and are becoming robust, healthy children."

"In the winter of 1885 I took a bad cold which, in spite of every known remedy, grew worse, so that the family physician considered me incurable, supposing me to be in consumption. As a last resort I tried Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and, in a short time, the cure was complete. Since then I have never been without this medicine. I am fifty years of age, weigh over 180 pounds, and attribute my good health to the use of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral."—G. W. Youker, Salem, N. J.

"Last winter I contracted a severe cold, which by repeated exposure, became quite obstinate. I was much troubled with hoarseness and bronchial irritation. After trying various medicines, without relief, I at last purchased a bottle of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. On taking this medicine, my cough ceased almost immediately, and I have been well ever since."—Rev. Thos. B. Russell, Secretary Holston Conference and P. E. of the Greenville District, M. E. C., Jonesboro, Tenn.

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canadian jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemason gun jail, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his name to the letter, but ATTACHED HIS AFFIDAVIT TO IT.

In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies."

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the latest historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Association.] Single copy, 5 cents.

PAGAN COUNTERFEITS

IN THE

Christian Church.

A pamphlet of 52 pages, by Chas. A. S. Temple.

The following from Rev. H. H. Hinman shows his estimate of its contents:

"I have read with great interest 'Pagan Counterfeits in the Christian Church' by Chas. A. S. Temple. I regard the subject discussed as important, and its presentation both able and timely. There is a most manifest drift in all our Protestant denominations towards unauthorized ritualism and the substitution of human inventions in place of the simplicity of the Gospel, as given by Christ and his apostles. In calling attention to this tidal wave of formalism, the author has conferred a lasting benefit on the church of Protestantism."

FARM NOTES.

HOW TO TELL GOOD OATS.

Good oats are clean, hard, dry, sweet, heavy, plump, full of flour, and rattle like shot. They have a clean and almost metallic luster. Each oat in a well-grown sample is nearly of the same size. There are but few small or imperfect grains. The hard pressure of the nail on an oat should leave little or no mark. The kernel when pressed between the teeth should clip rather than tear. The skin should be thin. The size of the kernel will be less in proportion than the skin is thick. The color of the oat is not very material, but white oats are generally thinner in the skin than black. Again, black oats will grow on inferior soils. Short, plump oats are preferable to large, long grains. Bearded oats must have an excess of husk. Oats are not necessarily bad because they are thin-skinned or bearded; but they must contain a less amount of flour per bushel than thin-skinned oats without beards.

Deeply-rooted crops, as wheat, red clover and mangel, are those best fitted to resist droughts; while shallow-rooted crops, as grass and turnips, are those that suffer most from it.

VACANT FARMS IN VERMONT.

A rather sad story is told by Mr. Valentine, a Vermont official, about the desertion of that beautiful State by its former inhabitants. Standing with other officials on a hill in Bennington county, and looking over the valley of the West River, a tributary of the Connecticut, they counted fifteen contiguous farms, of perhaps a hundred acres each, all fenced, and with dwelling-houses and barns in at least tolerable condition, without a single inhabitant. Beyond, toward the Connecticut, but hidden by the maple groves in the valley, were, as they knew, fifteen more, also deserted, yet all well situated and still showing signs of their former fertility. Statistics show that a similar condition prevails all over the State. In Windham county alone are more than forty thousand acres of land, once cultivated, but now deserted, and in the whole State the number of abandoned farms, complete with houses, fences, barns, and outbuildings, must be several thousand. Yet Vermont is one of the pleasantest, healthiest, most fertile, and most civilized States in the Union. In its river valleys is no malaria, while its hills are covered to the summit with vegetation. The reckless agriculture which has made portions of the South nearly barren has never been favored in Vermont, where a century or more of stock-farming has rather enriched than exhausted the soil; yet the people who once found happy homes there have crowded into the towns, or have left the State altogether. In thirty years, from 1850 to 1880, the increase of population in Vermont was five per cent, while the population of the whole country more than doubled, and that of the adjoining State of Massachusetts increased by nearly eighty per cent. Not pretending to any ideas on political economy, we will not try to account for this strange condition of things, but it is certainly curious that a region so favored in climate and position should be retrograding so rapidly.—Amer. Architect.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

The President formally opened the Southern Exposition at Montgomery, Ala., Tuesday, by touching the key of a telegraph wire at the White House connected with the Exposition Building, and thereby starting the machinery in machinery hall. The Cabinet was in session when the President was informed that the connection had been made, and at his invitation the entire Cabinet repaired to the telegraph office and witnessed the act.

CHICAGO.

Friday afternoon the clothes worn by Dr. Cronin on the night of his murder, his box of splints, and sachel of surgical instruments, and other personal and professional belongings were discovered at the bottom of a man-hole at Evanston and Buena avenues, some distance from the spot where the body was found.

A $50,000 libel suit was begun in the Circuit Court Thursday by Dr. Mary Weeks Burnett against Miss Frances E. Willard, President of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. Mrs. Caroline B. Buell, Vice President, and Miss Esther Pugh, Secretary of the organization, were made co-defendants. On its face the suit seems to be of a purely personal nature, but Mrs. Dr. Burnett says the suit is based on what she has reason to believe is a conspiracy to destroy her professionally, and to give her opponents supreme control of the National Woman's Temperance Hospital at 3411 Cottage Grove avenue.

For some time past the anarchistic leaders or Chicago have been agitating another revolution such as was witnessed in Paris at the beginning of the reign of terror. Several secret meetings have been held, and a large quantity of rabid and incendiary circulars have been prepared and printed. These were sent around among the homes of the laboring classes late at night and freely distributed. An order has been issued by the Chief of Police instructing the force to look out for and arrest any persons found distributing the pamphlets or circulars. As yet no arrests have been made.

The American Fat Stock Show and Live Stock Show, given under the auspices of the Illinois State Board of Agriculture, will begin its twelfth annual exhibit at the Exposition Building, Nov. 12, and will close on Nov. 21.

The Horse Show closed Saturday a very successful exhibition.

STORMS.

Fierce snow, hail and sleet storms were last week reported in Texas and Kansas, seriously impeding railway travel. In Colorado trains were blockaded by drifts; and from New Mexico comes news of the freezing to death of many Mexican herders.

A snowstorm was raging for eight days in the Clayton (New Mexico) region, and thousands of cattle have been lost. It is also estimated that 20,000 sheep perished. Seven persons were frozen to death, and two passenger trains were stalled for a week, the passengers on which subsisted by killing cattle, cutting off the quarters, and roasting them in the cars. Hay is $100 a ton, and provisions of all kinds are scarce.

A dispatch from Clayton, N. M., Nov. 8, says: The storm has abated, and for the first time in nine days the sun is shining. While no authentic reports have been received concerning the loss of life, reports come from inland that several Mexican herders have been frozen on the Leon, a small creek twenty miles south of the town. Telegrams from Grande give another case of freezing, that of Joe Martin, a cowboy, who was employed with others in holding a herd of cattle near that point. His horse gave out with him, leaving him on the prairie, eight miles from the nearest house. This he endeavored to reach, but was overpowered and frozen after walking only a short distance.

The depth of snow can not be correctly estimated. A snow-plow pushed by four engines was stopped by drifts two miles north of town to-day, and only after eight hours of shovelling was released. The train men report much difficulty experienced in different cuts, which in some places are completely filled with dead cattle and sheep. The loss in both is tremendous. Old cow men say that with the present depth of snow the stock will be unable to live for any length of time, and unless the cold weather moderates and the crust which has formed on the snow loosens the mortality among cattle will be tremendous. Among the stockmen who lose heavily are Carlisle Bros. of Durango, Col., who turned loose 150 head, together with 43 horses, and three Pecos River companies with 2,300 steers. Many of the horses were found frozen. Several cowboys who drifted off with the herds have not been heard from, and rescuing parties looking for them will return to-morrow. Fuller particulars, which must be of a sad nature, will be received here in a few days.

COUNTRY.

Six States elected governors and other officers last Tuesday. They are Ohio, Iowa, Virginia, New Jersey, Massachusetts and Mississippi. In all of them, save Mississippi, both political parties have made active canvasses, some of which have been notable for their rancor.

In Ohio and Iowa Democratic governors were elected, Republicans generally succeeding with the rest of the tickets. The Republicans elected their candidates in all the other States, with the exception of Virginia, New York, and New Jersey, Mahone being defeated in the Old Dominion by about 20,000. Abbott won in New Jersey by about 5,000 or 6,000; and in New York the head of the Democratic ticket is credited with 10,000 plurality. The Australian system of voting is declared to have been "emphatically a success" in Massachusetts.

The Supreme Court of Indiana rendered a decision on Wednesday to the effect that the law prohibiting the piping of natural gas out of the State was unconstitutional, holding that the gas may become a commercial commodity, and that the Legislature can not enact any law regulating commerce between the States, for the reason that the Federal Constitution forbids local legislation on that subject.

Miss Carrie E. Barnes, school teacher at Providence, R. I., was awarded $20,000 Thursday in her suit against the New York and New England Railroad Company for injuries received in 1886.

At a meeting of the Platt county, Ill. agricultural board, S. W. Allerton of Chicago offered $150 for the best thirty acres of corn raised in Platt county in 1889.

News from Rome is to the effect that affairs in Bishop Gilmour's diocese of Cleveland are to be investigated by Cardinal Gibbons, Archbishop Riordan, and Archbishop Elder.

Fire at Petersburg, Va., early Thursday morning destroyed property valued at $750,000. Lieut. Crichton of the police force was in one of the burning buildings when the walls fell. He was burned to death.

This number of the CYNOSURE is sent to several thousands whom we hope may prove friendly to its principles, but are not subscribers. Their special attention is called to the argument on the editorial page and the notice of the meeting in Tremont Temple, Boston, Dec. 11 and 12.

The Roman Catholics have been holding a "Truth Congress" in Manchester, England. It is enough to say that Catholic histories, school books, and the instructions of the Jesuits were not considered by the convention.

The Catholic Review in providing a centenary number in honor of the three celebrations at Washington and Baltimore, announces that "Margaret F. Sullivan of Chicago will describe what Catholics hope for the University." This is the wife of Alexander Sullivan, the suspected head of the Cronin plot, who was a Lady Macbeth to her husband when he shot the teacher Hanford. Another writer announced by the Review is William J. Florence, the actor, who introduced the outlandish paganism of the "Mystic Shrine" into this country as a bond of union between the Knight Templar Masons and the "Sublime Princes of the Royal Secret."

Another turn was taken in the slow grind of the Cronin case last Saturday when the State finished the examination of its witnesses, and the defense began the presentation of its case. Conjecture is busy as to the method to be pursued by the lawyers of the accused men. They will probably attack the character of witnesses who have testified and prove alibis in every case possible. The eyes of the country and of the world are upon this case almost as intently as upon that of the anarchists two years ago. The issues involved concern communities and nations. The State is believed to have made out a very strong case, especially against Coughlin, Burke and O'Sullivan. The Clan-na-Gael is moving heaven and earth to save these men, the first especially. But all along the wrath of man has been made to magnify God's providence in this case, and it will to the end.

The discussion of Vice President Morton's relation to the saloon agitated and irritated the great W. C. T. U. meeting in this city. Miss Willard referred to it in her annual address. Mrs. Judith Ellen Foster resented the charge as an insult. Both sides had telegrams from Washington confirming each opposing view. Mrs. Foster, to the reporters of the New York Tribune, excused Mr. Morton as being under the necessity of conforming to Washington customs. In public she denounced all who made the allegation. Mr. Moulton, of whom the Cynosure readers have learned enough to rely upon him, has carefully examined into all the facts of the case, and the records of Washington are behind his statement. Mr. Morton's business manager, Keenan, has taken out a license to sell liquors in the Vice President's new family hotel, the "Shoreham." It is pretended that this is for the supply of guests exclusively. Tables take the place of a bar, but sales are made to outsiders just the same, and the hotel has a printed wine list. This is bad enough, and the devil is using it to create a great hubbub to hide as much as possible the more fearful fact, that the chief magistrate of this free country dared not refuse when called upon to grace the grand celebration of the Romish hierarchy.

The great Roman Catholic convention in Baltimore, whose decision in favor of the lodge is given elsewhere, is one of a group of meetings regarded as the most eventful in the history of that sect in America. A celebration of the centennial of the appointment of the first Romish bishop in this country, the first congress of Catholic "laymen," and the dedication of the new Catholic university in Washington, form this series of important meetings. The utmost magnificence of which the papacy is capable attended these events. The papal colors were everywhere displayed, the crowds were immense beyond the capacity of the churches, white-surpliced priests in great processions and the glittering array of the two cardinals of Rome in America—Gibbons and Taschereau—with nearly every bishop and archbishop in the country, with representatives from Mexico, Canada, England and Rome,—all aided the pompous and gorgeous array. At the doorway of Cardinal Gibbon's house two long lines of guards with drawn swords and gleaming helmets gave the impression of physical power to the ecclesiastical display. With such pomp it was fitting to begin the declared union of Romanism with the lodge. And the attendance of the President and Vice President of the United States at the Washington banquet, which terminated this great movement of Romanism, closed an event full of dire forboding to every patriot and Christian in America.

Governor Thomas of Utah says in his annual report that it will be many years before the non-Mormons will be in a majority, so as to make the Territory safe with the privileges of Statehood. Gentiles in Salt Lake and Ogden own more than half the real estate, but outside these cities they are found only in mining camps and smaller railroad towns. The report does not encourage immediate expectation of the supremacy of American laws and citizenship, and regards the Mormons as hopelessly wedded to their infamous system. Of them the Governor says: "They have accepted the doctrine of polygamy, and will probably adhere to it as long as they live, and it is but a very poor tribute to their honesty to say they have abandoned it. A firm religious enthusiasm is their leading characteristic, and as a rule they are law-abiding, especially as far as the law is confirmed by the priesthood, but they accept the doctrine of plural marriage in all sincerity and as a radical and necessary part of their religion. It may be as well to understand that the strength of Mormonism, both in the masses and officials, is in its sincerity and not in its imposture. Any temporizing policy which leaves the church in a position to control the political policy of the Territory is only delaying the final settlement, and future legislation should be aimed at the political power of the church, which has been the main pillar of its strength in Utah."

THE TRIPLE DEFENDED LODGE.

BY REV. ALEXANDER THOMSON.

[Paper before the Elgin Convention.]

One of the most affecting stories of history to me is the siege of Harlem. Against this city marched that terrible army trained to deeds of blood and cruelty by the merciless Alva. Against Harlem came this army, with the sword in one hand and in the other its two terms of peace: first, submission to Philip of Spain, the bloodiest tyrant of a bloody time; second, submission to the "holy mother church," so full of mercy and kindness that she was soon to sing a triumphant hymn of thanksgiving for the crowning mercy of St. Bartholomew's night. The stout burghers of Harlem said, No; we will stand the uttermost extremity of siege before we submit to either the one tyrant or the other. And the long agony began. Spaniards in their trenches outside the city; brave men and starvation on the inside. Brave men they were and could resist the Spaniards, but they could not resist starvation. At last they hung the black flag from their ramparts, as a signal to their friends of their despair, and opened their gates to the merciless foe. Why was it necessary for Harlem to surrender? Braver men never manned the walls of any besieged city. Was it because there was not bread and meat enough in Holland to feed them, or no liberal hand to bestow the bounty? No, there was no lack of food in Holland, or liberal hearts that bled for the doomed garrison. It was because between the bread and meat on the outside and the starving men on the inside there stood that terrible army which had seldom seen defeat.

This is my object lesson to illustrate the great obstacles in the way of our work. It is not because men are not willing in many cases to see the light, it is not because there is no light for them, or no Zion-born messengers to carry it, but because between the people and the light they need, the light for which many of them are dying; between them and the truth there lies a triple line of battle through which it has so far been found impossible to break.

There are to-day avenues by which to reach the populace with the truth. These are the press, the pulpit and the lecture platform. If these avenues are closed to any form of the truth, there is no way to reach the mind with it but by the slow method of personal contact. Are these three methods all closed to the truth on the lodge question? Do they form to-day three impervious lines of battle between God's people who have the truth on this lodge question and are willing and anxious to impart, and those who are dying because it has not reached them?

Let us see. Let any man who is a good writer, whose articles on almost any other subject would be gladly received, compose a strong, true, kind article on the Masonic lodge, giving only the Master Masons and the Royal Arch oaths, together with such comments as these might suggest to any fair-minded man. Let him send that article to any of the great secular dailies or religious weeklies. Will they send it out to their subscribers? They would as soon send a young rattlesnake as a supplement, and the effect on their subscription lists would not greatly differ in either case.

When that grand old heart of oak, John Dougall, started the New York Witness some fourteen years ago, and had made a good impression upon American readers, with characteristic independence he published a strong article against the Masonic lodge, with two almost immediate results. One was the reception of a letter from the Grand Lodge secretary with the blasphemous words, "Whosoever shall fall upon this stone shall be broken, but upon whomsoever it shall fall it will grind him to powder." The second result was that he lost, as I now recollect it, some 500 subscribers in a short time. John Dougall had a heart of oak, and his feet turned never back from what he saw was right. He did not entirely ignore the evil of the lodge after that, but he certainly carried on the battle at long range and at long intervals. I believe he knew it was either this or give up his beloved Witness.

But surely if the press will not speak out the pulpit will. The herald of Zion who stands on the walls, trumpet in hand, will not surely see the enemy come and remain silent. Surely the truth shall have a free passage through them to the people. Ah, but you say, many of the preachers are themselves members of these orders, and not only see no evil in them but give them the full strength of their support. Well, I have not time to speak of them this afternoon. The Lord give them grace not to become blind guides of a blind people! I speak to-day of a large class of ministers who have looked into this subject, and are as much convinced of the evil origin, work and destiny of the lodge as any man in this house, and yet never utter a word on this subject to their people. Some five years ago I addressed a Sunday-school convention in the Congregational church of this city on what should be taught the Bible classes, and mentioned among other things that young men ought to be warned against the lodge whenever the lesson bore upon that subject. After the meeting the pastor of next to the largest church in the Elgin Association came and took me by the hand, and with a look of the most intense earnestness, as if indeed his inner soul were speaking, said: "Mr. Thomson, unless the monopolies of this country and the lodge system are broken down, we are lost." That was a true Christian brother. His address to the convention was full of the fire of the Holy Spirit, and perhaps in his own home and among his own people he was faithful with the truth that glowed before him so clearly. But if he was I never heard of it.

Let a man stand in many a church doing no more than reading the obligations of these lodges and making such comments as would be most obvious. Let him do this with a heart warm with sympathy for a deluded people, and with a voice and manner of kindness. He will soon find out that he is throwing dynamite shells, which, when they burst, will blow him out of that pulpit. I know, indeed, that there are men who take every risk, who, seeing Him who is invisible, and fearing God more than they fear man, speak the whole truth as they see it. But I know also that there are thousands who see the truth and never proclaim it. The pulpit is, in the main, dumb on this question; its guns are either spiked or turned in the wrong direction.

The lecture platform, another method frequently employed in reaching the popular mind, exists mostly for entertainment. This would be a grim kind of entertainment to most audiences that can be gathered in this age of lodges,—a true analysis of the principles of the empire of darkness; and he would have little wit, and less knowledge, who would undertake to divert the people on this subject. Brethren, it is this condition of things that makes a thoughtful man's heart sad. We have all read of days when the Bible was chained to the sacred desk. The truths on this lodge question cannot now, as a general thing, be found there, even chained. The people within the walls are dying for lack of truth. There is truth for them, and willing messengers to carry it, but the only avenues are obstructed by obstacles that, so far, it has been found impossible to overcome.

Now a few hints as to the means to overcome these obstacles. First, use all avenues to the people now in our possession. There are some papers that speak the truth; let these receive a cordial support. There are some men not afraid; let these speak out, and let all friends encourage them. 2. A closer union of all who think alike on this subject. There has been no such union yet as is possible. The men who have their eyes open on this question are no longer a handful. There are hundreds of thousands of them all over this broad land, but thus far there has been no union of action worthy of the cause. If a foreign war vessel was entering New York harbor with hostile intentions, two hundred thousand men might fire their rifles at her without the least effect. But if all these bullets were moulded into one, and that one shot hurled at her, she might be sunk. This is not a time for independent commands and manœuvres of bushwhackers, but of powerful combinations, striking with the force of a thunderbolt. Because of this let us all pray for the blessing of the Lord to rest on the Congress of Churches. I never can forget that one in Chicago. "It was of such substance and weight that the great dailies of the city were forced to notice it respectfully. Another such in Chicago at this time would have a tremendous educational force. And now my final hint to help overcome these obstacles is that the truth be spoken in the Spirit of the Master. A charging buffalo is not a good type of the true reformer. We are to speak the truth in love—"not returning railing for railing, but, contrariwise, blessing." It may be the light we have to give will not be received. It may be that like the Lord to the twelve, we will sometimes be compelled yearningly to say to our nearest friends, Will ye also forsake me? will ye also go away? It may be that we shall be misunderstood and traduced, but let us never forget that we are about our Father's business. Let us never so speak or act as to give the impression that it is our wills, not God's will, that we want to have in this matter.

Tim. 2: 2 and 24: 25 contains a thought we all can ponder profitably: "The servant of the Lord must not strive, but be gentle unto all men, apt to teach, patient. In meekness instructing those that oppose themselves, if God, peradventure, will give them repentance to the acknowledging of the truth." None knew better than the impetuous Paul that this was not advice easy to follow. He knew it was much easier to say, "God shall smite thee, thou whited wall," than this other, "If I have done evil, bare witness to the evil, but if not, why smitest thou me?" This is, indeed, a solemn thought that ought to be pondered by all true reformers—"The wrath of man worketh not the righteousness of God." Nature has given me a somewhat hasty spirit, and I am not always living near enough to the Master to keep it down. But I believe I am willing to confess it always a weakness; never a strength for God or man. I do not say that the meekest man can speak the truth of God without offense to man. This is impossible. Whoever faithfully speaks the truth, handles the terrible double-edged sword of God—which no man can handle without wounding somebody—sometimes to heal and sometimes to kill; and the wounded sinner will either surrender to God, or turn against his servant like a wounded wild beast. But, brethren, I believe it is our privilege to speak the truth in love, to convince all who are not prejudiced that we seek not to wound any man to his hurt, and that it often costs quite as much for us to speak the truth as it does them to hear it.

In this spirit let us go on to win our brothers from the darkness of the lodge system, to the light, and truth, and open-handed dealing of the brotherhood in Christ.

THE COLLEGE CONTEST AT ELGIN.

ADDRESS OF J. G. BROOKS, WHEATON COLLEGE.

As we leave our quiet homes we find ourselves in the midst of a busy, mingling multitude of sixty million people. Some are prosperous, happy and contented; others unfortunate, dissatisfied and miserable. What occasions the difference?

There are in the constitution of man two prominent features. First, he is a religious being and will worship something. Second, he is a social being, desiring company and friendship. How can the religious and social needs of his nature be satisfied?

On the one hand through the Christian church is proffered the Lord Jesus Christ, as a Saviour from the sins of heart and the ills of life. He is the object of worship who satisfies and keeps in perfect peace those whose minds and hearts are stayed on him. In harmony with the Christian church are all legitimate, open and pure social societies and friendships, which, if entered into heartily and in the spirit of him who gave the desire for sociability, will satisfy the least and last demand of the social nature.

On the other hand those who will not worship our Lord, the Christ, must worship his adversary (in some form), whether it be fame, power, self, the mighty dollar or an unknown god. These false gods employ the power of organization, and the great institution embracing their religions and social societies is the Secret Empire. This Empire is composed of many orders, but all are wrong in principle and destructive in their effects. Since every institution must stand or fall on its own merits, and since truth in its nature is frank, unfeigned, and invites inspection, we have a right to believe, yes, more, we are compelled to believe, that an institution which is secret, requiring its members by oaths to hide its work from the public, could not stand if its true character were known. Whatever may be its professed objects, and its incidental advantages, if secrecy is necessary to its existence, it is evil and will so appear in the end.

Again, were it possible for men to originate an institution in which, by works of strict obedience to human laws and precepts, they might become heirs to eternal life, that organization ought by all means to be open to all who wish to unite. It is grossly unjust if it shuts its doors on any who wills to come, and the principle would be the same if the object of the institution were to secure social, financial or political advantage. Yet most, if not all, secret societies have restrictions, either of age, sex, color, nationality, or of some other sort, which hinder the majority of men from their proposed benefits.

Still further, if we should wish to join a lodge we would be compelled to stop on the threshold and take an oath or obligation to conceal and not reveal that of which we know nothing. This we have no right to do as Christians, for the Bible requires us to swear in truth and judgment; nor as patriots, for such an oath might at any time bind us to the concealment of crime, the protection of murderers.

For these reasons, and many others, we claim that all secret societies are wrong in principle and must work harm in practice. The latter conclusion naturally follows from the former. Bad trees cannot bring forth good fruit; but many facts may be mentioned which set this truth in a clearer light.

In the first place most secret societies separate the sexes and interfere with the family relations. Our prosperity and peace as a nation depend largely on the home, and the true family cannot exist when the mutual relations and duties of husband and wife are not recognized and regarded. God's law of marriage, respecting the united head of the family, is, "they shall be no more twain, but one." One has as good a right as the other to know where the partner is, and what he is doing. If lodge work may properly keep the husband from the wife and child, they certainly have a right to know what it is. An interested wife will wish to know. It is not possible for a husband to refuse to satisfy the proper curiosity, or to allay the just suspicions of his wife and children without deception. An oath to conceal is in general an oath to deceive. A true-hearted wife cannot have implicit confidence in her husband, who has sworn to deceive her; if she knows it. Nor is it possible for a husband and father to practice the art of deception in his family without encouraging in them sly dishonesty which destroys the home.

Second, these orders are destructive to the church. I suppose it is not necessary for me to argue that Christ is the Saviour and the only Saviour of the world. If it were I should have a pleasant task, but I assume that that is settled in your minds. If then Christ is the Way, and the only Way to eternal life and peace, any other road proposed not only fails to reach the desired haven, but diverts men from the true way and is in direct antagonism to it. It is clearly taught by their accepted authorities that Masonry, Odd-fellowship, the Knights of Pythias, and similar orders, are religious institutions. They boast of this, and that their religion is superior to that of the churches. Theirs, they say, calls no man to account for his belief of any religion on the globe, so only that he believe in a "Supreme Architect of the Universe." A man may believe and is encouraged to believe that, though he has lived a sinful life, yet, after death he may obtain eternal happiness through the prayers of his surviving brethren.

Not long ago the Knights of Pythias in convention at Little Rock, Ark., appointed a day to be devoted to prayer for the spirits of their departed friends. Is that in accordance with the teachings of Jesus? or does it not give man a hope in some other way than through the Gospel of Christ? In the Gospel we are taught that through faith in the Lord Jesus and by the power of his Spirit we are regenerated and made new creatures, but in the Odd-fellows' lodge men are taught that this same blessed work is accomplished through the ceremonies of initiation. On page 90 of Grosh's Manual we read, "What regeneration by the word of truth is in religion, initiation is in Odd-fellowship." We are told by Albert G. Mackey in his "Encyclopedia of Masonry" (page 16) that, "A Mason by living in strict obedience to the obligations and precepts of the fraternity is free from sin." If by living in strict obedience to the obligations and precepts of the fraternity a man is free from sin, what need has he of Christ?

Not only do they propose to get along without Christ, but they purposely reject him. In their prayers Freemasons have cut out the name of Jesus; and since their prayers cannot reach the Father, not being offered through the Son, they must be received by the god of this world; and as the lodge rejects Christ, he must reject the lodge. As ex-President Blanchard has said, "This leadership of Christ against Satan runs through the whole Bible. Thus in the garden he appears as 'the Serpent-Bruiser to come;' in Joshua as the 'Captain of the Lord's host;' in the prophets as the 'suffering Conqueror;' in the Acts and Epistles as the 'one Mediator and only way to God;' and the drama of time closes with the battle of God Almighty between the hosts of Satan and Christ!"

But again, the lodge is destructive to the state. It is a government within the government, and this imperium in imperio is a despotism. Mackey says in his Lexicon (article, "Master of the Lodge"), "The power of the master in his lodge is absolute." Morris says in his Dictionary, "The surrender of the free will to Masonic authority is absolute and perpetual." In "Pearson's Traditions, page 30, we read, "If we would be Masons we must yield private judgment." This we believe totally unfits a man for citizenship in our government "by the people."

Men should be free and independent at the polls, on the witness stand and in the jury box. Yet secret societies prevent this. Private judgment is surrendered and free will is destroyed not only for a time, but permanently; so that men, instead of acting as free, responsible beings, become parts of machines for over-riding law and protecting criminals. They are sworn under oaths and penalties to defend a brother, right or wrong. Thus we see why our courts of justice have become a mystery and their decisions frightful enigmas.

Of course these are only arguments in their favor to some persons, and doubtless some men join secret societies for these reasons, but to those who wish the reign of law and justice they are the cause of grief and alarm. We might as well turn our court-houses into places of amusement, and our penitentiaries into insane asylums if we are to allow members of secret societies to be judges, sheriffs, bailiffs, detectives and clerks of courts. Such officers protected the murderers of William Morgan in New York, of William Miller in Ireland, of Ellen Slade in Illinois; and to-night no man can tell what plots men sworn to the public service are concocting in order to deliver the murderers of Dr. Cronin from the hand of justice. We can almost hear the dying shrieks of that murdered man, and we can see that secret societies have already made the trial of men connected with that most horrible tragedy a roaring farce.

But although men of all ranks and conditions of life are encircled by the coils of the secret despotism; although the press is in general silent or in its favor; although most of our public officers have sworn allegiance at its shrine; although it has crept into the church and tried to throttle the voice of those heralding salvation to a dying world, we have no right to be discouraged. Oh, no! Let every Christian, and especially those heralds of the Cross, speak plainly and forcibly, never fearing; for the cause is not ours alone, but is in care of Him who never lost a battle. The "Suffering Conqueror," though suffering now, will conquer by and by.

THE MASONIC ECLIPSE OF FAITH.

I desire to give, from the Bible, a condensed statement of the way to eternal life; and to explain, from history, and from standard Masonic writers, Satan's attempt to eclipse that way and bring men to eternal death. Christ says (John 17: 3): "And this is life eternal, that they might know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent."

It is plainly impossible for finite minds to know, directly, the infinite God. This the Bible fully asserts. "Touching the Almighty, we cannot find him out." (Job 37: 23.) "It is high as heaven; what canst thou do? Deeper than hell; what canst thou know?" Our earth is but a speck among an infinity of worlds; and we, but mites of intelligent creatures amid the myriads of their inhabitants. If, then, we must know the true God or fail of "life eternal," and we cannot know him directly; how can we know him?

The answer is, by Christ. He is "the way." He was "in the beginning with God." (John 1: 2.) He was shadowed by the Lamb on Abel's altar, and on all true altars, down through the centuries of the Bible; till John saw him, in the Revelation, as "The Lamb slain from the foundation of the world." (Rev. 13: 8.) Christ said that he was before Abraham; and that he was in glory with the Father "before the world was." (John 17: 5.) "No man hath seen God at any time; the only begotten Son, which is in the bosom of the Father; he hath declared him." (John 14: 18.)

The meaning and import of these and like Scriptures is this: that, while "life eternal" is as impossible to a person who does not know God as natural life and growth are to an infant thrown out never to know his parents, Christ is our only means of knowing God. He is "God manifest," "the express image of his (God's) person."

But how then can the millions in this, and in pagan countries, who never heard of Christ, come to know God, if there is no way to know him but through Christ, of whom they have never heard? The answer is, Christ has "all power in heaven and earth," and has always had; because he "is the same yesterday, to-day, and forever," (Heb. 13: 8,) and he has an endless diversity of ways to manifest himself to men. When the Saviour came here to be crucified for the sins of men, there was but one temple of the true God on earth, and that had become "a den of thieves." (Matt. 21: 14.) But there were, at that time, in Judea, three captains in the Roman army who were heathen; who bowed to Jupiter every time they saluted their flag. Yet Christ seems to have manifested himself to all three of these pagans. Cornelius embraced Christ as soon as Peter told him who the man was that appeared to him "in bright clothing." (Acts 10: 30.) Julius saved the life of Paul. (Acts 27: 43.) And the captain whose servant Christ healed had greater faith than the Saviour had seen in Israel. (Luke 7: 9.) It was in reference to one of these pagans that Peter said: "In every nation, he that feareth God, and worketh righteousness, is accepted with him." (Acts 10.) Thus, in all ages, and in all lands, pagan and Christian, God has manifested himself to men through Christ. And this is, and always has been, "life eternal, that they might know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent." Neither is there salvation in any other, for there is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved." (Acts 4: 12.) "For there is one God, and one Mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus, who gave himself a ransom for all, to be testified in due time." (Tim. 2: 5, 6.) Thus, believers of the Bible, and I speak to no others now, see that all who have had eternal life, from Adam down, have been saved by knowing God by or through Christ, who was preached in Eden as the seed of the woman who should bruise the serpent's head. "Thanks be unto God for this unspeakable gift."

But we are to see what it is which hides Christ, and darkens to mortals their only way to eternal life.

A forcible writer in Joseph Cook's magazine, Our Day, for the month of August, calls the present "an age of lodges." Every one knows that secret societies are now swooping down on every American interest. "Religion, Protestantism, insurance, patriotism, and colleges are being harnessed to the car of secrecy." And they are affecting morals and religion, as the clouds of locusts from the Rocky Mountains, a few years since, affected the fields of Kansas; first darkening the heavens and then desolating the earth. But we have only time now to consider the mother of these secret abominations—the Masonic lodge.

What is called Freemasonry, which is neither masonry nor free, dates back to York, England, in the year of Christ 926. Before that date, stone and brick-layers used to haze their apprentices, journeymen, fellowcrafts, and master-masons, and make them treat when out of their indentures. These hazings, or mock-solemn horse-play in A.D. 926, were woven into a rite of three degrees at York in England, and they are called the "York Rite" to this day. This was all the mystic Masonry there was for almost 800 years till 1717, when four old lodges got together at the Apple-tree tavern in London, voted to "accept" members who were not masons; all who were able and willing to swear their oaths and pay dues; and gave them the "freedom" of the order; which made them "free and accepted" masons and promised and pretended to fit them for heaven, "the lodge above." This they called "Grand Lodge." And it spread like Mohammedanism, Mormonism, and other false religions, which are religions "invented by men, administered by priests, and inhabited by devils." In France, this York-Rite, three-degree Masonry was increased by additions to the "Rite of Perfection" of twenty-five degrees in 1754. This was done by Romish priests, in "the Jesuits' College of Clermont, Paris." This "Rite of Perfection" of twenty-five degrees was brought over by a Jew named Morin to Charleston, South Carolina. Eight degrees more were added to the Romish Rite of Perfection, and the name changed to "The Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite;" and in 1801 John Mitchell, Frederick Dalcho and others formed the first Supreme Masonic Council in the world, of which Albert Pike is now the head.

The Puritans settled Massachusetts and founded the United States by their piety and their principles. They wrote and adopted the first majority constitution ever written by men, while on board the Mayflower. And the principle of Samuel Adams' Boston town meetings now covers forty-two United States, counting the new States now in process of admission. But long before Plymouth Rock, in the reign of Elizabeth, Bradshaw, in his apology (Neal I, 238) gave the bottom rock of religion, on which the United States must stand if it stands at all, in these, or nearly these, words:

"We hold that to invent mystic rites and ceremonies, and mix them with rites ordained by God, is gross superstition." And Bancroft says, "No ceremony was tolerated not warranted by the Word of God." Thus the Puritans abhorred the whole make-up of a Masonic lodge-constitution, titles, toggery, mock-solemn rites and blasphemous oaths. There was no Masonic lodge in the United States till one was planted in Boston in 1733, a whole century after the Pilgrims landed at Plymouth; and for many years after the lodges were held in abhorrence and detestation throughout New England. Dr. Richard Storrs of Braintree, when past 80 years of age, said to me: "My grandfather Williston of East Haven used to say, 'A Freemason is hand-in-hand with the devil.' And the New England ministers of his day agreed with him in that sentiment." The celebrated Dr. Hopkins of Newport, R. I., wrote of a lodge building going up in view from his study window: "Thus Satan's kingdom rises and Christ's declines."

But we need not go back to the Fathers. The revered and beloved Edward Beecher, who survives his brother Henry Ward at Brooklyn, wrote, and the State Congregational Association of Illinois voted, concerning the Masonic lodge: "By it Christ is dethroned and Satan is exalted." And there are, at this hour, between two and three millions of American Christians whose churches expel adhering Masons, because the lodge hides from the eyes of mortals Christ, their only way to eternal life. And the laws of my own native State of Vermont, if executed, would fine every Masonic oath not less than fifty nor over $200. They will yet be executed. When Abel "by faith" offered Christ's symbol of a lamb, suffering for our sins, Cain, without faith, offered "the fruits of the earth." And to this day, Freemasons in laying corner-stones pour out Cain's libations. "corn, oil and wine." And the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts were not afraid to pour out at the foot of the Pilgrim Monument in Plymouth Cain's Christless libation to infernal spirits!

John D. Caldwell of Ohio, a gentleman distinguished by holding both civil and Masonic offices, said to me: "We respect such men as you are, for we know you are honest; and you must be aware we are disintegrating your churches!" The idea was new to me at that time, but let us see if facts do not sustain Mr. Caldwell's statement that the lodges are destroying the churches.

In Boston there are secret lodges of all kinds 571, churches 223. In Chicago, lodges 1,001, churches 310. St. Louis, lodges 729, churches 220. Washington, D. C., lodges 316, churches 181. New Orleans, lodges 270, churches 178. The average throughout the United States is about two and a half secret societies to one church. Mr. Caldwell was correct. The lodges are "disintegrating the churches." They absorb our young men by thousands, and their money by millions. And, as a rule, the men who love the lodge do not love the prayer meeting. The ceremonies of all the false religions on earth are Satan's substitutes for Christ and his atonement, to still, not satisfy, the longings of a sinful man for religion, and to keep Christ out of sight, so he will not know Christ and the Father, which, and which only, is "life eternal." Thus the secret lodge system is a mere expansion and spread of the idolatries of Asia and Africa into Christian countries, with names and forms changed. Devils are growing active and aggressive, for their time grows short. The lodges contain all the idolatry which can be practiced in Christian lands.

The indictment which some three millions of American Christians bring against the lodge is, that it is anti-Christ; that it hides Christ under its ceremonies; that it cuts his name from those portions of the Bible which it quotes in its lectures; that it drops him from its prayers when Jews, deists and pagans are present to object; in short, that it joins the conspiracy of Satan's idolatries all over our globe to cheat men out of "eternal life," by depriving them of the knowledge of "the true God, and Jesus Christ whom he has sent."

This discussion was begun twenty-one years ago. The "rulers of the darkness of this world" are shaken by it, and secret societies now swarm at their call, like apocalyptic locusts from the pit. "And the sun and the air are darkened by their smoke." (Rev. 9: 2.) As the myrmidons of slavery vaunted against the discussion which assailed that national evil, so these now boast themselves against us. But though the Revelation has been like a sealed book to Christ's church until the time is fulfilled, some things may be known from it now. And one is, that in the field of Armageddon, and the battle day of God, when the final question is to be decided, whether Christ or Satan shall have the worship of this globe, when the beasts and their Masonic image, and all "the hosts of earth and hell confederate," shall be ranged against the "Captain of our salvation" and his followers, one brief sentence in that stupendous drama will decide the fate of the day. "The Lamb shall overcome them; for he is Lord of lords and King of kings; and they that are with him are called and chosen and faithful." Rev. 17.

The last report of the Soochow Mission Hospital thus describes the sufferings of those who come to be cured of the opium habit: "Second day after admission: Eyes and nose streaming, constant yawning and sneezing, complete loss of appetite, vomiting, a dreadful feeling the patients call 'nan koo' aching in the bones, and in some cases cramps in the limbs, nervous tremors and short periods of unconsciousness. At this stage the patient will do anything to escape and get opium. You may reason with him, but you might as well talk to the winds. If he succeeds in escaping, and has no money, he will pawn anything he has, even the very clothes of his back, though it may be mid-winter, to get opium. Cold and snow, sleet and rain are as nothing to him compared to his longing and misery when deprived of opium."

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

Educational matters—The flag on our public schools—A defendant of Freemasonry holds forth in Music Hall—Some surprising statements—A new order—Trouble in the Iron Hall—How the lodge is educating American people.

Among the social changes which have taken place in New England within a period of little over half a century, is the almost entire monopolizing of manual labor among women by the uneducated foreign classes. When Lucy Larcom edited the Lovell Offering, she was a mill girl; and the contributors to that bright little sheet were also mill girls, who could discuss questions of art and literature and life with as keen an interest as a Vassar or Wellesley graduate of today. But the tide is turning. The effect of the higher education of woman has been already manifest. By broadening her intelligence and sympathy it is fast throwing down those absurd barriers of custom which have hitherto decreed that because a woman has superior knowledge or pre-eminent gifts, she must live in as much a state of practical uselessness as if she had been born without hands.

Educated women have already lifted nursing to the dignity of a profession, and the writer dreams of a time when they will do the same for domestic service. I heard the other day of a cook at one of our summer hotels who is an accomplished teacher of drawing and painting, but took this opportunity during the vacation when she had no classes, to earn money to help her father pay off a debt. My informant also told me that her cooking was as excellent as her pictures. A necktie-maker in Boston is a contributor of poetry to one of our leading magazines, and the list might be indefinitely extended.

Margaret Fuller once wrote in a paper entitled "Be True To-day": "I wish woman to live, first for God's sake. Then she will not make an imperfect man her god and thus sink to idolatry. . . . By being more a soul she will not be less woman, for nature is perfected through spirit." Nor will the cultured Christian woman, by an intelligent understanding of life's practical needs, lose aught of her inspiration, or be any less humanity's seer and prophet.

Now that I am on the subject of education, it may be interesting to note that the Harvard Annex has had a steady growth. Its pupils number at present 435, and three of these are from the Hawaiian islands. It is now proposed to raise a fund for annual scholarships for poor students by a contribution of $2 yearly from all past and present members.

Maine is taking up the movement of raising the national flag over her public school-houses with much zeal. Let the good work go on and not stop till it reaches the Pacific. Every glimmer of those wind-swayed folds shall be a silent protest against Jesuitism, Anarchism, or any other ism which seeks to rob the American child of his inheritance of liberty and intelligence.

Colonel E. A. Sherman of California has been lecturing in Music Hall on Freemasonry and Catholicism. It is a sign that the lodge feels its seat of power a little shaky when it sends such an advocate to the front. And I venture to assert that if a few telling tracts could be printed and sowed broadcast through Boston and its suburbs, showing up the real relation of Masonry to Romanism, the Colonel would not find it so easy to get an intelligent American audience to swallow whole his unsupported statements.

Of course he alluded to Washington's Masonic career—I believe it is morally impossible for a Freemason to hold forth in defence of the lodge ten minutes without doing so—but even Weems himself, with his story of the little hatchet, never dived into more apocryphal depths than the lecturer when he called Washington "the father of Freemasonry." He further informed his audience, without, however, giving author, chapter or page for this astonishing statement, that "Masonry had its birth among the Huguenots of France;" and though he conceded that "the Grand Orient did strike God out of the ritual," yet "when a Frenchman entered a Masonic lodge, he was half way on the road to Protestantism." A sorry tribute to the faith of Luther and Calvin!

Perhaps he made his audience believe all he said, but did it never cross the minds of a thinking few to wonder how it happened that the Masonic lodge, if Rome is really its bitterest foe, could dedicate the Pilgrim Monument in her company?

The following list of high-toned and choice entertainments has been recommended for the coming season by a Council of the Home Circle in one of the towns in this State: Dec. 20, "Old Maids' Auction;" Dec. 4, visitation of grand officers, "Lemon Squeeze;" Dec. 18, election of officers; Jan. 1, public installation of officers; Jan. 15, card party; Jan. 29, dance in Council Hall; Feb. 5, old-fashioned supper; Feb. 19, musical; March 5, soap-bubble tournament; April 2, children's party; April 16, card party.

If American society has degenerated as some old-fashioned croakers assert; if it is growing frivolous and disposed to shirk the labor of forming its own opinions, the blame may be laid in large part to the door of the secret lodge, which is certainly doing all it can by means of such entertainments as the above, to make thinking unfashionable.

Yet this is only secondary. Atrophy of mind is bad enough, but atrophy of soul is worse. So long as the church harbors in her bosom such organizations, let not her pastors wonder if they find many of their members preferring the dance and the card party to the prayer meeting. What marvel that sinners cannot be induced to think of their eternal future when the lodge all over the land is teaching them nightly the old philosophy of Epicurus, "Let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die!"

REFORM NEWS.

NOTES BY THE WAY.

FROM THE GENERAL AGENT.

EAST SAGINAW, Mich.

Leaving Chicago after the close of the National W. C. T. U., my first stop was at Kalamazoo. Leaving the train the first familiar face I saw was that of Bro. Grinnell. Bro. Hudson was from home on business, and so I missed the renewal of old-time Christian conference for which I had hoped. Having completed my business at St. Louis, Mich., I took the train for this city and was fortunate in finding a gentleman from Grand Rapids who was fully in sympathy with the work of the N. C. A. His mission to this city was a sad one. He came to seek, and if possible, to rescue a lost boy; not his own, but a blind boy for whom he had been appointed guardian and who had fallen a victim to strong drink. Since February last he had been with the Y. M. C. A. of Saginaw, and had been doing well, until a few days ago he fell into the clutches of fiends in human form, and under the influence of liquor became so disorderly that, blind as he was, the authorities locked him up. First they licensed the fiends to put the bottle to the blind boy's lips, and then cast their wounded and bruised victim into prison,—a shame and disgrace to the civilization of Michigan and the nation!

Mr. H. A. Veddees was well acquainted with our friend Dr. Veenboer of Grand Rapids, and I was glad to learn that the Dr. had been remarkably successful in business, and that he still holds on the even tenor of his way as a radical anti-lodge Prohibitionist. Change of cars necessitates a five hours' delay at this point before taking the 5:20 P. M. train for Buffalo and Boston.

THE ISSUE IN OHIO.

MASSILON, O., Nov. 15, 1889.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—The luxury of a few days at home, where I went after our convention at Senecaville, was highly appreciated. For the first time in some years I was able to cast my ballot for civil officers. I was glad to know that the prohibition vote held its own in Oberlin and made a substantial gain throughout the State.

On the first Sabbath of the month the First Church at Oberlin received fifty-two members, several of whom were on profession of faith.

Leaving home on the 6th, I visited Berea, West View, Cleveland, Macedonia and Northfield, in all of which places I found friends and sympathizers, but for various reasons found no opportunity to lecture. At Metz, Summit county, I spent the Sabbath with Rev. Roseburg, pastor of the U. P. church, who preaches to two country congregations. By invitation I spoke at night on the relation of the lodge system to Christianity, and had the sympathy of nearly, if not quite all, of the congregation.

Next day, the 11th, I went to Cuyahoga Falls and Akron, in both of which places I had lived more than forty years ago, and both of which are so much changed that there was little I could recollect. The Congregational pastor at Cuyahoga Falls seemed an amiable man, but feared to express an opinion on the lodge question. The Liberal U. B. pastor at Akron manifested much bitterness towards the "rebels," and all who sympathize with them. He seemed to exceed any other whom I had met. I could but be astonished that brethren who manifestly honestly differ, and who are equally worthy respect and fellowship, should mutually charge each other with the vilest of motives. I could but wonder if such Christians reflected that Jesus said, "by this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one for another." How evil and bitter a thing is sectarian strife! Well might Paul write to Titus, "He that is a heretic (sect-maker) after the first and second admonition reject." Titus 3: 10.

From Akron I went to Canton, where there is a Wesleyan church, and where a holiness convention, conducted by Rev. Mr. Doty of the Harvester, had just closed the meetings, which had resulted in considerable religious interest, were continued in the evenings. The radical United Brethren hold their meetings in the Wesleyan house. I was kindly entertained by Rev. J. Noel, U. B. presiding elder of the district; also by the Wesleyan brethren. I found one of the two Lutheran pastors in cordial sympathy with us, and one a member of a secret order, though he confessed that he never attended the lodge and wished there were no secret societies. I preached on the night of the 13th in the Wesleyan church, and on the 14th went to Massillon.

Here I found one Evangelical German church, whose pastor is quite in sympathy with us and one Lutheran church, whose former and present pastors have stood valiantly for the truth in this reform. Last night I spoke in the school-room of the Lutheran church to a fair and attentive audience. The large, strong churches, with elegant houses of worship and well sustained and parochial schools, show that the Lutherans have proved it to be entirely practicable to build up a religious denomination with a rule excluding all members of secret orders, and put to shame the silly pretense of the liberal United Brethren and others, that churches cannot be built up in cities unless concessions are made to the secret orders. Nor is there anything more in the pretense that some concessions to Freemasonry are necessary to secure a united front in opposing Romanism. It seems that the late Catholic Congress in Baltimore has removed the interdict from all secret orders except the Masons, and has promised that within a year it shall be lawful for Catholics to be Freemasons. All right! Let all the powers of darkness unite.

H. H. HINMAN.

IOWA STATE CONVENTION.

BLANCHARD, Iowa, Nov. 6, 1889.

The Covenanter church was well filled here this evening when the annual convention of the Iowa Christian Association was called to order by the president, Dr. Wm. Johnston, of College Springs. After reading Isa. 8, Rev. J. S. T. Milligan, of Kansas, led the convention in prayer.

After a few words of welcome by Rev. M. A. Gault, the chairman responded with an inspiring address.

It was natural, he said, for birds of feather to flock together. Men who were in the vanguard of moral reform movements, were apt to feel lonely and discouraged because so few would identify with the work. They needed the stimulus of conventions and associations. When Elijah called a reform convention on Carmel, there were seven thousand who had not bowed the knee to Baal. How much better if they had all come out and showed their hands. There are many in the churches to-day who are in sympathy with this reform, but are afraid to take a stand with us. He read the following extract from resolution adopted by the last General Assembly of his church (the United Presbyterian), showing the need of special reform movements to meet particular evils and dangers in the government.

"The necessity for reformatory as distinct from general church work, lies in the fact that neither the ministry nor the membership of the church, as a body, are abreast with providential movements, or alive to the leadings of the Holy Spirit, for the removal of long-standing evils and abuses, and the purification and elevation of society; and in the additional fact that the Holy Spirit is constantly raising up and animating individuals in the different branches of the church to witness against these evils, and by arduous and self-sacrificing labors to seek their removal. The drawing together of these earnest spirits in conferences, conventions and societies for united efforts to destroy the kingdom of Satan, and to bring society, in its political as well as its moral and religious phases, into subjection to the Lord Jesus Christ, constitutes that particular branch of Christian work which may be denominated reform. It is but following the example of Nehemiah in relation to the evils and abuses in his day, when he sets a great assembly against them. To mass the active Christian sentiment of all branches of the church against popular idols and evils is the specific work of reformers."

The report then gives a list of reforms that are being pushed, adverts to the fact that they are inseparately interwoven with each other, and all center around and find their perfect accomplishment in the recognition of that principle which makes the law of God, administered by his incarnate Son, of supreme authority, and closes with this resolution:

"Resolved, That it be, and hereby is earnestly urged upon the ministers and members of our church, to co-operate, as God in his providence and by his Spirit may call, with our fellow Christians of other branches of the church, in those measures of reform which seek to destroy the kingdom of Satan and establish the kingdom of Christ."

Bro. Joseph Boyd, pastor of the United Presbyterian church at Albia, then gave the address of the evening. He said many were disposed to denominate us as a convention of cranks and enthusiasts, but the time was when a national political convention nominated John Quincy Adams for President, on a platform based upon sentiment similar to that which actuates this convention. It was shortly after that uprising of sentiment against secret societies, caused by the abduction and murder of Wm. Morgan in 1826.* There were crises in moral reforms which are only awakened by startling providences. Not so much the onward march of truth, but special judgments, he believed, would be the means of arousing this nation to the danger of secret organizations. One such providence was the murder of Dr. Cronin in Chicago, by emissaries of the Clan-na-Gael, a secret brotherhood organized by Michael Sheady, a distinguished Freemason. Prominent pastors in Chicago had, since that event, preached to their applauding congregations on the treasonable nature of the Clan-na-Gael; and that it must be suppressed as dangerous to American institutions; while we were denounced as fanatics for opposing Freemasonry, whose throat-cutting, body-severing, and bowel-burning penalties and obligations, were far more horrifying and barbarous than the penalties and oaths of the Clan-na-Gael. We prohibited Chinese immigration, and denounced their heathen morality, but the morality of Masonry is shockingly profane alongside of the Chinese. It was no credit to Masonry to go back to the symbolism and philosophy of heathen Egypt for their origin. He showed how Masonry grew and flourished only as the church and Christianity declined. It was organized by English deists, and was hostile to Christianity. When God put the spirit of this reform into our age, it was dangerous for us to be neutral.

The chairman then appointed the following committees: On resolutions, David McKee, Joseph Boyd, H. W. Johnston, S. A. Gilley, J. S. T. Milligan; on finance, B. M. Sharp, James Adair, Alex. McKeown; on enrollment, M. A. Gault and B. M. Sharp; on nominations, C. F. Hawley, T. H. Smith and W. H. Hilton.

Thursday morning opened with a good attendance, quite a number being present from Clarinda, College Springs, Westboro, Coin, Riverton, and other towns. After devotional exercises, Rev. C. F. Hawley, the State agent, gave an interesting report of his labors during the year. It had been spent in preaching and lecturing against the secret society system, and in canvassing from house to house, talking personally with the people of the evils of secret societies, distributing anti-lodge literature, soliciting subscribers for the Cynosure, and for the work of the Association, and in working up the convention. He had collected during the year $457.25, but there was a deficit in his salary of $256.96. The convention recommended that the Treasurer of the Iowa Association pay to Bro. Hawley whatever shall be collected on subscription, before the opening of this current year; also that pastors of churches throughout the State be earnestly requested to call the attention of their congregations to the work of the Association and urge collections for its support. Bro. Hawley was also authorized to solicit subscriptions for carrying on the work in Iowa.

The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: For President, Rev. Wm. Johnston, of College Springs; Corresponding Secretary, Rev. C. D. Trumbull, of Morning Sun; Recording Secretary, Wm. S. Enlow, Birmingham; Treasurer, Dr. Wm. Crawford, Washington; Vice-Presidents, C. E. Harroun, Rose Hill; Joseph Boyd, Albia; J. Parker, Cedar Rapids; T. A. H. Wylie, Washington; H. Acheson, Albia; Geo. Fry, Walker; D. McKee, Clarinda; Isaac Gibson, Salem; John Dorcas, Shiloh; W. H. Hilton, College Springs.

The afternoon session was mostly occupied in discussing a series of strong resolutions. The discussion was directed mainly against the minor secret orders. Rev. W. A. Campbell, of College Springs, said the Grange in former years had given him the most trouble. It was by such orders that the devil deceived the people by claiming they had so little secretism and accomplished so much good. He was glad that in almost every church witnesses were rising up against these evils. He believed the ministry did not preach against them as they should.

Rev. D. McKee, of Clarinda, thought we must look below the outward pretext to determine the true character of these orders. For example, the French commune, that made Paris red with human blood, had for its motto, Liberty, Equality, Fraternity.

H. W. Johnston, of Washington City, gave encouraging indications that the better class was discarding secret tactics. As men became interested in the prohibition issue, they substituted open for secret methods. He believed the greatest objection to these orders was that with non-professors of religion they were substituted for the church. He gave several personal interviews with public men at Washington, showing the dangerous tendency of the lodges in this direction.

F. J. Wilson, of Wayne, and J. T. Wornow, of Coin, strongly condemned the minor orders as the little foxes that destroy the vines. It was in this form Satan masqueraded as an angel of light. A little boy who had been injured by a gander, went and killed all the goslings, saying they would be ganders by and by; so men in the minor orders, such as the Good Templars and Grand Army, would be Masons after awhile.

Bro. Hawley drew a fearful picture of how the moral fiber of the public conscience was being destroyed by the profane oaths and penalties of the lodge. It destroyed men's true sense of moral obligation. Bro. S. A. Gilley and Bro. D. McKee gave carefully written addresses, which many desired to have published in the Cynosure.

The evening session was occupied with addresses by H. W. Johnston, Rev. D. McKee and Rev. J. S. T. Milligan. The latter spoke on the relation of secret societies to civil government. He determined the character of secret societies from their religion. In the firmament of religion

CORRESPONDENCE.

SALVATION FOR TENNESSEE BAPTISTS.

MEMPHIS, Tenn.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I am just recovering from severe sickness; for two weeks past I have been confined to my bed, unable to help myself in any way whatever. I am still unable to preach, or do more than drag around my room. God who is rich in mercy has ever remembered me, and as David did, so have I, "called on the name of the Lord."

When I last wrote you I informed you of my contemplated trip to Clarksville to attend the Baptist State Convention. We had there a glorious time. I met quite a large number of ministers, who do not come to this west end of the State. I was quite a curiosity. All were anxious to see me, on account of my reputation as an anti-secret society man. I was quartered at the house of a Master Mason, and soon found myself confronted by the Grand Master of the State, and also by the State Grand Master of Odd-fellows. I made several pointed talks during the week of the convention and raised no little commotion among the craft, and when it was announced that I was to preach, the Masons appointed a committee to attend the church, make a note of my talk, and report to the lodge, which would meet that afternoon to judge of my heresy. I was accidentally made acquainted with this fact after the sermon.

I must tell you of my sermon. Behind me sat the Grand Master of the Odd-fellows, a Baptist minister; the Deputy Grand Master of the Masons, a Baptist minister; and two other Masons were in the pulpit, or upon the platform. In the audience was the Grand Master of the State and a congregation of not less than 500, nearly all of whom were connected with secret societies. My text was from John 1: 16. You will notice that growth in grace comes out very beautifully in the discussion of this verse, and I had an opportunity to speak of the many things that hindered one from enjoying the fullness spoken of. Among these was the secret lodge; and here permit me to tell you that I entered into a post mortem examination of the whole secret fabrication, and as I made point after point against the lodge, Rev. M. Vann, the colleague of Rev. Woodsmall, deceased, cried, "Feed it to them, Bro. Countee!" "Stay right here and feed them!" And my Odd-fellow and Mason friends squirmed and winced, but I felt that I had a two-edged sword and I cut without mercy. The Lord was with me, owning and giving power to the truth uttered, and many said out loud, "Hear the man!" "Where did he come from?" "Just lis'en!"

God helped me here to show that growth in grace came only by getting out the weeds of secrecy, the most heinous crime against God that I know of. Blasphemy of blasphemy is the entire system of oath-bound lodgery.

When I had done, some took me by the hand and said, "I would to God you could be with us a month, and help us to rid our church of its lodge vermin. They are like rodents; they have gnawed through and undermined all we have that's good and true, and have exalted themselves above everything that belongs to God."

At night I went to preach to the A. M. E. church, and you may judge of the righteous indignation that laid hold of me, when I beheld all of the altars of Baal stowed away in one corner of the meeting-house. It was the furniture of the secret society known only among the colored folks as the "Sons and Daughters of the Tabernacle." There was the ark, and upon it the figures 777 and 333, and then I saw the altars, three in number, for the sun-worship of the order. The pastor of the church was away attending conference, and the congregation was not large; nevertheless I gave them a few practical hints as to the way they were conducting or converting a house, said to be built for God, into a den for thieves. It did not set very well, but what I had said I had said. My own brethren tell me I am too rash in my way of speaking; but I do not believe in sugar-coating the truth, and I generally tell the people when I go to administer the Lord's pills they must be taken box, pills, and all. My tracts and papers did not arrive until I had returned home, but there is a young man to whom I mailed them and he has done and is doing good work there. I am only sorry he cannot remain in the field, as he goes away to school now in a few days.

I arrived home after this visit to Clarksville, only to be put to bed, where I have been ever since Oct. 15. I was unable to take any rest this summer, and I am now, at the very opening of our fall work, worn out both mentally and physically. Our school is open, and we have over 190 pupils. Rev. H. R. Traver, of Saratoga, N. Y., is principal, but the raising money to carry on the work depends entirely on me. Last year I traveled up to March, and as our school stands alone as a colored school in opposition to secret societies, tobacco and whisky, both as to faculty and pupils, we have a hard time. We are always thrown off because we do not belong to the Home Mission Society. We have raised this summer, by a series of meetings among ourselves, nearly $300. And now I am down, and I cannot tell what we will do for means after this month. We will need about $200 per month for three months, and we pray God to provide.

Our West Tennessee Baptist Association has not a single secretist in it, and we are going on with the good work.

Our preachers' class will be quite large this winter. Last year we had forty preachers, actual pastors, who came in from their fields every Monday morning and returned to them every Friday evening, and the entire country is being leavened with our opposition to secrecy. These preachers are taught for 50 cents per month. They have homiletics, hymnology, preparation and delivery of sermons, practically illustrated. We have this year a sick-nurse training class. The sick room and care of sick patients are theoretically and practically set forth. Miss Barclay of the Chicago training school gives us two hours every day to this work, and quite a number of our best physicians have promised to lecture for the class during the term.

The teachers leave the city every Friday evening and go to the country, do mission work, and return every Monday morning to their classes in the school-room; and the country people hear them gladly. Two of our women teachers, Mrs. Broughton and Miss King, have traveled all during vacation, holding women's meetings and institutes for Bible readings, magnifying the cause of the Master and putting their seal to the iniquity of secret societies. Mrs. Broughton two years ago was Most Ancient Grand Matron of the Lady Masons for Tennessee. She is a fluent speaker, a graduate of the classical department of Fisk University, and a good worker. Miss King is a born missionary, a lover of children, and all children take to her—parents as well. She is an untiring, zealous worker, a good speaker, and a fearless advocate for truth and righteousness. The summer work of these two women culminated in a Women's Educational Convention held in Stanton, Tenn., Oct. 4, 5 and 6. It was as grand a gathering as I ever witnessed, and everybody was filled with enthusiasm. Rev. H. C. Owen, the pastor at Stanton, is a seceded Odd-fellow, and we, to use one of our Southern melody phrases, "gave old Satan another round." I will try and send another letter for next week. I have written this on my lap between pains and suffering. Pray for us. R. N. COUNTEE.

CHURCHES AND COLLEGES OF SOUTHERN INDIANA.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—This Christian nation of ours is sick of the fever of secularism. Our business is to feel its pulse, note the symptoms, and administer the truth in homoeopathic doses. That is the only remedy. Last Tuesday evening I lectured in Butler University, Irvington, Ind. On Wednesday evening I lectured in Hartsville University. Prof. E. G. Paine, a graduate of Rochester University and for thirteen years president of Wasioja Seminary, Minn., is president. His wife is a graduate of Wheaton College. They have both been identified with the N. C. A. for some years. The Hartsville University was chartered in 1852. The present building was completed in 1861. During the sixties they had from 150 to 200 students. There was an audience of 300. The president made some happy remarks in introducing me, dwelling on the fact that our Christian civilization is the outgrowth of the divine law. Rev. Wolford, the U. B. pastor, led in prayer. This institution is opposed to secret societies. They have lately received a handsome endowment.

On Friday evening I lectured in Lane Theological Seminary. Prof. Smith is chairman of the faculty. Four of the professors were present. This is my fourth visit to Lane. Prof. Roberts took me by the hand after the lecture and said, "Your hand is wet with perspiration, the result of honest labor. That was good."

On Saturday morning I went to Madison, Ind. This is a city of 10,000, on the Ohio, and decorated with two breweries and eighty saloons. There are few there with the courage to "plead and fight" against this evil. On Sabbath morning I preached in the Trinity M. E. church, Rev. J. W. Turner, pastor. This is a congregation of 600. Rev. James E. Gilbert, D. D., the agent of the Indiana Sabbath-school Association, was present. He is opposed to moral legislation. He thinks Sabbath laws and prohibition are wrong in principle. He would not condemn the brewer or saloon-keeper because that would alienate them. Shame on such a travesty of the Gospel! Well meaning men, who are doing good in their line of things, make great blunders right there. The audience was with me. A deacon said, "That was the right thing in the right place."

At 3 p. m. I lectured in Hanover College. President Fisher conducted the devotions. They have 150 students. The citizens turned out well and the house was full. J. M. FOSTER.

PITH AND POINT.

REVIVE THE AMERICAN PARTY.

I fully endorse your views as it regards resurrecting the American party. From my humble standpoint, it looks to me that it is the only party that can redeem this nation from secret oath-bound organizations. We have three political parties, and they are all counting their friendship. At the present I do not intend to vote for either of them. I think now is the time to reinstate the American party. My belief is, the sooner we call a national convention and attend to these things the better. —JOHN LEEPER, Senecaville, O.

WHAT SHALL BE DONE AT THE END?

What will become of the hundreds of thousands of dollars laid up as endowments of educational institutions when Christ comes, which should have sent the Gospel to the millions now in darkness? What excuse will the churches have for the means laid out to build fifteen church edifices in a small town of less than ten thousand inhabitants? What excuse will educated men have for not preaching the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth when they stand before God?—HARRIS JOHNSON, Nebraska City, Neb.

LODGE POWER IN THE SOUTH.

I want the North, and every lover of his country, to understand that, to my mind, if we don't fill up this Southern country with true, loyal citizens, to counteract the spirit of hate by a true Christian spirit of love, this country will see more blood flow than has ever flowed before in all the wars that she has ever passed through. I tell you, friends, it looks to me the Southland is an equipped, armed force to-day. I see that every lodge is a drilled company of men who are learned in all the tactics of war. A colored band played "Dixie" at the head of a Confederate reunion marching through the streets with all their old battle-flags to the breeze, in defiance of our "stars and stripes." This band belonged to the Immaculates, a secret order after the stripe of their mother, Masonry. Can any one suppose this nation will prosper while lodgery controls our pulpits and people? Especially is this Southland the seat of the beast. It has not improved in morals, Christianity or good will. Does any one suppose that our God will look down upon this with approval?—A. F. SMITH, Nashville.

GOD WILL JUDGE.

Christ says, "Every plant which my father hath not planted shall be rooted up." Now God never planted Freemasonry in the church. It is the work of the devil, and God has commanded his servants to resist the work of the devil. Now if the ministers of Christ do not resist sin in the church, but advocate the necessity of the wicked and the righteous dwelling and worshipping together, they disobey God's command.—O. C. M. BATES, Constantine, Mich.

LITERATURE.

The English Illustrated Magazine is vastly improved with the opening of its new volume. Larger type and pages are among the attractions. But pages without division into columns make too long a line for easy reading. The November number opens with a fine religious poem on the legend of the "Seven Sleepers of Ephesus." Mrs. Olyphant writes on Queen Margaret, of Scotland. The great dock strike of London, which lately paralyzed the business of the metropolis, is told from the standpoint of the men by Benjamin Tillet. Cracow, the old Russian city, is described by Adam Gielgred. Prof. T. E. Thorpe contributes a fine descriptive article on St. Michaels, the largest of the Azores islands.

Good Health contains in the November number Dr. Felix L. Oswald's International Health Studies. Some observations on this instructive topic respecting Great Britain are treated in this article. The "Hygiene of Digestion," "Exercise and Health," "Imbeciles in Stays," "Treatment of Diphtheria," are among the interesting papers.

The December installment of the Century Lincoln Life will deal with the fall of Richmond and Lincoln's extraordinary visit to the captured city. In this connection the authors will give an interesting unpublished correspondence between Lincoln and Grant, on the subject of Robert Lincoln's taking a place on the staff of the General.

Beginning with January 1 next, Dr. Talmage will become one of the editors of the Ladies' Home Journal, of Philadelphia. The famous preacher will have a regular department each month, written by himself, with the title, "Under My Study Lamp."

OBITUARY.

CHESTER WILLIAMS was born in the town of Argyle, Washington county, N. Y., August 25, 1803, and died at his home in Waterport, Orleans county, N. Y., Sept. 30, 1889.

In 1826 he married, and with his young wife settled near Waterport, then a wild, uncultivated section. Having a good constitution and a heart warmed by love to God and home he tilled the soil, which yielded up its due reward. Nine children came along the way to bring to the parents their joys and sorrows. Five have preceded the father to the better land. He united with a Free Methodist class organized in his neighborhood in 1860, and remained a member of that church till death.

He was eminently a reformer. The facts connected with the abduction and murder of Morgan caused him to investigate and abhor the secret lodge system. He subscribed for the Cynosure in its infancy, and has helped its projects as his means would allow all along. When working in the part of the State where he resided, when ten or more miles from where he lived, I was frequently asked if I had seen Chester Williams, and assured that he would be interested in my work.

During the last brief sickness he assured friends of his preparation for the better life. He looked forward to this bright and glorious reward. Thus briefly his life may be recorded: Lived—died. Is this all? Nay, verily! The truths he helped promulgate never die. New voices will be heard, and the world will be better for his having lived.

MASONIC LAW.

A man without a thumb upon his right hand is not eligible to be made a Mason.—Grand Master, Rhode Island.

The loss of over one-half of the second joint of the index finger of the right hand, amounts to physical disqualification.—Grand Master, Mississippi.

A lodge cannot rely upon evidence given in court against a member. Such testimony is not positive evidence of his guilt.—Grand Master, Kentucky.

It is not proper to confer the degrees on one having a "club-foot." A candidate who has lost the first joint of his right thumb is not physically qualified to receive the degrees.—Grand Master, Kansas.

A Mason, having joined a church, the laws of which require a renunciation of Masonry, notwithstanding he holds a demit, is not entitled to its benefits; neither is the widow of such an one entitled after his death.—Grand Master, Alabama.

A candidate must believe in God, and in the immortality of his own soul. But we have nothing to do with speculative opinions of any one as to what becomes of the souls of the wicked. Let the wicked pass; we will not receive them.—Grand Master, Arkansas.

The candidate should not be rejected because he is a Roman Catholic. He should be informed that the policy of his church is hostile to Masonry, and that he would not be permitted to divulge Masonic secrets in confessional, and if he then promised allegiance to our institution, there are no grounds for his rejection.—Grand Master, Connecticut.

A Mason is not liable to charges and a trial for anything done before he became a Mason, except for fraudulent statements in his petition, or some other improper act connected with his admission. It is only for breaches of Masonic law that a Mason can be tried, and a person cannot break a law before he becomes amenable thereto.—Grand Master, Vermont.

A petitioner who has lost one eye, but is otherwise perfect in his physical qualifications, is not thereby disqualified for the degrees of Masonry. An applicant who has a stiff knee which he cannot place in the form of a square, is, by such physical defect, disqualified for the degrees of Masonry. If a petition is received from a person who is physically disqualified, and referred to a committee, and the fact of disqualification is ascertained after the reference, the petition should be ordered by the Master to be dismissed without a ballot, and the deposit fee returned to the petitioner. The same course should be pursued in any case when it is ascertained that the petitioner is ineligible. The petition, in such case, should not go to ballot.—Grand Master, Vermont.

"Not only do we know no North, no South, no East and no West, but we know no government save our own. To every government save that of Masonry, and to each and all alike we are foreigners; we are a nation of men only, bound to each other by Masonic ties as citizens of the world, and that world the world of Masonry. Brethren to each other all the world over, foreigners to all the world beside."—Grand Lodge Report of Missouri, 1867.

Freemasons in their secret societies obligate their disciples, similar to the ancient brethren, to keep their doctrines, their engagements and their transactions from those who are not of the order. These obligations are not composed of such tremendous oaths as we are charged with by bigots, who, ignorant as they naturally must be of the whole of our transactions unless they have been received into our society themselves, utter their unholy anathemas and excommunications against us, thereby making fools approve their rash acts. The world wonders and the Masons smile at their daring insolence to condemn their fellow-creatures for imaginary sins against God and religion, which must ultimately be laid to the charge of those triflers with their neighbors' consciences.—Masonic Dictionary.

A DANGEROUS TENDENCY.

The most important feature about that very common complaint, catarrh in the head, is its tendency to develop into some other more serious and dangerous disease. The foul matter dropping from the head into the bronchial tubes or lungs is very liable to lead to bronchitis, or consumption, that destroyer that causes more deaths in this country than any other disease. As catarrh originates in impurities in the blood, local applications can do but little good. The common sense method of treatment is to purify the blood, and for this purpose there is no preparation superior to Hood's Sarsaparilla. The powerful action of this medicine upon the blood expels every impurity, and by so doing cures catarrh, and gives health to the entire organism.

J. BLANCHARD, EDITOR.

HENRY L. KELLOGG, ASSOCIATE EDITOR.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 21, 1889.

We call the attention of New England people to the sermon on "The Masonic Eclipse of Faith" in this issue. It was published in the Palmer Journal, and also in the Ware Standard. The discourse has been warmly commended as a clear, Scriptural presentation of the truth. About a month after it was printed, another paper, the Ware River News, in western Massachusetts, came out with a reply to it, in which, after the customary laudation of the lodge, the writer thus apostrophises the Christian religion:

"Go back over the lapse of time and consider the course of Christianity. Has it not left the avenging mark of Cain in every land? Wars and calamities of every nature have followed its course. Read Jewish history and the advent of the Christian faith, and then turn with sickening horror from the story presented."

One wonders why such a man does not flee from Massachusetts to some land where Christ has never been heard of. What population on earth equals in industry, intelligence, purity and piety the very neighbors of this man who so traduces their religion?

The one hundredth anniversary of the consecration of the first Romish bishop in the United States was celebrated in Baltimore last week. That is: the country had been settled from 1607 to 1789 before there was a Romish bishop here, a period of 182 years, almost two centuries. The hardships of the first settlement had been endured, the French and Indian wars fought, the long agony of the revolution and war of Independence endured, and our free Constitution settled, common schools established, and a great nation founded. Then came the era of Romish bishops, to teach us "the true religion" in their secret confessionals, furnish saloon-keepers to sell us liquor, turn out the Bible, and destroy our free schools! Yet Romish priests and prints now claim that the papists were here before us; and with the most monstrous assurance, boast that they were the real founders of the Republic! And it is true that their priests roamed the wilderness from Quebec to New Orleans, converting the savages by popish trinkets and masses said in Latin. They taught the Indians from Nova Scotia to Fort Pitt, that the people who cut down forests and built cabins along the Atlantic coast were heretics, and it was no crime, but a merit, to kill and scalp them—men, women and children. And then (1789) when the toil, suffering and war were over, and a great country established, bishops then came to teach us "the true religion" in their secret confessionals, turn out our Bibles, destroy our free schools; and boast that popery founded the United States.

THE TELESCOPE AND THE CLAN-NA-GAEL.

"As the trial proceeds, it becomes more clearly evident that the murder of Dr. Cronin was determined upon and planned in the secret sessions of the Clan-na-Gael, which appears to be none other than a wicked secret combination, on a par with the Mollie Maguires, the Ku-Klux, and the Knights of the Golden Circle. All good citizens unite in placing the stamp of infamy upon such unlawful, murderous organizations."—Telescope.

The United Brethren church, till the late rupture, excluded Freemasons from fellowship, ever since its origin, more than one hundred years ago. In 1849 "the Sons of Temperance" arose, and the Conference of that year enacted that those who had joined that order should leave it, or, after patient and loving labor, should "be expelled from the church." (See His. U. B. Church, vol. 2, p. 413.) Nineteen years after that action, W. J. Shuey published the history which gives this reason for excluding the order of the Sons of Temperance: "Unfortunately for the great cause in which it was enlisted, the hateful serpent of secrecy was coiled up in its very heart." And this same history, published by the present agent (Shuey) in 1868, gives the certificate of 103 renouncing Masons, met at Leroy, N. Y., who certify that Masonry "exercises jurisdiction over the persons and lives of citizens of this Republic;" and with fifteen other reasons charge that the lodge "blasphemes the name of the Great Jehovah."

Yet this same agent has welcomed Masons to the church of which he was an officer; and now affects a pious horror, in the paper which he prints, at the Clan-na-Gael for doing the very things which he knows Freemasons have done, do, and swear to do!

FUSION OF THE SECRET ORDERS.

The Cynosure has constantly taught that all secret societies will fuse together in the agitations of the last days which precede the coming of Christ, as separate drops of water on an oiled cloth flow together and become one when the cloth is shaken. But we have been met with the exclamation, "Why, popery is in deadly hostility to Freemasonry!" Some years ago we were often advised to count the Romish vote against the lodge. Will those who have thought papists and Masons were irreconcilable antagonists, read in this number the Baltimore article from the Chicago Times of November 14th, entitled "ONLY MASONS BARRED."

The proofs that popery and lodgery are one and the same thing are these:

1. Both teach salvation by ceremonies invented by men and administered by priests; thus making the people dependent on those priests for salvation.

2. Human ceremonies, called by Dean Trench "self-projected worships," are gentile or pagan religions,—worship paid to devils.

3. Two years since the mayor of New Iberia, La., who was its most prominent physician, and the leading lawyer, who was State Superintendent of Education in Louisiana, were both Romanists and Freemasons, and the priest did not object.

4. In 1754 Jesuit priests invented the "Rite of Perfection" in the Jesuits' College of Clermont, Paris. That Rite of Perfection was brought to this country by an apostate Jew, Morin, and now forms the chief part of the ruling rite of the Masonic world, called falsely "The Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite," formed by the Jesuits, aided by Chevalier Ramsay. This Ramsay was an apostate Presbyterian, educated at the Edinburgh University. At twenty years of age he went with the exiled Stuarts to France, and became tutor to the sons of James II. He was converted to popery by Fenelon, and became wealthy. Both the French king and the pope pensioned the Stuarts, hoping by them to restore popery to the British throne, and destroy Protestantism and free government in Europe. They attempted this by adding higher degrees to the simple English Blue Lodge Masonry. But their plan failed. The Revolution of 1688, which brought William and Mary to the English throne, and saved Protestantism and free government, could not be overcome. The names of those higher French degrees prove their papist origin. "Chapter" means a dean and his clergy; and "Knights Templar" were popish military monks. Thus our American Masonry is the child of popery. By it the simple English Protestant mechanics were made to "obey" the higher French degrees. Charles II. had already patronized the companies of operative Masons in England, and by them he regained his throne and gave to stone-masonry the name of the "Royal Art." (See "Rebeld, General History of Masonry," p. 54.) And yet such is the fearful ignorance in the United States, produced by a silenced press and pulpit, that the American people and clergy are ignorant of the fact that our popery and Masonry are one in their origin and nature, and both are anti-Christ.

But though Charles II. held the British throne twenty-five years, all the time a secret papist, backed by the King of France and the Pope, their accursed plan was defeated, and for three centuries no popish priest was allowed to profane British soil by consecrating a graveyard by priestly mummery.

And their plans will fail here, though priestly cunning and political corruption are joining hands. Though they may, and probably will, bring us to blood, as the lodges has once done already; though they may darken our moral heavens, take God's Word out of our schools, as they are doing and have extensively done, and put the words of priests in its place as our standard of law and morals; yet whoever reads the magnificently inspired drama of the Apocalypse, must see that CHRIST is still the suffering conqueror; that he is stronger than "the strong man armed;" that angels excel the devils in strength; and that mystical Babylon, which is false religion and false politics condensed, must finally fall like that great millstone which John saw a mighty angel cast into the sea (Rev. 18), saying, "Thus with violence shall that great city, Babylon, be thrown down, and shall be found no more at all."

TO THE PASTORS AND CHRISTIAN PEOPLE OF NEW ENGLAND.

Three large and influential organizations have recently held anniversaries, viz., the American Board, the American Missionary Association, and the triennial Congregational Council; the first in New York city, the second in Chicago, and the last in Worcester, Mass.

The programs of these great bodies took no notice of the net-work of secret societies, which more than double the number of churches in the United States; and yet these secret societies all profess to teach religion, or morals, or both. If the Mission Boards of the Baptists, Presbyterians, Methodists, Episcopalians, and the rest, had been in session at the same time, their silence on the secret orders would have been the same. Yet these Mission Boards receive the money given by the churches to convert the world to Christ, and Bishop Warburton, quoted by the learned Macknight, shows that every heathen temple and every idol shrine was, and now is, a secret lodge, and modern missionaries affirm the same. This universal silence concerning secret lodge religions is the shadow under which Jesuitism, the head secret lodge of the whole world as to power to destroy Christianity and free government, hides its nature from discussion. It is baptized paganism hid under the sworn secrecy of the Confessional. If our Mission Boards fail to tear off the covering of these lodges, they will fail as McClellan failed at James River; when the swamps of the Chickahominy were covered with dead men and horses, and the air loaded with their stench, and their General was thinking of money, recruits, and the next general election.

The Pilgrim Monument at Plymouth was dedicated by men—a Masonic lodge included—who deny all the distinguishing doctrines which the Pilgrims taught. Congregationalists (and Baptists are Congregationalists) devised and chiefly paid for that monument. But the great Congregational Council at Worcester, an organization created and paid to vindicate Congregational principles, ignored that dedication, which President Seelye of Amherst and President Hartranft of Hartford pronounced "an outrage!" and Dr. Goodwin of Chicago pronounced "a dishonor put upon the faith of the Pilgrims." A paper declaring this, put before the Council, was strangled by their business committee. Such a meeting was the play of Hamlet with the part of Hamlet left out.

A little before the Council met in Worcester, the Old South Congregational church building in that city was dedicated. The pastor, Lovering, in what was meant for a dedicatory prayer, reminded the Lord that they had poured Cain's Masonic libation, "corn, oil and wine," on the corner-stone. And a white dove, stuffed and wired, was placed overhead, supposed to represent the descent of the Holy Ghost. The sermon was preached by a 32-deg. Mason, whom the largest Worcester daily, the Telegram, described as "a jolly looking person with his hands in his pockets." This much-sworn Mason, whom good men in Massachusetts think "has no business in the pulpit if he has in the church even," bustled about on the platform of the Council as though he had any business to be there; his object being apparently to show himself to the pastors whom he has drawn into the lodge; and show himself to Masons in the State as, in spite of his bold, blatant lodgeism, still in fellowship with orthodox Christians. Such men "grieve the Holy Spirit of God," and have run down one of the noblest branches of the church of God; till Secretary Hazen, in his report to the Council, tells us that "we have buried 298 Congregational churches since the last Council in 1886;" wanting only two churches of one hundred lost in a year!

We are sending to the pastors and people in New England, to show them the extreme importance of their attending the Congress of Churches in Tremont Temple, Dec. 11th and 12th. The infant Pentecost church received thousands of members in a day. They were following the example of Christ who "in secret said nothing;"

and the historian Tacitus informs us that Christianity spread so rapidly through the Roman Empire that "in thirty short years it had not only penetrated the principal cities, but has reached the remote country villas." While the American Board has been eighty years in gaining less than (40,000) forty thousand converts to Christ!

All that is wanted is information, discussion. "Magna est veritas et prevalebit." Truth is mighty and will certainly prevail. But if Albert Barnes is right in his assertion that Pentecost revivals are to come to us again; if the church is to be again powerful, she must first be pure. And as "prayer was made without ceasing" when Peter was brought out of prison by the angel, so must we be "instant in prayer." If we pray as they did, we shall prosper as they did. For God's arm is not short, nor is his ear heavy.

A DIVIDED HOUSE.

Late in the evening of the last day of the W. C. T. U. National Convention a scene transpired of thrilling interest and of tremendous possibilities to the organization and the cause of prohibition of the liquor traffic. Mrs. Foster of Iowa seceded from the convention and took the Iowa delegation with her.

The political differences that have for years harrassed the National W. C. T. U. have been a matter of public interest. Judith Ellen Foster of Clinton, Iowa, a lawyer and strong sympathizer with the Republican party, from whom her husband holds an office, has antagonized from the first the action of the Union in giving sympathy and support to the Prohibition party. The declaration of the Union at its Nashville meeting to give its influence to aid the political party which declared for prohibition, woman suffrage, the suppression of Mormonism, and recognized the sovereignty of God in the nation, put it above the charge of partisanship in supporting the Prohibition party in national campaigns; while in Dakota, where the Republican party adopted these principles, the Union asked for nothing better. The debate was joined Tuesday forenoon on the presentation of an amendment to the constitution by Mrs. Aldrich, a follower of Mrs. Foster, providing for the insertion of the words "non-partisan and non-sectarian." The debate was long, keen, able, and on the whole in much better temper than would be expected in a meeting of men. Mrs. Foster's effort failed ignominiously, the response in favor of the amendment being scarcely audible to the outside of the great audience, which had for an hour and a half been listening most intently, and furnishing most of the applause.

Late the same evening, after vainly fighting against the resolutions, Mrs. Foster's party presented a lengthy protest and withdrew from the convention. This paper betrayed elaborate preparation, in anticipation of secession; and both sides were equally ready, for on a call for Iowa women to take the place of the vanishing delegates, thirty-five stepped forward. This is not the end. Next morning a call was ready for a national meeting at Cleveland, Ohio, December 23, the Crusade anniversary, to organize a W. C. T. U. which shall be non-partisan according to the Republican idea. Miss Willard meets this with the plan for a meeting on the same day at Hillsboro, O., where the memorable crusade began.

No doubt the discussion of Vice President Morton's Washington saloon precipitated this division. Mrs. Foster sharply resented the charge, but could not satisfactorily disprove it, and now that the daily press are printing the fac-simile of the license, the apologists for Mr. Morton will either find some apology, or abandon him. The new woman's organization being so closely identified with the Republican party makes its success or failure, and the existence of the old W. C. T. U. beside it, questions of profound interest. It is a great quarrel—and all whether they shall say non, or not say it.

It must be regretted that in this clashing of opinions great principles were unheeded. The compliments of the W. C. T. U. women were sent to the Knights of Labor meeting in Nashville, and Miss Willard seemed carefully to join the name of Terence V. Powderly with it. Several times she had used that name during the convention, as if it bore a charm. Could she understand all that this secret order stands for of menace to Christianity and our laws the enchantment of Powderly's name would be broken; but that time is not yet. The Good Templars were the only secret order fraternally represented, and they only by the widow of John B. Finch, who is Miss Willard's Evanston neighbor. The order received a complimentary resolution. Many local unions, which have bitterly felt the opposition of the Good Templar order, could have given wisdom to their national representatives.

There are a score of interesting items, and as many speeches which it would be a pleasure to describe. The Daily Union Signal gives many of them and for the rest they must remain in memory like the cadences of a pleasant song.

—No one will read unmoved Bro. Countee's letter on another page. Let us sustain him in his heroic endeavor for the elevation of his race.

—Secretary J. P. Stoddard turned again toward the East on Tuesday last. He will probably visit one or two points on his way, but will give his especial attention to the Boston meeting until it is over.

—Many of the readers of the Cynosure who are interested in the work of the Evangelical Alliance will wish to attend the meeting of that body in Boston on the 4th of December, one week before the Christian Congress on the lodge. Occurring so nearly together, these meetings can both be attended.

—We noticed lately the call at this office of a so-called "bishop" of a small sect of colored churches, whose abilities as a liar and a Freemason were amazing. This same man was the other day arrested and held to the criminal court for assault. Some of his African brethren are fearing his threats to take their lives.

—Rev. S. F. Porter, our N. C. A. college agent, started for Tennessee Thursday morning. He will in course visit most of the institutions of the Southern States, both for white and colored students, as far east as Georgia. This will probably occupy the winter and early spring. Our readers will eagerly read the reports of his work in this interesting field.

—The Sons of Temperance in Canada report an increase of 2,675 and a loss of 2,088. The initiation of new members furnished 2,478 of the increase, but with less than 600 gain in membership it will be seen that the procession marching away from those lodge doors has no gaps. This order was badly disturbed by the proposals of political prohibitionists, and after a long wrangle resolved on a compromise.

—Rev. A. J. Chittenden preached a farewell discourse Sabbath morning to the College Church, Wheaton, and he leaves immediately for his new field in Tennessee, followed by the best wishes and prayers of all with whom he has labored for the past seven years. Last week Wednesday evening a parting social meeting was gathered at the home of Prof. H. A. Fischer, and farewell words were spoken by Pres. J. Blanchard in behalf of the church, to which Mr. Chittenden happily responded.

—Speaking of the late General Hartranft, of Pennsylvania, a correspondent says: "The general was a Mason. At Antietam, just after he had dropped down on the bridge and taken it, and while the fighting was almost hand-to-hand, a Confederate officer gave him the Masonic sign. He recognized it instantly, and sent the officer unharmed to the rear as a prisoner." This is a desperate effort to say something for the lodge. If the rebel threw up his hands, whether in the "grand hailing sign of distress," or in token of surrender, he had evidently given up the fight, and there was nothing else to do but to send him to the rear with the rest of the prisoners.

—Dr. James H. Brookes of St. Louis, having favorably noticed the works of Dr. Waldenstrom, retracts that commendation in the last number of the Truth, the monthly edited by him, in these words: "This was a serious mistake, which is now corrected as far as possible. Owing to the pressure of many duties the books were not carefully read, but a hasty glance here and there discovered their reverent tone, their abundant use of Scripture, and their devout love for Jesus. Their doctrinal teaching was missed until a couple of friends at a distance called attention to it, and for this act of kindness sincere thanks are publicly expressed. The books are unsound upon the atonement, the author making it nothing more than an exhibition of God's love, and an appeal to man to respond to such love. Any view of the atonement which leaves out the claims of God's justice, the demands of God's law, and the vindication of God's holiness, is essentially defective and wrong."

ONLY MASONS BARRED.

THE CATHOLIC CONGRESS RESULTS IN AN ABANDONMENT OF HOSTILITY TOWARD SECRET SOCIETIES.

[From the Chicago Times, Nov. 14.]

A prominent delegate from the northwest to the Catholic Congress, in discussing the work of the congress, said that, while Catholics as well as Protestants had been wondering what possible result could come from a meeting of the laity, its positive effect would soon be apparent throughout the land. Said he: "One of the declared startling announcements following this congress in Baltimore is this: That the Catholic church in America will from this day, through the ministrations of the priests in the confessional—for that is where such action is communicated to the laity—deal with extraordinary and hitherto unknown liberality with members of secret organizations. It will, in fact, remove all restrictions that prevent Catholics from joining, or remaining members of, or becoming members of any known secret society, with one exception. That exception is the Masonic fraternity. So far as that order is concerned, it is believed by the bishops and archbishops to be in America a harmless organization. A number of the prelates are disposed to speak kindly of its action in cutting off the Cerneau section, and in stopping all communication with the Grand Council of the Orient. The bishops and archbishops are said not to have made any real investigation.

"The one particular point which brings into application the quintessence of Catholic philosophy, and forms the point of exception on the part of the bishops and archbishops is that where a man joins an order without knowing its purposes, and takes an oath of allegiance to it, the Catholic church holds that this is contradictory to reason and judgment, inasmuch as the man who takes such an oath without knowing what his obligations or duties are to be rash. A rash oath is forbidden by the Catholic church. The church holds that every man who is of its own organization, and who binds himself thereto by a solemn vow, should be aware in advance of the nature, duties and purposes of the work he is called upon to perform by any other oath. This, it is claimed, is not made possible by the Masonic order, for it is believed that a man who joins their body is first initiated and afterward assumes the binding obligations which are embodied in his apprenticeship.

"The Catholic church holds in short that any man who swears allegiance to something he knows not of, to an unknown power, in fact, does wrong. We of the northwest have largely joined, or designed to join, the Ancient Order of Foresters. In fact, if you will inquire among the delegates you will find men who avow interest and even prominence already in that order. But it is not alone our case that is considered. Nearly every one remembers the interest that Cardinal Gibbons has manifested in the Knights of Labor, Mgr. McColgan's kindness toward the cause of organized labor, and the published advice of the former that workingmen had a right to band together for protection. While the archbishops have held no formal meeting on the subject, it is well understood that they leave Baltimore prepared to act as I have indicated, and you may be certain that no member of the Odd-fellows, the order of Foresters, Knights of Labor, or other secret orders except the one I have named, will be advised by his confessor to abjure his fellowship with them. Possibly even the Clan-na-Gael may not be accepted."

CHRISTIAN CONGRESS IN BOSTON.

A Congress of Churches will be held in Tremont Temple, Boston, December 11 and 12, 1889, to consider the relation of the Secret Lodge system to Civil Liberty and the Christian Religion.

Rev. A. J. Gordon, D.D., Pastor Clarendon Street Baptist Church, Boston, will preside at the opening meeting.

The following speakers have agreed to be present and address the congress during its sessions: Dr. A. A. Miner, Boston; Dr. O. P. Gifford, Boston; Dr. I. J. Lansing, Worcester; Dr. D. McAllister, Pittsburgh; and President Charles A. Blanchard of Wheaton.

All churches or other Christian assemblies accepting Christ as the perfect example and atoning sacrifice for sin, are respectfully requested to be represented by delegates at this Congress, and all persons desiring to hear a candid discussion of the subject are cordially invited to attend.

Signed by Rev. A. J. Gordon, D.D., Rev. A. A. Miner, D.D., Prof. L. T. Townsend, D.D., Rev. N. Roynton, H. L. Hastings, Rev. James M. Gray, D.D., Rev. J. W. Hamilton, D.D., Rev. Wm. Elliott Griffiths, D.D., Rev. O. P. Gifford, all of Boston, and fifteen other pastors.

THE HOME.

"WE ARE ALL HERE."

A THANKSGIVING HYMN FOR THE HOME.

[The following hymn, familiar many years ago, we find reproduced in the New York Evangelist.]

We are all here!

Father, mother,
Sister, brother,

All who hold each other dear;
Each chair is filled—we're all at home;
To-night let no cold stranger come.

It is not often thus around
Our old familiar hearth we're found:
Bless then the meeting and the spot.
For once be every care forgot.
Let gentle Peace assert her power,
And kind affection rule the hour;
We're all—all here.

We're not all here!

Some are away—the dead ones dear,
Who thronged with us this ancient hearth,
And gave the hour to guileless mirth.
Fate, with a stern, relentless hand,
Looked in and thinned our little band;
Some like a night flash passed away,
And some sank lingering day by day.
The quiet graveyard—some lie there—
And cruel Ocean has his share—
We're not all here.

We are all here—

Even they, the dead—though dead, so dear:
Fond memory, to her duty true,
Brings back their faded forms to view.
How life-like, through the mist of years,
Each well-remembered face appears!
We see them as in times long past:
From each to each kind looks are cast;
We hear their words, their smiles behold,
They're round us as they were of old—
We are all here

We are all here!

Father, mother,
Sister, brother.

You that I love with love so dear,
This may not long of us be said;
Soon must we join the gathered dead,
And by the hearth we now sit round
Some other circle will be found.
O then that wisdom we may know
Which yields a life of peace below;
So in the world to follow this
May each repeat in words of bliss,
"We're all—all here!"

PURITAN HOMES.

Part of my school days were spent (in the Cayuga Lake region of New York) among a colony from Berkshire county, Mass. How proud they were of their nativity in the most picturesque county of New England! How eagerly they welcomed every letter from Lee or Lenox or Barrington! How devoutly they cherished every custom of their Puritan ancestors! They "opened their windows" towards old Berkshire, as exiled Daniel did his towards the city on Mount Zion.

I boarded in the family of a primitive Yankee deacon—such as Mrs. Stowe has limned in her best portraiture. The honest old saint was no more troubled with any doubts about the Pentateuch than about the sun's rising "on time;" he no more dreamed of any New Departure in theology than he did of going out to plow on a Sabbath morning. His Gospel milk never curdled. True to the ancient traditions, he "kept Saturday night;" for he held that the Lord's Sabbath began with the sunset on the previous evening. Promptly at the minute all secular work was laid aside; even his venerable wife put away her knitting-needles; the "chores" were all finished up, and the family gathered around the hickory fire for a genuine domestic worship. Good books were read—stiff, marrowy books they were, too, and no modern syllabubs—and, before the serene and solemn evening closed, the patriarch opened Scott's family Bible, and, as Burns says, he "waled a portion with judicious care." After reading the text, he read the practical observation also; then, in his prayer, he came into close grips, and wrestled with God. The Sabbath in that household—yes, and in almost every household of the village—was kept, and so stoutly hemmed was it that it never raveled out into unseemly frivolities.

The village meeting-house (it was not the fashion to call it "church"), to which everybody went, was a plain structure, and the square, high-backed pews were guiltless of paint or damask. Half way up the wall was perched the pulpit, like a martin box. The village pastor—whose name, Seth Smith, was as severely simple as his costume—ascended to his perch by a winding stair. On bitter winter days he kept on his camlet cloak and knit woolen mittens until he warmed up to his work. As for the mothers in Israel, they kept their feet from freezing by foot-stoves well stocked with hickory coals. The discourse was no light diet of condiments and confectionery; it was strong, solid, substantial meat, as homely and brawn-making as the pork and beans which furnished the family dinner. Bible doctrine was the backbone of the sermon, and it was served warm. That godly minister of the Word preached the Word—preached it without defalcation or discount, and preached as if the surges of eternity were rolling against the church door. He believed in heaven, and he believed in a hell; they both seemed close at hand—as close by as the tombs of the villagers who slumbered around the sanctuary. Nor did any impenitent soul go out from before that pulpit with any such delusion as that he would have another chance for repentance after his own bones were laid in that church-yard. Often there was sweetness in the sermons, also, as well as strength—honey out of Samson's lion—the sweetness of the Christian's promises, and sweet glimpses of the saint's everlasting rest. After the services ended, we all went homeward, well stocked with Bible and Catechism; and the family dinner was eaten as the sun was wheeling into the West. When his last rays departed, the holy hours were ended, and the Sunday evening was spent in sacred reading, or in a visit to a neighbor's where the day's sermon was discussed, and the latest news from old Berkshire. Oh, the blessed old Puritan Sabbaths! Will they ever come back again? Strict they were, no doubt, and because our forefathers worshiped a strict God; severe they were in some of their restraints on carnal appetites, and lacking in some pleasant things they ought to have had; but they were a glorious discipline, they girded our loins with mighty truths, they put iron into our blood, they made the men and women that have made the backbone of American character.

Of course, in such a Yankee community, the annual Thanksgiving Day was the chief festival of the year, the king-day of the calendar. Afar its coming shone. We boys counted the time until its approach. The night before was a sad time in all the barn-yards and turkey-cotes and chicken-roosts; for the slaughter was terrible, and the cries of the feathered tribe was like the "mourning of Hadad-rimmon." For that Thanksgiving service the village pastor made diligent preparation, and the choir rehearsed their finest "fugues" and most resonant anthems. For that Thanksgiving dinner the housewife tasked her culinary skill; it was the feast of fat things, the masterpiece of domestic gastronomy, at which the most rigid Puritanism ate, drank, and was merry. Children and grandchildren, kith and kindred, gathered to these festivities in the old homestead; for, as in the times of David at Bethlehem, "there was a yearly sacrifice there for all the family."

These two days, the weekly Sabbath and the annual Thanksgiving Day, have been the type-days of the best era of New England. They were typical of the noblest traits of New England character. Reverence for Jehovah, faith in his Word to the uttermost syllable, loyalty to law, cheerfulness under adversities, and in a hard fight for daily bread often out of a stubborn soil, a sturdy life sweetened by fireside joys—all these were the fruitage of the Puritan home. It was the real training-school for both church and commonwealth. Both patriotism and piety rooted under those hearth-stones.

If any one wants to see a fair picture of the Puritan homes threescore and fourscore years ago, let him read Dr. Horace Bushnell's Age of Homespun (delivered at the Litchfield County Centennial), or Lyman Beecher's autobiography, or, best of all, that charming tract in which Father Goodell described the rustic cabin in which he was born and bred. The house had no paint on its clap-boards, no carpets on its floor, and no lock on a single door. But a godly mother sang hymns at her spinning-wheel, and every acre of the farm was prayed over as well as plowed over; the Thanksgiving meal had the sweet smell of the field which God had blessed. "Those royal men and women of homespun!" exclaims Bushnell. "How great a thing to them was religion! the district school was there, and the great Bellamy and Edwards were there in the mountain peaks of divine government, and between them are close living and hard work, but they are kings alike in all!"—T. L. Cuyler.

CHARLEY'S BAD COMPANY.

Charley Meadows had never been the same good, honest-hearted little fellow, after he became intimate with Tom Ross. Tom was not the son of Christian parents, and he had been allowed to do just what he pleased, and go just where he liked. He took a fancy to Charley Meadows soon after he moved into the same town, and they became intimate friends before Charley's father knew what a bad boy Tom was.

Tom was in the habit of reading cheap novels; these he lent freely to Charley. They were about murders and murderers; about burglars and pickpockets and thieves. The two boys began to talk constantly about fighting Indians. The very mildest amusement they proposed to do when they should be grown up was to shoot the buffaloes on the plains, like "Buffalo Bill." In fact, Buffalo Bill was their ideal of what a man ought to be. They talked of the Indians as if instead of being human beings they were wild animals to be shot down like coyotes or wolves. To hear them speak of shedding blood you would have thought it most innocent amusement.

The Bible bids us think of things which are pure and lovely and of good report. When we reverse the advise of Scripture we generally find ourselves most grievously at fault.

From talking about such things so constantly the boys began to make plans for carrying out such cheerful amusements as their favorite heroes enjoyed. The pictures of Buffalo Bill were very exciting, especially those in which he points his pistol at the breast of an Indian.

One day Tom Ross suggested in a spirit of emulation with such heroic deeds, that he and Charley Meadows should gather up a little money and run away. They might go West and live on the plains. He said that he thought it would not cost much. They could just catch a wild horse or two and tame them. Then all they had to do was to shoot buffaloes and cut off the nice juicy steaks for their supper, and make a fire and cook them, and then wrap their blankets about them and lie down to sleep! It was all just as easy! All the men they read about did it every day. When the Indians came they had only to hide behind a thicket and pop away at them, fire! bang!

How silly these boys were, and how cruel in their silliness.

I have forgotten just how they got the money, but between them they raised thirty dollars. With this sum they bought railway tickets and started on their journey. For the first day and night they went on their way without mishap. On the second day, the cars being crowded, a man occupied the same seat with them. They reckoned the amount they had spent for their tickets, their meals, and sundry investments in prize candy packages, etc. Deducting these purchases, they ascertained how much money they had left.

The stranger was very friendly indeed. He gave them a great deal of information as to what they would need. Indeed, so heartily did he enter into their plans that they opened their hearts to him and talked as freely as if he was an older brother; more so, in fact, for Charley Meadows' older brother would have broken up all their plans very quickly. Their new acquaintance said he liked smart, ambitious lads such as they were; that he felt just as they did at their age. He had himself enjoyed life on the prairies. He boasted of knowing Buffalo Bill, and was an intimate friend of Wild Jake, the Wolf Killer. Did they know about Jake? No; they had never heard of him. Then he told most exciting adventures of this great hunter. He had no end of stories also about a certain Pete whose aim in life was to kill grizzly bears. He had "been the death of hundreds of grizzlies. Always carried his belt full of weapons. Always killed whatever he aimed at."

The two boys looked at their new friend with the greatest admiration. He really knew the men who had done such wonderful exploits. It was almost like seeing such things themselves!

He told them what weapons would be needed, and was almost sorry that he could not go with them himself. He knew of a man who had talked of going, a real trapper and hunter, and if they liked he would introduce him to them. This "real trapper and hunter" could tell them even more than he could.

It was therefore agreed that, at the end of their third day's journey, at which time their new friend would be obliged to leave them, they should accompany him to his hotel. He assured them that the cars waited two hours there, and that this would give them time enough to see the "real trapper and hunter," and be back again before the train started. He took them to his hotel according to arrangement. Charley did not think it looked very nice there, but Tom Ross reassured him by asking if he expected to find "real hunters and trappers" at first-class hotels.

Their new friend bade them wait there until his return, and he would go out and look for the man whose experience was to be so helpful to them.

It was towards evening. Both boys were very tired. They threw themselves down upon two dirty hair-cloth sofas that were in the room and very soon were fast asleep. You know that tired boys can sleep very soundly. Two nights in the cars had not permitted very deep slumber, and now, with nothing to arouse them, they slept without awaking until the early dawn began to pierce through the darkness of the room.

Charley, who was first awake, aroused Tom Ross. It was a long time before they could understand what had happened. To find themselves at the dawn of day alone in a dingy room was certainly a surprise. It took some time for them to collect their thoughts. Gradually the truth dawned upon them. The man who had professed so much friendship for them was a sharper and a swindler. He had robbed them of all their money and their railroad tickets. They were without a penny to buy food, or to pay their way home. They looked at each other in despair. All their grand schemes dwindled to nothing. They were hungry and tired, friendless and alone in a strange place. They tried to arouse some one in the "hotel," but found either empty rooms or drunken, uncouth men lying in stupid, liquor-steeped slumber on the floors. No one noticed them; no one wanted to hear the story of their wrongs. Only oaths and profanity were given in reply to their questions. Feeling miserably discouraged, they went out into the street. They knew not where to look for help. They wandered about the strange city bewildered, not knowing what to do.

Tom Ross, who had felt himself equal to killing Indians and shooting buffaloes and grizzly bears, acted like a silly, frightened child. He could only bewail the loss of their money, lament their distance from home, and then cry like a baby. Charley Meadows, although the younger, had more sense. He suggested that they should apply to a policeman. They did so; he seemed to doubt their story, but offered to take them to the "station house." Tom Ross refused to go. They wandered about the streets until they were tired. Then Tom went to the basement door of a house and asked for some bread. A tidy woman gave them each a slice. Charley felt mortified. To think that he should have to beg for bread!

They felt that there was but one thing to do, and that was to apply at the police-station again. This was on Thanksgiving Day, and what a miserable day it was for them! They had no friends about them; they were cold; they were hungry. They felt so guilty in thinking over what they had done.

Charley remembered that last Thanksgiving Day he had driven over to Newburg to spend the day with his grandma, and what a nice time he had had! What would grandma say when she heard what he had done? He had an uncle in Peekskill whom he had expected to visit this Thanksgiving time. Alas! alas! what a change for poor Charley, and he had brought it all on himself by his own wickedness!

It was the most miserable Thanksgiving Day he had ever spent. The only thing left for the boys was to go once more to the police-station. This they did finally, and their parents were telegraphed of their safety. Meantime they were kept at the "station" until further arrangements could be made by their parents for their return.

Two miserable days passed in this way. They felt as if they were prisoners in jail. They were mortified beyond expression to hear themselves always spoken of as "the runaways." Finally the money was forwarded, their return tickets were purchased, and they were placed on a returning train.

They were crestfallen indeed. There were no more stories about reaching the plains and shooting Indians. They were two very dirty, very tired and very humble boys indeed when they reached home.

Charley's father not only forbid any further intercourse with Tom Ross, but put a stop to his reading such silly stories by throwing the trashy pamphlets into the fire.

And now let me say to our boys that the reading of these foolish dime novels not only give false and foolish ideas of life, but actually unfits you for real duties and real pleasures. They mislead you with views of life which do not exist, and instead of being the wiser for what you read you are the reverse.

Spend your time rather in reading books which will improve your time and give you nobler views of life. Let the models whom you imitate be such as are worthy of imitation. If you knew the heroes described in those trashy books you would find them far beneath the companionship of good men. Remember what Solomon says: "He that walketh with wise men shall be wise; but a companion of fools shall be destroyed."

The ways of such men may be described very enticingly in such trashy books; but you will find what their end is in Prov. 16: 25.

Charley often looked back with sorrow to the Thanksgiving Day which he had spent in so much sorrow, because he had tried to imitate the heroes of whom he had read in dime novels. Let us hope that this Thanksgiving Day finds him the wiser for the good books he has read since then. —Selected.

TEMPERANCE.

RUIN OF CHINA BY INDIAN OPIUM.

Through the kindness of the Christian Vernacular Education Society (Madras), and Bro. W. J. Gladwin of Bombay, we have obtained the accompanying reproduction of a picture from Peking, the capital of the Chinese Empire. It was drawn by a Chinese resident, and represents the family of a mandarin who has become a slave to the opium pipe. Notice the ragged fringes of his wife's dress, and the patches on her clothes. See the starving little girl at her knee, gnawing her wrist with hunger, and with her clothes almost dropping of. Notice again the little boy on the other side, dying of cold, and attempting to warm his frozen fingers at the empty charcoal stove. See the mandarin, lean and gaunt, and outcast, but still slave-bound to the sin which has ruined him, spending the last cash he has in the baneful drug. This is a representation of one case out of vast multitudes in China. A great ghastly host of men, women and children are going down prematurely every year to a Christless eternity through the past and present action of the British Government in this iniquity. Shall it continue? God forbid!

In Honolulu the license fee is $1,000 per year, but liquor must not be sold to a foreigner on Sunday, or to a native at any time, under a penalty of five hundred dollars. This is rigidly exacted; and if the spirit-dealer is unable to pay the fine, he is put on the coral reefs, to work at twenty-five cents a day, until he has worked off the amount.
